When the doctor comes, she has something more definite to tell him about her charge than that he has been "fairly comfortable." She hands him her chart, on which she has neatly recorded the patient's temperature, taken hourly or oftener, and a lot more of tabulated information—accurate, concise. From her written report and from such other facts as she is able to give him the physician knows as exactly what has been the condition of the patient during his absence as if he had been by the bedside the entire time. But it is in preparing the sick person's meals that her cultivated genius shines forth at its best. The old-fashioned nurse could offer the invalid but two dishes. One was gruel, and the other was beef tea. The gruel was generally an unpalatable, pasty beverage that even a hungry well man would grumble at, and the beef tea was usually little better. The new nurse, though, will take a chafing dish and prepare dozens of appetizing little dainties that are digestible and palatable. With milk and eggs she can make such combinations as would delight the soul of a gourmet. She knows how to sterilize milk so that every last germ in it is killed as dead as a door nail, or she can pasteurize it if the physician prefers a limited execution of microbes at 175 degrees F.

SHE IS COMELY AND CLEANLY.

And then, when convalescence comes, how she can sharpen up the dull appetite with milk punches and eggnogs such as none but the most expert bartender could concoct! She can even give points to the doctor himself about the use of pepsin and lime water in milk, ventilation, the use of antiseptics and a dozen other little points in improved hygiene which he has not had the time to acquire. She can be trusted, too, to administer the medicines with regularity and accuracy. There is no likelihood that she will give the wrong liquid or an overdose, for she understands the nature of the medicines herself and their effects. Should an emergency arise, she can be relied upon to know what to do, and with her in the house the doctor can reduce the number of his visits sometimes one-half.

At first glance it seems that the trained nurse is an expensive luxury. Her salary is from $25 to $40 a week, the latter price being charged in cases of malignant and contagious diseases. But every physician will tell you that in most cases the trained nurse is an economical necessity. As for the life of the trained nurse herself it is not an especially attractive one, but the profession has its good points. To become a trained nurse she must enter a hospital training school at any age between 23 and 35. She must spend at least two years in study, attending lectures, working in wards and learning the details which go to make nursing an exact science. Her hospital life may be brightened by little flirtations with the young doctors, and she may eventually become a doctor's wife and not a nurse at all, but on the whole she takes her work too seriously to admit of a great deal of nonsense. And when she has finished she is not a Lucile or a Clara Barton, but she is a self-composed, self-reliant young woman, capable of making her own way in the world and ready to become a ministering angel at so much per week.

The Late Princess Bismarck.

"The Countess stood there, hesitating a moment," writes George W. Smalley, while describing his first visit to Prince Bismarck, some years ago, in the Ladies' Home Journal. "I thought then, as I have thought since, of the part she had played in her husband's life. Her present intervention had evidently surprised the Count; it was very much in the manner, thus far, of Mrs. Gladstone, whose superintendence over her husband has been, especially during the last twenty years, of a very close and anxious kind. Countess Bismarck never, I think, aspired to much direct influence on public affairs. Her face was not that of a masterful woman, nor yet preeminently of one born to bear sway in courts or drawing-rooms, but above all things sympathetic, kindly, amiable and attractive. Her manner was of great sweetness, she moved and spoke gently. In all her bearing, in the tone of her voice, in her attitude as she remained there, still appealing to her husband, though silent, there was both affection and refinement."

Sudden Destruction of Birds.

The long semi-annual migrations of birds are attended by numberless perils and great loss of life. A dispatch from Baton Rouge, La., in the middle of October last, affords a striking instance.

On Friday morning, the dispatch says, early risers here witnessed a peculiar phenomenon; a shower of dead birds that fell from a clear sky, and literally cluttered the streets. There were ducks, catbirds, woodpeckers and many birds of strange plumage, some of them resembling canaries, but all dead. They fell in heaps along the thoroughfares.

The most plausible explanation of the strange windfall, the sender of the dispatch thinks, is that the birds were driven inland by a recent severe storm on the Florida coast. Doubtless they were caught by some sudden change of weather while they were migrating at a great height, perhaps several miles above the earth.

Some idea of the extent of the shower may be gathered from the fact that in one avenue children picked up as many as 200 birds.

Crushed.

Once a poet wrote a sonnet
All about a pretty bonnet,
And a critic sat upon it,
On the sonnet,
Not the bonnet,
Nothing loth.

And, as if it were high treason,
Said: "Neither rhyme nor reason
Has it. And it's out of season!"
Which? The sonnet
Or the bonnet?
Maybe both.

'Tis a feeble imitation
Of a worthier creation;
An asthetic innovation
Of a sonnet
On a bonnet.
This was hard.

Both were put together neatly,
Harmonizing very sweetly,
But the critic crushed completely,
Not the bonnet,
Or the sonnet,
But the bard.

Harvester History in Short.

Ogle cut grain with a dropper in 1822.

Bell made a header in 1826 and marketed it many years.

Randall in 1833 operated a machine having a reel, platform, divider, cutting apparatus and all essential parts.

Hussey built and patented the same year a machine. Its principles have never been departed from; it is still used in Europe as he built it. He later applied Ogle's reel. With but three years to run, his open guard patent sold for $300,000.

McCormick claims to have experimented in 1831; patented a push machine in 1834, strapping the push tongue to the horses' backs; experimented again in 1839; sold a machine in 1841; licensed under Hussey's patent at the end of a law suit.

The predecessors of the Deering Company patented a Marsh harvester in 1858; perfected it and put it on the market; broke up the trade of reaper manufacturers, who then began building Marsh harvesters in 1875. Deering used doubly adjustable reel in 1875; was followed two or three years later. Deering and Wood sold wire binders in 1874. McCormick company followed two years later. Deering took up tyine binders in 1878 and was followed three years later by the McCormick Company. Deering and Osborne steel binders were put out in 1885, and McCormick followed two or three years later. Deering adapted roller bearings to harvesting machinery in 1893, which McCormick is now adopting.

THE LAW OF GROWTH.

Conditions Which Affect the Future Height of People.

The rule in growth is that a child should increase two pounds in weight for every inch in height between three and four feet, and two and a half pounds for every inch between four and five feet. Any child more than seven pounds below the weight here given should be examined medically. A remarkable fact that comes out from the tables is that the boys at the public schools and the young men at the universities, and entering public service, here called the upper classes, average about three inches taller, and from six pounds to twenty pounds heavier than the boys in the boarding schools and young apprentices and workmen. Two causes may be assigned for this—first, heredity, the one springging from the taller parents; and, secondly, favorable surroundings. Deficient and improper food, town air, laborious work at early ages, all stunt the growth. Every one knows how a change from close town to free country life, with plenty of exercise, stimulates growth. I have seen three and a half inches thus produced in four months, where all means in town had thus signally failed before.

A good rule for predicting future height is that if five feet is passed between ten and eleven years of age the child will be tall; if not till fifteen, he will be short. Increase in weight is also largely due to climate. I remember an exceedingly slim and elegant young lady coming to the north of London from the west of Ireland. In a few weeks there was trouble with her dresses, and this continued, for the girl grew so stout as to quite lose her elegant figure. Her friends were in despair. Banting was tried, but still she grew apace. Circumstances at this time required her return to Connaught, and in two months' time, when she had got thoroughly soaked again in that humid climate, she wrote in triumph that the odious fat had all disappeared, and her beautiful figure returned. Again she came to London, and as she gradually dried, renewed troubles with the dresses began, and at last the question became urgent whether she would be dry and stout in London or moist and elegant in Ireland. It is needless to say she at once chose the latter, and has not been to town since.—Atlanta Journal.

"Rocking" in High Buildings.

Anyone who has visited the upper floors of New York or Boston or Chicago "sky-scrapers" during a high wind must have experienced the unpleasant sensation known as "rocking." In other words, he has felt the building quiver and even sway sensibly beneath his feet.

The narrower of the tall structures are, of course, especially prone to "rocking." Mr. Harry Lawrence, a tenant of the notable American Tract Society's building, in Nassau street, New York, is responsible for the statement that that giant edifice sways a foot in an average high wind, and during a gale even exceeds that limit.

The danger attendant upon this "rocking," not to speak of the upsetting effect it produces upon nervous folk, must be at once apparent.

A wholesale manufacturer of photographic materials, Wright by name, has invented an ingenious method of neutralizing the danger, at least. Mr. Wright's establishment is in a lofty building near Fifth avenue, New York. He uses very heavy machinery, which renders the building topheavy in the extreme. During a wind, there was always fear of the machinery being driven through the somewhat thin walls, or windows, thereby wrecking the buildings and menacing passers-by. Mr. Wright was equal to the emergency. He simply caused his floor to be partially zinc-lined, and converted into a gigantic tank. This he flooded with water. Then huge pontoons, or rafts, were constructed, and set afloat upon the surface of this strange twelfth-story lake. The pontoons were anchored to the walls on all sides by heavy chains and rivets. When these preparations were completed, Mr. Wright had his heavy machinery embarked upon the pontoons. Thus the building may rock as it will, but the dreaded masses of steel are safely afloat, and all danger from them is neutralized.

Well Rebuked.

A quick retort is credited to a young author whose tongue is as ready as his pen.

Not long ago, as he was walking with a friend a man came up behind him and gave him a resounding slap on the shoulder. The writer turned a surprised face toward the newcomer, who said:

"Look here, you must remember me, now don't you?"

"I can't say that I remember your face," returned the young author, gravely, "but your manner is certainly familiar."

The man who is holding onto a few favorite sins is playing hide and seek with Satan.

Sarsaparilla Sense.

Any sarsaparilla is sarsaparilla. True. So any tea is tea. So any flour is flour. But grades differ. You want the best. It's so with sarsaparilla. There are grades. You want the best. If you understood sarsaparilla as well as you do tea and flour it would be easy to determine. But you don't. How should you?

When you are going to buy a commodity whose value you don't know, you pick out an old established house to trade with, and trust their experience and reputation. Do so when buying sarsaparilla.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been on the market fifty years. Your grandfather used Ayer's. It is a reputable medicine. There are many sarsaparillas. But only one Ayer's. IT CURES.

THE ANT.

I love to watch the little ant,
To see him strive away
Upon his mound of sand, and note
Its growth from day to day.

He never loiters in the shade,
Nor sits upon the fence;
He never halts before a task,
No matter how immense.

But that which I admire most
About the restless ant
Is that he wins without a bit
Of bluster or of cant.

A CLAY IDOL.

It was universally conceded that Bill Kingerty was the toughest character in Lone Rock. The stage driver told me as much before we had gone three miles from the station on our fifty-mile drive to the camp.

"Tough?" he said. "I should say yes. Always plays in great luck, drinks lots of whisky, spends a bushel of money, and is mighty handy with his gun. Whatever you do, tenderfoot, don't run up against Bill Kingerty."

I told him I didn't intend to run up against anyone, least of all a man who was handy with his gun.

We arrived at Lone Rock the next morning, and I must confess the town did not make a very favorable impression on my English sensibilities.

The largest building in town was the Inter Ocean saloon, a long, low building of rough boards, thrown together in true frontier style. The camp had grown up in a day, as it were, when the placer fields were discovered, a mile or so up the canon. The floating population of the whole territory had flocked hither, and what a month before was as lonely a gulch as could be found in the Rockies, was now a flourishing "city" of several hundred.

As I wandered into the Inter Ocean that evening, the stage driver, who was standing near the door, recognized me, and drawing closer, whispered:

"There's Bill Kingerty over yonder at the farther table. Remember, stranger, and don't run up against him."

I looked in the direction indicated and saw a large-boned, roughly-dressed man of perhaps 50 seated at a parlor table, playing cards. His wide slouch hat was pulled down over his eyes, so that only the lower part of his face was visible. His chin was covered with a grizzly growth of reddish-gray hair. There was a goodly stock of gold at his elbow, to which he added now and then as the game went on. It was evident that the stage driver was right about Bill Kingerty's luck.

The scene before me was new and strange. From a secluded place in a dark corner of the room I watched the motley crowd singing, drinking and gambling. Now and then some especially lucky player would cash in, and, advancing to the rough board counter answering for a bar, call up the crowd and set up the liquor. I had not been noticed in my dark corner until later in the evening a tall, sinewy cowboy scooped a great pile of gold into his pockets, and, advancing to the bar, threw down a handful and called up everybody.

Glancing about the room with a glass of the reddest of red liquor in his hand, he spied me.

"Hey, there, tenderfoot," he shouted, "what are you sulking in that corner for? Come up here and have something."

I advanced meekly into the light, and hardly knowing what I said or did, replied: "If you will excuse me, I will take a cigar instead."

"Cigar," he roared, and pouring out a brimming glass of whisky handed it to me with the words, "Take that, and drink it, quick."

"Really," I said in my fright, "I don't care for this. Pray excuse me and I'll smoke a cigar instead."

"Cigar be hanged," he answered, "drink that liquor," and, pulling a six-shooter from his belt, he pointed it at my head.

I looked at the gleaming muzzle in terror. The mouth of the barrel looked to my frightened senses as large as a drainpipe. The drawn, hardened face of the man behind it looked fiendish.

"Really——" I stammered. "Drink," he shouted. I raised the glass to my lips and gulped down a mouthful. The fiery stuff choked me, and, throwing it up, I went into a paroxysm of coughing.

The crowd surged about me, laughing and shrieking, when the cowman waved his weapon over his head, fired a couple of shots through the roof, and, pointing it at me again, shouted: "Drink it down, tenderfoot, drink it down, or I'll finish you."

As I raised the glass again, Bill Kingerty stepped forward and walked up to my assailant with the words: "That's enough of that, stranger. Put up that gun, and let the boy alone."

The cow-puncher didn't know Kingerty, and, besides, he was half drunk. Without a reply he turned suddenly, and, pointing his revolver at Kingerty's breast, fired.

I don't know to this day how it was. I was never brave or heroic. In fact, I am a beastly coward, but, nevertheless, as the cowboy fired, I leaped forward, and, striking the gun threw up the barrel. His bullet sped harmlessly over Kingerty's head.

I didn't realize that there was more than one shot; but when the smoke cleared away the cowboy lay dead upon the floor, and the smoke was still floating from Bill Kingerty's gun. The cowboy's partner came forward and took charge of the body, but did not speak to Kingerty.

As I started to leave the place Kingerty laid his hand on my arm, and drew me to the door and down the street to the shanty where he lived. He opened the rickety door, and, entering, lighted a candle, placed it on a box, and pushing me to a stool, bade me to be seated.

"Stranger," he began after clearing his throat, "what are you doing out here? You've no business in this country. Why, sonny, you're the biggest tenderfoot I've ever seen."

I threw off all restraint—for there was a kindly light in his rugged face—and told him my story. How I had just left college, and, lacking the necessary money to pursue the study of medicine as I wished, had come West to make my fortune, hoping to go back in a few years and take up my chosen profession.

Kingerty was silent after I had told my story, and, by the flashing light of the candle, I could see he was in deep meditation.

"So you have come from England," he at length began, "and to make your fortune." He turned uneasily in his seat, and, looking me full in the face, continued: "My boy, go home; you're not fitted for this life out here. If you stay here you'll either get tough or get shot, or both. If you're dead the cash won't do you much good. I knew a boy who came West, the same as you, only a few years ago. He came from London, too. This chap had finished school and, carried away with the stories of the wealth to be gained in the West, packed up his things and came out here.

"He was ambitious to be rich and honored, and so left his own country with its limited chances and long, uphill pull, to make his fortune in the Western gold fields. Neither his aged parents nor his sweetheart were able to dissuade him from this foolhardy step. He told his little flaxen-haired sweetheart that last night at home that he would soon return with wealth and power, and pictured how happy they would be in the home he would be able to furnish for her. And he went away."

As he finished these words his voice was low and husky, and I could see in the dim light that he was looking far beyond me, through the open door and out towards the mountains, towering dim and majestic in the eastern sky, his voice was wonderfully softened and I could hardly realize in the man that now stood before me the murderer of an hour before.

"I knew the boy well," he continued, "perhaps better than his own parents. Well, he came West, and for a few months kept up and saved money. The little souvenir his sweetheart had given him seemed to keep him from the temptation which surrounded him. Then came the long winter when we were snowed in and for months received no mail. The absence of word from home and loved ones seemed to press heavily upon him. He became sullen and morose—then came cards and whisky, and perdition. When the snow melted and the delayed stage arrived, he, fallen to a common roustabout at the saloons, read that his sweetheart had died during the long winter—died in his mother's arms, and in the wild delirium of brain fever had begged him not to go—oh, not to go away.

"Thus was broken what seemed the only chain that bound him to decency.

"Then he drifted with the wild, turbulent current of Western life through this camp, and that, a drunkard, a murderer and a gambler.

We sat in silence. Kingerty's sad dreary eyes were fixed on space, and it seemed I could see a teardrop glistening on his rugged cheek. He turned to me, and laying a hand on my shoulder as a father continued: "Boy, go home. Work at anything if needs be to gain your end, and don't sever yourself from good influences, from an early training and from a Christian home."

I rose and grasped his hand, too much overcome by my emotions for words. As I started for the door he said:

"No, my boy, don't go up to the hotel. It might not be safe. Bunk in here with me."

I lay awake far into the night. Suddenly riches seemed to me of little value now, when associated with constant temptation. I had just money enough to get back. I would go to-morrow.

"MY BOY, GO HOME; YOU'RE NOT FITTED FOR THIS LIFE OUT HERE."

I must have been asleep several hours when I was awakened by a shot. I leaped from my bunk. The sun was just peeping over the mountains. A cowboy stood a few rods from the door, a smoking Winchester in his hands. Bill Kingerty lay across the doorstep, dead.

I laid him out myself for a decent burial. Suspended from his neck by a slight golden chain was a locket. The bullet that had pierced his breast had broken it open. Inside, clotted with Bill Kingerty's lifeblood, was a lock of flaxen hair.—Utica Globe.

All Alone.

"There is poetry in everything," mused the editor. "Now, there is yonder waste basket." And he laughed, as he sometimes did when he was all alone.—Detroit Tribune.

A young man in Wrentham, Mass., has been finding amusement in mailing postage stamps and sending greetings to European potentates. He is delighted beyond measure at having already received acknowledgements from the Czar of Russia, the King of Greece and a few others.

There are eleven professors in the school of pedagogy opened by the Philadelphia Board of Education in 1891, and only one student, who stands at the head of his class and takes first honors in everything.

Florence Nightingale.

Miss Florence Nightingale has probably caused nearly as many girls to engage in the noble calling of nursing as Robinson Crusoe has sent out to sea. But the deeds she did and the good she accomplished belong so entirely to events that have been relegated to the domain of history that the world for the most part regards her as a historical figure, and forgets that she is still living. Yet the other day, when 56 out of the 72 survivors of Balaclava met around a dinner table at Birmingham a telegram arrived expressing heartfelt sympathy to the veterans, signed "Florence Nightingale."

The Strongest Fortification

Against disease, one which enables us to undergo unscathed risks from hurtful climatic influences, exposure, overwork and fatigue, is the vigor that is imparted to a debilitated physique by the peerless medicinal safeguard, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. You may possess this vigor in a higher degree than the trained athlete, although your muscular development may be far inferior to his. Vigor implies sound, good digestion and sound repose, two blessings conferred by the Bitters, which remedies malarial, rheumatic, nervous and kidney trouble.

Quick Engineering.

A quick piece of engineering work was carried out one Saturday night recently on the Great Eastern Railway, near Ely. An old bridge of 130 feet span over the River Ouse was taken down in six hours and a new single-span bridge that had been erected alongside was fitted up on a set of trolleys and put in its place in two hours more, only one regular Sunday train having been delayed.

"The Old Yellow Almanac."

When Ella Wheeler Wilcox wrote the poem having for title the same heading as this article, she touched a chord that vibrated in thousands of hearts. For Ayer's Almanac, "The Old Yellow Almanac" of the poem, is intimately associated with the days and deeds of a large part of the world's population. How large a part of the population this general statement may include can be gathered from the fact that the yearly issue of Ayer's Almanac is from 17,000,000 to 25,000,000 copies. It is printed in twenty-eight editions and in some eighteen languages, including, besides English, Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch, German, Swedish, Danish, Norwegian, Bohemian, Welch, Italian, French, etc. The old style almanac is looked upon by many as a relic of antiquity, especially the "patent medicine almanac," whose jokes are the butt often of the very papers in whose columns they first appeared. But there are almanacs and almanacs. Ever since Dr. Ayer's Almanac has been put out it has employed as high a class of mathematical and astronomical talent as is available in the country. The result is that it stands on a par, in respect of the reliability of its data and the accuracy of its calculations, with the U. S. Nautical Almanac, and testimony to this fact is found year after year in the letters, referred to the almanac department of the company, from students and mathematicians in various parts of the world. In its permanence and reliability Ayer's Almanac stands as a very fitting type of the Ayer Remedies—indispensable in the family and reliable every day in the year. The 1897 edition of this useful almanac is now in course of distribution through the druggists of the country.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

The recent discussions over this proposed great waterway to connect the two oceans, has aroused public interest to a greater extent than ever before. The stauggle now is, to get government aid for it in such a way that government will not have the trouble it did over the Pacific railroad. There is no question but it would be a good thing for the United States, and for the whole commercial world. To reach the Pacific Coast at present, vessels from the United States have to go about 15,000 miles. If the Panama Canal across that narrow strip, were completed, the distance would be about half. But the Panama Canal has already sunk hundreds of millions, and still seems in doubt, as the work has now reached the high rocky hills which must still be cut through at a yet unknown expense. But this Nicaragua Canal, shortens the distance to the Pacific very much more than the Panama, and though the canal will be much longer, it will cost far less money. It is believed that 100 millions added to the work already done, will complete it. Starting from this side a vessel would go up the San Juan river and after reaching a point where navigation ends, would enter a sidegate into the canal, and then be raised by locks ty a higher level. Then it would go back into the river, which would have a dam at that point, that would make it navigable for several miles farther. Then the boats would be raised by locks again, to the highest level it would have to make aud thence to Lake Nicaragua, a long narrow lake lying nearly parallel to the Pacific Coast for nearly 100 miles, then by a rise of sixteen feet into Lake Managua, about 40 miles long, and so reaching the steep slope near the Pacific, the sea being about 150 feet lower than the lake. There is another line talked of, that avoids Lake Nicaragua, but the above will probably be followed if the canal is made. Starting at this side, a great deal of work has been done to deepen the river and make a breakwater and harbor, and the digging has fairly started. But the lowest estimate for the entire work, is still put at 100 millions, and it may cost more. Still, the commercial world appears to think it will pay.

Saving the Orange Crop.

Chicago Cronical

The Florida orange crop is not of as much value or importance as the wheat or hay crop. It is of less value and importance than the apple crop of the north, which furnishes the most wholesome and delicious supply of fruit food to the people.

But the oranges of Florida grown before the great black frost of 1894 had become an important part of the fruit supply. Florida oranges of the best variety are superior to the oranges produced in any other country. The orange plant was introduced in Florida as an exotic. When it began to yield the fruit was found to be better than that of Italy, Spain or Jamaica.

Florida oranges became almost the cheapest fruit on the market. At retail by the dozen they were sold at a less price than was paid for the best Michigan peaches and for New York apples of the highest varieties. By the box Florida oranges were as cheap as peaches by the basket or apples by the barrel, or were cheaper.

It was supposed that the black frost of three years ago killed the Florida orange tree root and branch. But the destruction was less complete than had been apprehended. A great many trees have grown anew from sprouts

La Grippe

If you have had the Grippe, you know its aches and pains, the fever, the chills, the cough, the depression—you know them all. The Grippe exhausts the nervous system quickly, lowers the vitality. Two things should be done at once:—the body must be strengthened, and force must be given to the nervous system. Cod-liver Oil will do the first; Hypophosphites the second. These are permanently and pleasantly combined in Scott's Emulsion.

It lifts the despondency and heals the inflamed membranes of the throat and lungs.

But you need not have LA GRIPPE.

You can put your system in a condition unfavorable to it. You can have rich, red blood; resistive strength; steady brain and nerves. Scott's Emulsion prevents as well as cures.

And whether you send or go for Scott's Emulsion, be sure you get the genuine.

have, from the time of their preparation, been a continuous success with the public. And that means that Ayer's Pills accomplish what is promised for them; they cure where others fail. It was fitting, therefore, that the world-wide popularity of these pills should be recognized by the World's Fair medal of 1893—a fact which emphasizes the record:

50 Years of Cures.

and are now approaching bearing condition.

The recent frosty wave from the north barely touched the subtropic belt along the Gulf of Mexico and did not approach the orange-growing districts of Florida. But, warned by the past, the owners of the orange orchards have taken abundant precautions against another freeze. It is reported that log piles of great extent, with kindling ready to be ignited, have been placed in the direction of the cold winds that would sweep across the country.

The smoke from these vast burning log heaps blowing through the groves acts like a blanket in protecting the delicate tropic growths from the effects of frost. If this device had been adopted in 1894 the brange trees would have been saved. But the weather reports were not watched then with the anxiety that has been created since and less was known as to methods of heading off the frost.

If you state where you saw this notice you will receive a package of flower seeds free.

SCHOOL DAYS.

We have received the following little poem by a school boy, quite a young lad, and it may be of benefit to him and to others to study it, and make a few needed corrections, for though it is pretty good, we let it stand as he had it:

As we in our school room geather,
We are full of cheerful joys,
Thinking not of bitter weather;
But of lessons for us boys.

Wheather in our books or classes,
Let us do the best we can,
For the days now swiftly passes;
And each one aims to be a man.

As we near our homes at evening,
With our playmates by our sides,
And our books and studies leaving;
We have our many slides

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES

Should Learn to Say No, and Save Money for the County.

One would think that with the trouble several retiring township trustees have had, that the present ones would be more careful. And the most of them are. But we hear of two or three who have gone on in the old way of buying things they don't need and giving three or four prices for them. The first thing to be thought of when tackled by an agent, is, "Do I need this?" If he does not seriously need it he should not buy. Anything a township can get along without, should not be purchased. They should remember that taxes are high and not easily paid, and so manage that next tax levy for the township may be lower, not higher. Better buy too little than too much. Learn to say "No" and to say it in such a way, that the smooth agents will accept it at that. Better have an agent think you are "stingy" than to have your people think you are wasting their money. And no matter how honest a trustee is, if he makes a foolish bargain, his honesty is at once put in question. And with some reason. For several trustees, as is well known, have been offered commissions. One trustee was offered a bonus in cash, but he properly refused to buy. Another trustee was offered a road scraper for $160, and he informed the agent he could get that very scraper for $120. And the accommodating agent at once told the trustee that "the extra $40 is your share." The trustee said "no" in a way that settled the matter. Let every township trustee follow these two excellent examples, and thereby not only save money for the taxpayers, but a good name for himself.

WM. G. BOREN.

THE LEGISLATURE

A bill has been introduced by Mr. Harris raising salary of quartermaster from $600 to $1.200 a year. We doubt the wisdom or justice of this. That officer does not have to put in but a small portion of his time, and $600 ought to satisfy him these hard times.

Senator Nusbaum has a bill to regulate the sale of drugs and medicines and one to prohibit judges from accepting railroad passes. He will introduce another to provide for a "pubic defender." This is to provide for an attorney whose duty it shall be to "defend" in court, any criminal who under the usual practice is entitled to have an attorney at public expense. Some times the court appoints one attorney, and some times another. It is claimed that this plan is cheaper.

There is another, and a most vicious law proposed, that we trust no member from northern Indiana will vote for. It is to change our common school system back to what it was more than fifty years ago, when the entire state was little better than a wilderness. It would undo the good work, that has been slowly progressing since the present constitution was framed in 1852. It gives again three school directors to do all the business of the township trustee and the county superintendent. Such a law would have two direct and disastrous effects. It would increase greatly the sum total of school expenses, and decrease still more the efficiency of our schools. The writer of this is not "guessing." He can remember the old condition of things with the three directors, and has been familiar with every step of school progress made since then. It is the bill of a demagogue, who wants to tickle the people into security while he makes a fresh raid on their pockets. Bury it in a grave, wide and deep.

A Flag of Warning.

Beware of the dry, tickling, hacking, morning cough, for it warns you that consumption lurks near. The famous Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup will cure it. "I had a very bad cough. One doctor pronounced it consumption. I used Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup and was completely cured; the cough left me and has never come back. Simon Smasal, 375 31st Street, Chicago, Ills." Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup costs but 25 cents. Ask for Bull's, take only Bull's.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

THE TELEPHONE,

The Times-Herald gets off the following amusing little piece on the practical uses of the telephone in every-day life:

All sorts of funny questions come over the telephone into a newspaper office. Somebody is always making a bet on some queer proposition or other, and the decision is left in many cases some of the papers. No sooner is the bet made than the men who have put up the money, or promised to do so hie themselves to a telephone and ring up the "editor" of the paper to which the decision is left.

Some of the propositions advanced are enough to make a mule laugh, and and some are sent over the telephone just to worry the man who answers the ring and possibly to catch him with some trick. The other day, for instance, some fresh boy rang up a newspaper to ask for a decision on this proposition:

"Is it legal for a man to marry his widow's sister?"

The young man who answered the 'phone refused to "bite," and told the inquirer that his questions would be answered through the columns of the paper if he would write it out and forward it, with his name and address. That is the rule in most offices. This particular question never came, of course.

But the other night there came one that was too good to lose, so the young man who received it answered it on his own account.

"We've made a bet," said the fellow who rang up the office, "and we want you to decide it."

"This paper doesn't decide bets," was the answer.

"Never mind the bet, then. Just decide the question, will you?"

"Well what is your question?"

"It's this," came the answer: "Can a monkey swim?"

What an easy one! The young man at the 'phone smiled happily as he put his mouth down close to the transmitter and softly whispered:

"Just go down to the lake and jump in. Then you'll find out all about it."

And then he gently rang off and went on with his work.

JOLLY SLEIGHING PARTY

The excellent sleighing is furnishing a large amount of enjoyment for the young people. Sleighing parties were out last night, and all enjoyed a grand good time.

The following parties were at Kendallville leaving here on a bob sled, drawn by four horses. They were entertained by Miss Mae Lohman: Messrs. Will Raut, Claude Benedict, Fred Bates, Jim Eldridge, Jim Dills, Jack Bland and Misses Watson, of Angola, Lenore and Louise Long, Mamie Trentman, Jessie Prickett and Helen Ralston.

Another jolly crowd were entertained at St. Joe by Miss Ida Stafford, daughter of Mr. and J. K. Stafford. They report a pleasant time. They were Messrs. Geo Kuhlman, Frank Draggoo, Tete Ashleman, Lyman Ashelman, and Mr. Green, of Fort Wayne, and Misses Ollie McClure, Emma Snell, Clara Stafford, Flora Stafford and Miss Decker.

An oyster supper at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Cal Grube, south of town, was enjoyed by the following party: Geo. Boland, John Grube, Harry Draggoo, Ed Baker, Phil Gibson, Harry Trentman and Will Buckley, and Misses Inez Rose, Elsie Caruth, Zoe Summers, Clara Summers, Mae Rose, Dot Gibson and Rowena Tefft.

Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Wilson entertained a party from Waterloo. They brought with them their musical instruments and had quite a pleasant evening. Among those in the party whose names we learned were: Mr and Mrs. John Baxter, Mrs. Jennie Snell, Wilson Dennison, Frank and Sam Till, Lou and Edith Farrington, and Mart Miser and wife.

Invents a Legometer

Device Which Accurately Indicates the Distance Traveled on Foot.

Charlee West, of Anderson, has invented and succefully tested a legometer. As the name indicates, its function is to measure the step of the leg. It has a dial not unlike that of a bicycle meter, and has a delicate spring, which, when released, will get every step taken by the wearer and measure it accurately. The dial shows "yards, rods and miles," and through tests prove that it is absolutly correct. The meter is placed in the trousers pocket of the walker and the delicate mechanism does not rest with its mystic regularity. It can also be worn in the pocket of the bicycle rider, and, by a table which is now being computed by tests, will register the number of miles covered as accurately as the meter which depends on the wheel turning it around once every revolution.

Bushels Apiece.

An exchange furnishes figures on the probable amount of home consumption of wheat, and now make the annual consumption per capita about 4.77 bushels. According to this estimate this country would consume $334,000,000 bushels of wheat, this year, about two thirds of last year's crop. Besides this consumption for food there is to be added the quantity used for seed, for feeding chickens and other live stock, which would increase total home consumption to 5.7 bushels per capita, or an aggregate of nearly 400,000,000

Volume XXVII — Auburn, DeKalb County, Indiana, Thursday February 11, 1897. — Number 6.

CRIMINAL SLANDER.

J. C. Henry calls Down the Clipper and Will Commence Suit Against Them.

Marshal West Served the Warrant to-day.

Thursday's Daily.

If there ever was a criminal slander, the following from the disreputable Garrett Clipper, is one. We copy from its issue of this week:

—J. C. Henry, the Auburn opera house manager, and others, has a law suit on their hands that calls for a settlement of $10,000. He is sued by the Huntington bank on what is known as a blanket note. This is the kind of paper that DeKalb county officials have been exchanging. When the Arnold bank at South Whitley failed it brought to light Mr. Henry's note. Young Arnold disposed of it to the Huntington bank and hence the tronble. Among others interested in these flap notes for the amount mentioned above is one against J. C. Henry for $2,000.

The above is false from beginning to end, and the Clipper, the windy end of which has always lived in Auburn, knew it. He could not have been ignorant for the facts had been publish- in a recent issue of the COURIER in which we distinctly stated that these cases had been brought over here on a charge of venue, and spoke of their nature and origin. There was not a word in that court report or in the papers on file in the court records, that could in any way couple John C. Henry of Auburn with the affair. It was John C. Henry, of South Whitley. Mr. Henry was never sued in his life and is not likely to be. He never owed any man or bank a tenth part of the sum named. He can pay any sum he may owe in an hour. But the publishing of a slander like this is in keeping with the whole course of that dirty sheet from its first issue to the present time.

On reading the slander, Mr. Henry at once consulted his attorneys, Mc Clellan and Garwood, and a statement was prepared and put into the hands of Marshal John West, who went over to Garrett and served it on the supposed to-be the responsible end of the concern. It is not exactly a warrant but is in the nature of a first step to a legal proceeding. After reciting that portion of the law bearing on cases of this kind and quoting the slanderous paragraph, the writ continues adding, that the item "is false and defamatory in this, that J. C. Henry connected with the said suit, is not the J. C. Henry, Manager of the Auburn Opera House, and that J. C. Henry of Auburn, has not and never has been indebted to said Arnold Brothers, or said Huntington Bank upon any note or notes or upon any obligation whatever. Nor has he signed or executed any of "the kind of paper that DeKalb county official have been exchanging."

This statement is subscribed to formally by Mr. Henry, and it will either bring them to their knees with a humble retraction, or the suit will go on.

That paper has for years been a scab on society, a wart on DeKalb County, and a disgrace and damage to the fair fame and the business interests of Garrett. We have repeatedly called the attention of decent people to the damage it is doing our community. But unfortunately there are enough people who like scandal and salacious reading who give it a support that has enabled it to live thus far.

THE C. E. GRADUATION.

It was a most interesting meeting. The Presbyterian church was full, and was well paid for attendance. The exercises were bright and attractive and all present must have felt that these young people are doing a high order of good work and deserve well at the hands of all church going people, and in fact of all society. There were many excellent things among which was the sweet little speech by Edith Trout who is president of the Juniors of the Presbyterian church. Then there was a very appropriate address to the graduates by Miss Van Doren and another by Dr. Baxter, as well as a brief speech by the Pastor, Mr. Colvin. The graduating exercies altogether were impressive and the little class that stepped from among the Juniors into the ranks of the Seniors were evidently in earnest and also well pleased at their promotion. They are Brad Ralston, Lee Fischler, Anna Cappy, Laura Rose, Lizzie Snell, Leah Little, Pearl Sprott, and Ruth Baker. We feel like saying good words for all these young people, both Seniors and Juniors, for they are doing a good work.

RAILROAD PROBLEM.

An exchange has this curious question:

Here is a little problem for readers to ponder over: A train one mile long starts from one station to the second with the caboose at the first, the engine, therefore being one mile from the station and four miles from the second. A man starts from the caboose at the first station and walks to the engine, a distance of one mile, arriving there just as the engine arrives at the second station—How far did the man ride? He was walking during the entire trip. How far did he walk?

Special Meetings.

A series of special meetings will begin at the Presbyterian church to morrow, Tuesday evening, continuing till Friday evening and perhaps longer Rev. Mr. Cravens of Ossian will be here to assist Mr. Colvin. All are earnestly invited to attend whether members or not and assist to make these meetings a success.

BET ON BRYAN

And Lost. And Is Now Riding a Donkey To San Francisco to Pay the Bet.

A. Lewis called our attention to a novel election bet which is now being paid, by a New York man. He gave us a copy of his old home paper, the Albion N. Y. News, from which we clip the following:—

R. Pitcher Woodward, D. D, struck Albion last night with a frozen nose and two bullet holes in his hat. Mr. Woodward, who is a long, slim, good looking, good talking sort of a fellow, called at the News office this morning. He said, the "D D" means "donkey driver," as he is on his way from New York to San Francisco with a little forlorn looking donkey as his only companion in settlement of an election bet.

He started from home Nov. 27th with only 99 cents in his pocket and if he fails to reach San Francisco by Nov 3, 1897, he forfeits $5,000

He has had lots of experience since he left home thus far, having been held up by robbers and being the mark for bullets, and last Tuesday night he froze his nose. He gives lectures on the way to keep him and his donkey from starving to death.

He will lecture in the village hall this evening on "New York to San Francisco on a Donkey." Ten cents will be the price of admission.

MUST PAY AGAIN

Several of Our Citizens Caught in a Chicago Loan Association.

The American Building, Loan and Investment Society of Chicago, Ill., which failed a couple years ago are now asking its members in our city to pay in an additional large sum of money. A receiver has been appointed by the U. S. court and he has notified them to settle their accounts. Ed. Baker who has paid out all claims is refused the mortgage on his property and there is some talk of bringing suit against the company to have it foreclosed. He is asked to pay in about $300 additional, and Mort Hilkey nearly $200. The following persons are also members of the society: Henry Lockwood, A. N. Wilson, Milas Osburn, Chas. Henky and Joe Williamson.

PROTECTION ASSURED.

A DECISION OF THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF VITAL INTEREST TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

The action of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in reversing the decision of the Circuit Court of the Northern District of New York in the case of The N. K. Fairbank Company vs The R. W. Bell Mfg. Company, for infringing by imitation on their "Gold Dust" Washing Powder package, not only assures The N. K. Fairbank Co. of protection, but also the housekeepers of the land. Hereafter they will not be annoyed with the spurious article sailing under the colors of "Gold Dust" Washing Pawder.

Judge Lacombe in handing down his decision sounded a warning to imitators in tersely staied facts which have equal interest for the housekeepers, manufacturers and business men generally. He said:

"The judge who heard the case in the Circuit Court was strong in the conviction that there was not a similarity calculated to deceive any buyer of ordinary prudence; that there was no danger of imposition by any similarity between the packages. We are unable to reach the same conclusion. When it is borne in mind that articles of this kind, whes once they are generally known, become associated in the public mind with the general appearance of the package which contains them, it is quite conceivable that a dishonest retail dealer who kept complaieant's and defendant's packages mingled together on the same shelves, might easily palm off the one for the other upon an unsuspecting purchaser."

Since "Gold Dust" Washing Powder has held its own in every market as the best cleansing compound made for all purposes, there has been the necessity for The N. K. Fairbank Company to protect themselve and their patrons from numerous fraudulent imitations, and though imitation is the tribute paid to success, in this case the housekeepers would be the sufferers if the tribute were not disdained. The Fairbank "Darky Twins" on the "Gold Dust" package are as familiar to the average housewife as the face of the family clock.

BOYS IDEA OF GOSPEL.

About a month ago, we published the following note about little Fred. Refner.

Little folks have ideas as well as larger folks. Little Fred Refner, an Auburn lad of eight years, came home from school yesterday noon, deeply interested in a question his teahher had given him. So he asked his mother about it. His teacher, Miss Gratz, had asked all her pupils to find out and tell her all they could about the "Life of Christ." The little fellow asked his mother to help him out. She told him to ask his teacher in which book of the New Testament she wanted them to find it. So when he came home at night his face showed plainly that he had it clearly settled, and he exultingly called out, "Mamma I can tell you where to find it now. It is in Claude Matthews." As Fred's people are all democrats, the report was accepted, placed on file and marked O. K.

Thinking this too good to be lost, we clipped it out and sent it to Mr. King, then private Secretary to Governor Matthews. In a few days we received an answer, but as the letter was mislaid till now, we did not then publish it. Believing it will still be of interest we give it now.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT
INDIANAPOLIS, IND, Dec. 16, 1896.

Dear Mr. Barns:

Secretary King has just handed me your note enclosing clipping from the COURIER, containing the anecdote of little Fred. Refner. It caused no little amusement, and yet it is gratifying to know that I stand so well in the thoughts of Master Fred. As you state that Master Fred's "people are all democrats," I would like to draw the complimentary inference that my official acts have been commended by them.

While I know that with Fred's increasing years and wisdom he will realize his mistake, yet I venture the hope that I may retain a kindly place in his rememberance.

Please give my kindest regards to the young gentleman, who I trust will make frequent references to his Bible, grow into a good and useful manhood, and entreat him to not forget his democratic training. Thanking you for the clipping, I am,

Very truly yours,
CLAUDE MATTHEWS.

NEW RAILROADS

Warsaw had a big meeting the other day, to talk up two new railroads in which they are interested. One is the proposed new line from Ashley, through Kendallville, and the other is what is to be called to "Indiana Central." This latter line is to start from Union city on the Indiana and Ohio state line and run through the state to the northwest, striking Warsaw, and ending at Nappanee. There it would connect with the new line the B. & O. has been talking up, which it is claimed they are going to build from South Bend to Nappanee. Then, the B. & O. will also lease a new line from South Bend to Benton Harbor. These different roads, if built and joined together would make a new line from Michigan to Cincinnati. The plan looks feasible, and it may eventually be carried out. But whether any more roads across Indiana would pay or not, remains to be seen.

AS USUAL.

Laporte Argus.

It is reported that the 271 members of the Pottawatomie tribe of Indians in southwestern Michigan, who recently received $118,000 from the government, are rapidly squandering their wealth. In rare instances Indians have purchased small tracts of land, but in some cases the small farms have already been mortgaged to their full value. At Athens the Indians planned to build a church, but the purchase of large quantities of "fire water" and trinkets in the village stores soon absorbed their funds. In the settlement of Hamilton, some 35 slab shanties are crowded together on a small tract of oak grubs. These hovels are now filled with expensive furniture and musical instruments, although no one in the community can play a note, while top buggies are strung around in the open air, exposed to the elements. Some families received from $1,700 to $2,500, and after squandering the whole amount have not a single article useful to them to show for it.

The Only Free Silver Whistle in This City. For the First Time.

Monday's Daily.

Virgil DeWitt and son Harry are now running the band saw mill having purchased it of A. B. Nickey, as noted in the COURIER some time ago. A new whistle has been placed on the boiler and was sounded for the first time this morning and Mr. DeWitt says its the only Free Silver Whistle in town. They have a fine lot of logs in and the mill will probably run steady for quite a while. The only thing to prevent it would be the breaking up of the roads, making it impossible to get the logs to the mill. About fifteen men are given employment at the mill now, and we hope business will justify Mr. DeWitt in increasing the force.

SWARTS--GARSIDE NUPTIALS

Edon Independent.

Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 3rd, 1897, at one o'clock at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. W Garside, on East Indiana street, in Edon, Ohio, occurred in a quiet manner an anticipated social event, the marriage of their daughter, Miss Nell to Dr. W. W. Swarts, of Auburn, Ind., Rev. J. N. Scholes, of Bryan, officiating.

Owing to the past few months' and present bedridden illness of the bride's mother, the long loked for elaborate wedding gave place to one of quiet and simple formality, being witnessed by only a few of near relatives and friends.

Besides the bride's parents and family, Mr. and Mrs. Garside and their two sons Walter and Warren, and their little grandson, Claire Mast, the only witnesses to the ceremony were Dr. D. J. Swarts and Dr. Vesta M. W. Swarts, (father and mother of the grrom) of Auburn; Mrs. J. N. Scholes, of Bryan; Mrs. L. M. Townsend, of Angola, Ind; Mr. John Mast, Edgerton; Miss Beulah Cameron and Miss Mae Noble, of Edon.

The bride and groom departed with the groom's parents, shortly after the ceremony for Auburn where they will pass a brief honeymoon. During this short absence of the bride from her mother's bedside the mother is cared for by her sister, Mrs. L. M. Townsend.

The Dr and Mrs. Swarts will not at present begin housekeeping, but Mrs. S. will remain with and care for the wants of her mother for a time, while her husband resumes his professional work at Williamsport, Ind., where he is getting established a very successful practice, being young but thoroughly qualified, as is evidenced by his diploma from the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati, to say nothing of his post graduate course at the Medical School and Hospital at Chicago, or his course at the Fort Wayne College of Medicine and other special courses.

Dr. Swarts is to be congratulated on having plucked one of the fairest flowers from the "Garden of Edon." Her numerous friends here will regret to lose her from their midst; yet from many years of personal acquaintance with the groom and his family we can give assurance that she has won a worthy mate.

Mrs. Swarts has been a leader in social and church affairs in Edon, being an accomplished vocal and instrumental musician, as well as an elocutionist. She was first assistant in the business of her father, one of our substantial merchants and present postmaster, until the illness of her mother, since which time she has been a faithful and ever attentive nurse to her sick mother, who, we are glad to announce, has much improved in the last few weeks.

The Independent, of course, joins the multitude in extending to the young couple congratulations, and fervent wishes for future happiness and prosperity.

TO BURN THE TOWN.

Sensational Disclosure Concerning the Leadville Strike.

Before the legislative strike investigation committee, John M. Maxwell, a leading attorney of Leadville, Col., testified that District Judge Owers advised him in August to move his abstract books out of town, as the city was likely to be burned. "The conditions justify me in that belief," said Judge Owers. "I have been in the secret councils of the Miners' Union, where it was declared that before they would allow other men to take their places they would burn the town. There is no bank vault that will be safe." Mr. Maxwell said he had another conversation with Judge Owers in Denver in January in which these statements were confirmed.

Two Steamers Lost.

London special: The German steamer Africa, which sailed from Antwerp for New Orleans, has returned to Flushing, having been damaged in collision in the roads with the Norwegian ship Saga, from Buenos Ayres for Hamburg. The Saga vanished in the thick fog which prevailed. Part of her crew were picked up by the steamers. It is supposed that the Saga foundered and that the remainder of her crew were lost.

Coruna (Spain) special: An unknown French sailing vessel has been lost on Cape Toriana, the western extremity of this province (Galicia). Only one of her crew was saved.

Carlisle to Quit Kentucky.

The report that Secretary Carlisle will return to Kentucky after he goes out of office and devote his attention to the work of rehabilitating the Democratic party in the Blue Grass State is not true. Mr. Carlisle has made his arrangements to go to New York soon after March 4, and will engage in the practice of law in that city. He has already secured one client who will pay him an annual retainer of $25,000.

Czar Grows Melancholy.

The London Mail publishes dispatches announcing that the epileptic symptoms which marked the youth of the Czar are returning. These symptoms, taken in connection with fears of the result of the approaching operation by which it is hoped to remove the bony protuberance from the head of the Czar, have, it is asserted, produced feelings of morbid melancholy in the Russian monarch.

Three Killed in a Bandit's Raid.

Guthrie (Ok. T.) special: A gang of bandits attempted to raid the stores and Government offices at Sac and Fox Agency, and three men, including General Thomas, the Indian Agent, were shot and killed. The same report is prevalent at Shawnee, the nearest telegraph station to the agency, but no definite particulars can be obtained. General Thomas is from Atlanta, Ga.

Gas Explosion Wrecked the House.

A natural gas explosion blew out the wall of Ed Hoover's brick residence on Main street, Dunkirk, Ind. His son Frank, who was changing a connection, was seriously if not fatally burned. Miss Maud Hoover was also badly burned, and Mrs. Hoover was thrown down and bruised by the explosion. The fire department quickly extinguished the flames.

Panhandle Train Wrecked.

The Panhandle Cincinnati limited train was wrecked at the junction of the Big Four, a half mile from Anderson, Ind., through a mistake of the engineer in interpreting the semaphore signals. The engine, mail and baggage cars were derailed, tearing up the track and stopping on the edge of an embankment. No one was seriously injured.

Crop Prospects Good in California.

With almost continuous rains for several weeks, the crop prospects of California are considered excellent. This season's average of wheat has been largely increased over that of recent years, and conditions point to a bountiful cereal crop. Fruit also promises well, but it is too early to predict the yield.

He is badly injured. The building was occupied by Scott & Co., hardware merchants.

Ex-Congressman James Wilson Iowa, has accepted the office of Secretary of Agriculture in President McKinley's Cabinet.

State Funds Snow-Bound.

One of the most remarkable episodes in connection with the blizzard in South Dakota was the blockading of the train containing about $200,000 of the State funds. Having lost a large amount through the peculations of State Treasurer Taylor, now in the penitentiary, the Governor and Legislature determined that if the State treasure was not now intact they would know the reason why. Accordingly the treasurer was compelled to have all the funds deposited in banks throughout the State brought to the capitol. This was done and every dollar counted by State officials. While transporting the money back to the banks the train containing the largest amount got hopelessly stuck in snow banks from five to twenty feet high, and there it was, guarded by State militia, until by the aid of snow plows it was enabled to proceed.

Firemen Frozen to the Ground.

Two Chicago firemen fighting the flames which consumed $500,000 worth of property on Fifth avenue, found themselves frozen to the street when they attempted to move. With difficulty they made known their predicament to their fellows, and it was only after several minutes' work with axes that they were chopped out and released.

Wanders for Days with Frozen Feet.

After wandering with both feet frozen for six days, Thomas Burke, a South Dakota farm laborer, applied at the police station at Sioux Falls for help. Burke was out of work and was tramping the country in search of a situation. He was caught in the blizzard and froze both feet up to the ankles. He begged at a dozen houses to be taken in long enough to thaw them out, but was everywhere refused and finally remained out of doors, almost without food and with his feet frozen until he reached Sioux Falls and asked the chief of police for help. The skin of his feet had turned black and his vitality was so low that the surgeon feared amputation of the limbs would kill him. Burke was removed to the hospital, where it is expected he will die.

Sleighing Under Difficulties.

A number of North Minneapolis young people had a chilly experience that cold Monday night, the remembrance of which will make them shiver when they are gray-haired. The sophomores and seniors of the North Side High School chose the night for a sleigh ride to Minnetonka, thirty miles away. The trip was eventful ad extremis on account of badly drifted roads and poor sledding. It was also a very cold night for sleigh riding, and the entire party was almost frozen.

Family Starving and Baby Dying.

Of the five deaths from cold which occurred in Chicago within two days, four were children. One of the saddest cases is that of R. Rochenberg, a Russian Jew, living with his wife and eight children in one little room. For eight months the father has been out of employment, and when a physician and two policemen from the Harrison street station visited the family they found them starving and a nine-months-old baby dying for want of proper nourishment.

Frozen Noses Puzzle a Janitor.

The Jones school in Chicago is attended mostly by Italians, Russian Jews and colored children. The janitor acts as surgeon-in-chief to all and tries to treat all colors alike, in rubbing their noses with snow until frostbites are removed, but he is sometimes puzzled. "How are we to tell when a colored boy's nose or ears are frozen?" he asked.

Hugged the Stove Too Closely.

An incident of the blizzard in Chicago was seen in a Madison street car. Sitting close beside the stove, which was glowing with heat, was a woman who wore a fur cloak. Of a sudden there was a flash and the garment burst into a flame.

MR. WILSON ACCEPTS.

Practical Farmer of Iowa Chosen for Secretary of Agriculture.

Congressman James Wilson of Iowa will be Secretary of Agriculture in President McKinley's cabinet, he having announced his acceptance of the portfolio.

James Wilson was born Aug. 16, 1835, in Ayrshire, Scotland, of parents belonging to the farming class. His parents immigrated to Connecticut in the spring of 1852 and began farming in the vicinity of Norwich. They went to Iowa in the fall of 1856, buying government land in Tama County. James is the oldest of a family of fourteen children—seven boys and seven girls. His father, John Wilson, was a stock farmer and began at an early day to fatten stock for the Eastern market. The family pursued diversified farming, having the dairy feature prominent from the beginning, as well as that of meat making. James was sent to the XIIth General Assembly to get the stock acts enacted, changing the custom permitting stock to run at large. He was re-elected to the XIIIth and XIVth General Assemblies, being speaker of the House in the last Assembly in which he served. The code of 1873 was enacted while he presided. He was elected to the XLIIId Congress during his last term in the House and was re-elected to the XLIVth Congress. He retired at the end of his second term to his farm, when he was appointed by Gov. Sherman a member of the Railway Commission. After serving one year he resigned to take his seat in the XLVIIIth Congress. At the end of this Congress he again retired to his farm, when several editors of county papers arranged with him to write weekly letters for their papers, which he has continued to do until the present time.

JAMES WILSON.

In 1891 he was elected director of the Iowa station and professor of agriculture by the trustees of the Iowa Agricultural College, a position he has held up to the present time.

FARM ANIMAL FIGURES.

Hogs Show Increase in Spite of Serious Losses by Cholera.

The Orange Judd Farmer says: "In spite of serious loss from cholera and other forms of sickness in Indiana and parts of Nebraska, and the most severe loss ever known in Iowa, the total number of hogs, estimated at 47,546,000, shows an increase over last year of 3 per cent. Cheap corn and a better profit in marketing it on the hoof rather than in the measure induced more general breeding than usual. The increase in numbers in Illinois, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska exceeds the loss in Iowa. To prevent misapprehension of the market situation, it might be said that an expectation of marketing up to July 1 about equal to last year would not seem unreasonable. Sheep show a decline in numbers of about 4 per cent, but the slaughter of flocks has now ceased and a period of rapidly increasing numbers is now at hand. The demand for ewes for flock foundation has already added 20 per cent to the value of all sheep in the country. The total number is estimated at 31,455,000, with an average value of $1.95 per head. Horses reach a total of 15,623,000, a decline of 1.5 per cent; milch cows, 18,113,000, an increase of 2 per cent; other cattle, 32,647,000, practically an unchanged number."

PUBLIC DEBT STATEMENT.

Shows Increase for January of Over Fourteen Millions of Dollars.

The statement of the public debt shows the debt, less cash in the treasury on Jan. 31, to have been $1,007,008,317, an increase for the month of $14,078,735. This increase is accounted for by a decrease of nearly $13,000,000 in the cash on hand. The decrease in the cash is the result of the redemption of $9,586,000 in matured Pacific railroad bonds, which will be held as a debt against the company, and the interest payments for the month, which amounted to $6,764,036. The debt proper, independent of the cash on hand, was increased during the month by $2,120,776, which is chargeable to the increase in the amount of national bank notes outstanding.

The comparative statement of the Government receipts and expenditures shows the total receipts during January to have been $24,316,994 and the expenditures $30,269,389. This leaves a deficit for the month of $5,952,395, and for the seven months of the present fiscal year a deficit of $43,854,792. The deficit for the same seven months of last year was $18,686,377. The receipts from customs during the last month amounted to $11,276,874, a falling off of over $5,100,000 as compared with January, 1896. There was also a slight falling off in the receipts from internal revenue.

WHEAT ALL OVER THE WORLD.

Grain Is Always Being Harvested in Some Part of the Globe.

The wheat crop is always being harvested somewhere. Just now, while the American farmer is not thinking of wheat, the crop of Australia, Chili and the Argentine Republic is being put on the market. In February and March the fields of upper Egypt and those of India are harvested. That of lower Egypt, which is irrigated by the overflowing of the Nile, is harvested in April, while Syria, Cyprus, Persia and Asia Minor also gather crops during that month. Cuba's wheat will also be gathered in April.

Texas is the first of our States to send wheat to the market. This it does during May, at the same time that the fields of Algeria, central Asia, China, Japan and Morocco are making their yields. In June those of California, Oregon, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, the Carolinas, Tennessee, Virginia, Kentucky, Kansas, Arkansas, Utah, Colorado, Missouri, Turkey, Greece, Italy, Spain, Portugal and the south of France are harvested. July sees the crops in the other American States and all except the northernmost part of Europe harvested. Russia then begins to gather her grain, more being harvested in August, when Manitoba, lower Canada, North Dakota and the northernmost countries of Europe are the scenes of the harvest. Sweden, Norway and northern Russia are the only wheat fields covered with the golden grain in September and October. But just as these crops are gathered the crops of Peru and South Africa are ready, and in December New South Wales gathers her harvest.

HORSE MEAT TEA.

It Is Being Sold Extensively in Chicago for Beef Tea.

A new and somewhat serious problem has confronted the health authorities of Chicago. Extract of horse meat under the name of beef tea is being sold in a large number of saloons and in other places in the city. The sale of the stuff under any name is a violation of a city ordinance, and its consumption as food, except when its preparation has been conducted according to most rigid rules, is declared by those in a position to know to be very dangerous.

This horse tea is prepared in large quantities just outside of the city limits. It is brought in bulk to a certain place in the city, where it is placed in bottles and labels are put upon them. All of these labels assert that the stuff is Liebig's extract of beef, expressly prepared for bottling purposes. Around the neck of the jar is pasted a pink slip which states that the contents are derived from fresh beef and of a quality guaranteed to be of the best.

Horses are cheap just now and the poor, gaunt, broken-down creatures are bought in large numbers at a price averaging about $2.50 a head. The hide is sold for about what was paid for the horse. The chunks and other parts devoid of fat are put into great cauldrons and boiled down into "beef tea." When the mass has been boiled sufficiently and reaches the proper consistency, it is highly spiced and put into barrels. Sometimes this is sold in bulk, but the greater part is put in jars and sold to the city trade. Then it is peddled around to all the saloons which have placed orders for the stuff, believing it, it is alleged, to be real beef extract. They can get it for $1.50 a pound, whereas the genuine article costs from $2.50 to $3.00 a pound.

When a jar of genuine extract of beef is placed side by side with one containing horse derivative the difference in the odor is at once apparent, the latter having a certain rank smell which the high spicing, although intended for that purpose, will not kill. Whoever will apply this test need not be deceived.

A New Presidential Office.

President-elect McKinley has had drawn a bill changing the official title of the President's private secretary to that of secretary to the President. Mr. McKinley has in mind a plan to enlarge the powers and add to the dignity of the office and to cause it to rank with that of members of the cabinet. It is said that he has asked Hon. Bellamy Storer, the Cincinnati lawyer and ex-Congressman, to accept the position, representing that under the new administration the office of Secretary to the President, which at present is that of a clerk and chamberlain of the Executive Mansion, will hereafter be one of great dignity and influence, the incumbent of which is to be the confidential legal adviser of the President of the United States.

A Surplus of Gold.

Just at the present time the treasury of the United States is enjoying the novel experience of being in possession of more gold than it knows what to do with. The total cash balance in the treasury at the close of business Wednesday was $229,920,399, and of this amount no less than $143,889,380 was in free gold, available for current expenses, or to act as a reserve to redeem the outstanding paper money. This leaves in the treasury as a fund to be used for ordinary purposes only $86,031,019. This is far from being an enormous sum when the extensive operations of the Government are taken into consideration. The treasury is running behind still, and for the first month of the year the excess of expenditures over receipts is $7,293,516 and the deficit for the fiscal year thus far is over $45,000,000.

Arthur Palmer, of New York, was arrested at the Planters' Hotel, St. Louis, Mo. He is a handsome, well-dressed man of 45 years old and had been at the hotel a week registered under the name of Paul Jones. Sheriff Johnson of Westchester County, N. Y., had wired that Palmer murdered his mother, brother and sister about nine days ago. Palmer is supposed to be insane.

REED BREAKS THE RECORD.

Will Be the Father and Probably the Speaker of the House.

Thomas B. Reed will be the father of the House of the Fifty-fifth Congress, and in all probability will be Speaker also, which will break the record, as no one ever was Speaker and father at the same time. Reed's friends say that he is still robust enough to wear both honors creditably.

It caused surprise when it was discovered that Mr. Reed had been a member of the House longer than any one else. He was elected to the Forty-fifth Congress in 1877 and has been in service ever since. Judge Culberson, of Texas, was elected in 1875, and was father of the House in the session of the last Congress, but he has given way to another Democrat, John W. Crawford. Congressman Harmer, of Philadelphia, was elected in 1871, but he was out in 1875.

THOS. B. REED.

Another old member is Gen. Bingham, of Philadelphia, who was elected in 1879, two years later than Mr. Reed. Benton McMillin, of Tennessee, was elected in 1879. Joseph Cannon, of Illinois, was elected in 1873; but he got into trouble through lapsus linguae in a stormy debate in 1880 and failed to be returned for the Fifty-second Congress.

Galusha A. Grow, of Pennsylvania, was a member of Congress back in 1849, when he was Speaker of the House. He and Mr. Reed are the only living ex-Speakers now members of the House of Representatives. Mr. Grow, however, was out of politics from the Thirty-seventh to the Fifty-third Congress.

FRANCE WANTS A TREATY.

The European Republic Wishes to Abolish War's Possibility with Us.

The initiative taken by Great Britain and this country relative to an arbitration treaty between them is closely followed by France. Rather, indeed, France claims the distinction of being the pioneer in arbitration proceedings, for as long ago as July, 1895, the minister of foreign affairs, M. Handtaux, was desirous of having a treaty of arbitration established between the great republic of Europe and the great republic of America. The affair, however, never came to a head.

Now, however, that a treaty has been arranged between Great Britain and the United States, France is desirous for the drafting of a similar treaty with this country. Her public men strongly advocate it and it is proposed by some of them to immediately bring the matter before the Chamber of Deputies.

Let us hope that the matter may be pushed to a satisfactory conclusion so that never may the sword be raised between the chivalric French people and the republic here which they sacrificed lives and wealth to found.

Melting Snow to Obtain Water.

Many complaints of the scarcity of water were made at the city hall in Chicago. In many houses on the West Side residents were unable to get water above the first floor. In many places the pipes were frozen and there was no water at all. It was no unusual thing to see people scraping up snow and taking it into the house to melt for washing and drinking purposes.

Mrs. James Smith buried her Irish setter dog Franklin in the Lexington (Ky.) cemetery at the feet of her husband's grave. She is the widow of Samuel M. Smith, a retired New York broker, who raised the dog from a pup.

W. H. McDoel, receiver of the new Monon Railroad, has filed his report for December. It shows: Receipts, $556,630.88; disbursements, $391,566.45; balance on hand, $165,064.43.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Supreme Court Says an Indianapolis Concern Caused a Death and Is Liable for Damages—Sensation in Orphans' Home at Decatur.

Gas Company Is Liable.

The Supreme Court held in the case of James B. Coy against the Indianapolis Gas Company that where a gas company having the monopoly of furnishing natural gas to the people of a town undertakes to furnish gas to a consumer and afterward, through its negligence and without sufficient legal excuse, fails to furnish the gas at a time when the weather makes a fire necessary, and the consumer is unable to obtain other fuel, and this fact causes the consumer's children to become sick and die, the gas company is liable to damages for the death of the children. Mr. Coy's little daughter was taken ill, and he notified the gas company of the insufficiency of fuel and demanded a larger supply. It was not furnished and the child died from the effects of the cold.

Faith Cure Was Not Relished.

Mrs. Catherine Sprunger, matron of the Berne Orphans' Home at Decatur, was arrested for applying the faith cure to one of the inmates and not obtaining a physician's services. One of the little children in the home swallowed some poison by mistake and almost died from its effects. Mrs. Sprunger prayed for the child's recovery, but it grew no better. Some visitors to the home noticed the child's dangerous condition and called a physician, who soon restored it to health. The authorities were notified and a warrant for the matron's arrest followed.

All Over the State.

William C. McMillan, aged 75 years, died at his home at Charlestown, of pneumonia.

At Hobart, Fred Klanson, a saloonkeeper, committed suicide by taking poison in the presence of his two sons, 10 and 12 years old.

A natural gas explosion occurred in the saloon of William Alberts of Upland. The building was a two-story frame and was a total wreck.

Smallpox has broken out near Brookville. The health officers certify that Mrs. Charles Davis and her small daughter are both victims of it.

On Monday evening robbers relieved Frank Mayr, a South Bend jeweler, of a number of diamonds and other jewelry worth $1,000 or $2,000. The Mayr store is in the very heart of the business district. Some choice stock has been displayed in a glass case in front of the store. Between 6 and 7 o'clock the lock on the case was broken and nearly all of the precious stones were taken.

Fire broke out in the north wing of the Denison Hotel at Indianapolis Friday night almost over the dining room, which was just ready to be opened for supper. Inside of an hour nearly $20,000 damage was done by the blaze and the flood of water that was poured into the building. This is the third fire in the Denison House this winter. Two years ago the south half of the hotel was partly destroyed by fire. During the fire Friday night the new standpipe machine of the fire department fell because of poor management. It cost recently $5,000 and is said to be ruined.

At noon Friday a Big Four passenger train at Easton ran into an open switch and its locomotive dashed into the engine of a Big Four freight train standing on the siding. Both engines were dismantled and the mail and dining cars badly wrecked. The engineers and firemen escaped by jumping. Engineer Lamb of the passenger train reversed his engine before leaping. No one was seriously injured, though the passengers were thrown from their seats and bruised. The trainmen and mail clerks were hurled to the floor and stunned. The operative who left the switch open thought the passenger train had passed.

Muncie firemen to the number of a half dozen are suffering from being frozen at a fire while the thermometer was standing 15 degrees below zero. They worked three hours at the home of C. E. Wiley, and when done their clothes had to be cut off. Mrs. Wiley discovered the fire and awoke her husband, who ran downstairs, leaving her and the babe. The woman followed with the babe in her arms, but, blinded with smoke, stumbled and fell from the head to the foot of the stairs. She clung to the child and neither was dangerously injured. The dwelling house of Nelson Harry was entirely destroyed by fire, with all its contents.

An insurance case of considerable interest has just been decided in the Circuit Court at Kokomo. Two years ago the general store of Z. Friermood at Sims was burned. It was insured for $4,300 in the Citizens' of Evansville, the Vernon Trust and the Indiana. An adjuster settled with Friermood for $500, taking his receipts. Later the assured sued, alleging that the adjuster, by misrepresentation and intimidation, effected the settlement for one-fifth the face of the policies when he was on a sick bed. The jury found for the plaintiff, awarding him the full amount of the policies with 6 per cent interest.

At Dundee, Joseph Boxell, 25 years old, shot Miss Ora Brotherton, 16 years old, in the temple, then fired a bullet into his own head, killing himself instantly. The bullet fired at Miss Brotherton passed clear through her head. She is still living, but will die. It was a case of unrequited love. At 6:30 Wednesday evening Boxell went to Brotherton's house and was met at the door by the girl, who told him not to enter, as her parents would not permit her to see him. Boxell said, "Well, we'll die together," and then he fired the bullets. Miss Brotherton belongs to one of the wealthiest families in the county. Boxell was ignorant and uncouth.

Mrs. W. B. Hayne, one of the oldest residents of Wabash, died in that city of heart failure.

At Linton, fire destroyed one of the Island Coal Company's tenements. Two children, aged 1 and 3 years, were burned to death.

At Jeffersonville, Mrs. George Madison gave apples to the children. Immediately after eating Artie, 19 months old; James, 4 years old; Lulu, 8 years old, and a boy of 5 were taken with strychnine poisoning. The first three children died, and the other is very ill. Mrs. Madison is also ill. The case is mysterious.

Fifteen of the colored men who kidnaped William Walker and took him to the country to flog him pleaded guilty to the charge of assault and battery at Terre Haute. The prosecutor thought it would be difficult to prove white-capping, legally known as riotous conspiracy.

For the first time in the history of Indiana Supreme Court, a woman appeared Wednesday before the judges at Indianapolis as a practicing attorney. Miss Caroline Hendricks made an oral argument on behalf of a woman client, the case involving a married woman's right to her husband's property. Miss Hendricks graduated last June from the law school of the University of Indianapolis.

THE INDIANA SOLONS

One of the most interesting questions before the Legislature is the proposition to legalize Sunday baseball in Indianapolis. It has already developed as many enemies in outside towns who send in petitions for preserving the honor of the State capital as the anti-cigarette bill has friends. Senator New, who introduced the baseball bill, is editor of the Indianapolis Journal. He is a man of liberal notions and privately favors the bill, but has done nothing to help it along. Hardly a day passes that he does not present a petition against the bill, the petitions being sent to him by church organizations and women societies who are there lobbying for the anti-cigarette bill. Mr. New, being thus placed in the position of opposing his own bill, affords considerable amusement for his brother Senators. But the friends of the bill in Indianapolis are legion, and they have not been idle. The colleges are getting together against the bill intended to stop football playing. Gov. Mount has indicated to members of the Legislature that he is opposed to the principle of the numerous bills creating separate judicial courts for many of the counties now applying for the same. This is the nearest to anything like a direct suggestion from the Governor to the Legislature, and as it is made along the line of economy it will have weight with those who are seeking to have these separate courts created. The Governor believes that this movement is the result of activity on the part of lawyer politicians who are desirous of creating more judgeships and court offices for party spoils. It means an additional expense of many thousand dollars to each county securing a separate court.

Monday Senator Newby introduced a resolution to throw out two more Democratic representatives because they were elected from what is called a double district, and which the Supreme Court had already declared was an unconstitutional district. This district is made up of the three Counties of Clinton, Montgomery, and Boone, and the Senators elected were the Populist William B. Gill, the only Populist in the Senate, and the Democrat James A. Campbell. The unconstitutionality lies in the fact that neither of these counties has enough population for a separate Senator, but all three together have enough for two. Accordingly, the Democrats threw all three together, giving each county an illegal right to vote for two Senators, one more than its voting strength called for. The resolution went to the election committee. Monday afternoon was set for a discussion of the anti-cigaret bill in the House, and the debate was long and loud. Petitions for the total prohibition of the sale of cigarets in the State were presented from nearly half the counties, Elkhart County leading with one seventy-six feet long. Women lobbyists were present in droves. The conservative members argued that a prohibitive measure would never be enforced, and declared in favor of making it illegal to sell to minors. Finally, a substitute bill prohibiting the sale of all tobacco in any form to minors was accepted as the best compromise measure, and it was passed by a vote of 83 to 3. The Senate also passed a straight anti-cigaret bill prohibiting its sale and use in the State. Each House has now passed two bills on the subject, one each licensing the sale of cigarets and one each prohibiting use to minors. It is expected that they will agree on the one preventing the sale and use of cigarets to minors.

Governor Mount Wednesday sent to the House vetoes on two bills, one establishing a Superior court in Grant County and another creating separate judicial circuits of the counties of Howard and Tipton. The House sustained both vetoes. Representative Fornshall introduced a bill to make it a felony for a lobbyist to enter upon the floor of either branch of the legislature.

The Legislature has come to the conclusion that the Chicago people who own hunting preserves in Northern Indiana need regulating. The recent shooting of farmers in Lake County was Thursday made the excuse in the House for passing a bill aimed at the Chicagoans. The specific provision of the measure is: "That it shall be unlawful for any person to pursue or kill within this State any quail, ruffed grouse or pinnated grouse for purposes of sale, barter, traffic or removal from the State, or to sell, barter, keep, expose or offer for sale or remove from this State any quail, ruffed grouse or pinnated grouse caught or killed in the State of Indiana." It is provided that the person who violates the law shall be fined $1 for every quail or grouse killed and shipped from the State.

Lew Wallace's Suggestion.

Even the freight department of a railroad has its humorous incidents. The Chicago Times-Herald narrates one:

When Gen. Lew Wallace was serving as territorial governor of New Mexico a few years ago, he shipped home to Indiana a carload of curios for his friends. The collection for the most part consisted of boxes of minerals, furs, Indian blankets and beadwork, and with them was included a diminutive Mexican burro or donkey intended for a neighbor's child as a pet.

When the car reached its destination the freight agent in checking up the contents of the car misunderstood the word "burro," and thinking that it was the phonetic attempt of some illiterate railroader to spell "bureau," was unable to find any piece of furniture to fit the bill of lading. On the other hand, he found in the car a long-eared donkey not included in the bill.

According to custom, whenever irregularities are discovered, he promptly telegraphed back to the shipping point: "Car No. 27,390, Albuquerque, consigned Wallace, arrived, minus one bureau, plus one jackass. Please trace and notify."

General Wallace himself dictated the answer: "Change places with the jackass."

The World's Sweets.

By the year 1770 sugar had become a staple product of Louisiana.

Some writers say that there is a variety of sugar cane indigenous to America.

The longest run in candy has been made by chocolate creams and caramels.

Icing or powdered sugar is reduced to the consistency of fine flour by passing it through heavy rollers, set very close together.

The cultivation of sugar extended from India to Persia some time in the ninth century.

Maltose is that variety of sugar produced by the action of diastase on starch.

In 1803 there were eighty-one sugar estates in the delta of the Mississippi alone.

Sugar is boiled, more or less, for candy, according to the kind to be made.

It is said that the dark varieties of sugar cane resist disease better than the light.

A MAN OF THE WORLD.

A man more kindly, in his careless way,
Than many who profess a higher creed;
Whose fickle love might change from day to oday,
And yet be faithful to a friend in need;
Whose manners covered, through life's outs and ins,
Like charity, a multitude of sins.

A man of honor, too, as such things go;
Discreet and secret, qualities of use;
Selfish, but not self-conscious, generous, slow
To anger, but most ready to excuse;
His wit and cleverness consisted not
So much in what he said as what he got.

His principles one might not quite commend,
And they were much too simple to mistake;
Never to turn his back upon a friend,
Never to lie but for a woman's sake;
To take the sweets that came within his way,
And pay the price, if there were price to pay.

Idle, good looking, negatively wise,
Lazy in action, plausible in speech;
Favor he found in many women's eyes,
And valued most that which was hard to reach.
Few are both true and tender, and he grew
In time a little tenderer than true.

Knowing much evil, half-regrettingly good,
And we regret a childish impulse lost,
Wearied with knowledge best not understood,
Bored with the disenchantment that it cost.
But in conclusion, with no feelings hid,
A gentleman, no matter what he did.
—Looking Glass.

A TRAGEDY OF FRIENDSHIP.

"This last little Indian scare reminds me of something that happened some twenty years ago," said the ranchman, flicking the ashes from his cigar. "I might call it the story of a modern Damon and Pythias but for the denouement, which, I warn you, is not a particularly joyful one, still, if you fellows don't mind the tragic, here goes:

"About twenty years ago two young fellows, whom we'll call Tom and Jack, started out to seek their fortunes ranching in Arizona. The ranch fever was just then about at its height. England and Australia as well as our own east were sending out idiots in droves to the West. Young fellows, many of them well educated and of good birth and brought up to every luxury, simply went wild over the primitive freedom of that adventurous life, until, with capital exhausted, downright hard work and privation inevitable, they came to wish—heaven knows how bitterly some of them wished it—that they had never exchanged the commonplace comforts of civilization for the intoxicating uncertainty of frontier life. These two youngsters, having a tidy bit of capital between them on coming of age, concluded to invest it in cattle, and fixed upon Arizona as the most favorable spot for their financial experiment.

"In a surprisingly short time they had conquered every difficulty and made a good start. They built themselves a snug little house, were joint owners of quite a bunch of cattle, and had several boys as helpers. They had always been the closest of chums, these two, born in the same town, schoolmates in boyhood, classmates at the university—you never knew two chaps more devoted.

"Tom was a big fellow, blond, with a ruddy skin, honest blue eyes, and a laugh—well, I tell you it did a fellow good just to hear him roar in his hearty way when any one got off a joke.

"Jack was a little fellow, a bit delicate, not really equal to roughing it. He used to complain that Tom did the biggest share of the work but Tom never would hear a word of that, and while they smoked before the rough stone fireplace, in their one room, of evenings, to hear Tom defer to Jack's judgment and consult about business matters was to think Tom's little partner one of the biggest and cleverest business heads of the age.

"For some time there had been rumors of an Indian outbreak. The Apaches were getting restless and already several small bands had stolen away from the reservation to hiding places in the mountains. There was, of course, a big scare, people leaving homes and property, especially where there were women and children to be considered.

"Tom and Jack talked it over and decided to stick to the ranch. To leave was to lose everything, the hard-won result of months of toil; for, of course, if they deserted, the boys couldn't be expected to stay. There was a bare chance of things blowing over, and in any case watchfulness and systematic defense might save them, if the worst did come.

"So the ranch was provisioned for a siege and fortified in every way; adjacent outbuildings, which might through nearness to the main building become dangerous, were removed—everything, in short, which could insure safety when the critical moment arrived was anticipated and done.

"One day a cowboy from a neighboring ranch came riding in like mad, hat gone, blood streaming down his face.

His tale was of the worst. His ranch had been attacked, the house burned, and every one killed but himself. He, although closely pursued, had succeeded in eluding the Apaches, who were, however, close behind him.

"Tom—he was naturally the leader—at once called in all the boys; doors and windows were barricaded, last details of defense completed. The horses were brought inside to a place already prepared for them, so that if need be there would be means for attempted flight and possible escape. Every man had his station, some at the loopholes, some at the water casks, in readiness to put out the fires which would inevitably be started.

"It was not a long wait. In a very short time the ranch was surrounded by a large band of whooping devils, who evidently expected to find the house as unprotected as the one they had just destroyed, for, without a moment's pause, they made a wild rush toward it.

"They were met by a withering volley from the various loopholes and fell back with considerable loss, which, as a wholesome lesson, had its effect, but yet undoubtedly roused the Indians to a still greater pitch of frenzy.

"Three days went by, days of constant vigilance and steady fighting. The Apaches tried every dodge known to their mode of warfare without any success. Tom's really masterly line of defense and the plucky co-operation of the boys seemed to make it probable that they would be able to hold out until the arrival of the troops, who were known to be hot on the trail of the Indians. The greatest danger to be feared was fire. Already the Apaches had made several attempts to fire the house by hurling burning brands against it, but the boys at the water casks had been too quick for them, while the aim of those at the loopholes was so deadly that none of the Indians had succeeded in getting near enough to really start a blaze which would be dangerous.

"Still, it was an anxious time. The days went by, the strain was beginning to tell on them all; several of them were wounded, and suffering had made them lost heart; they had given up hopes of the troops or of tiring out the Apaches. The Indian loss, indeed, had been so heavy that everyone knew the price which would be exacted by savage revenge. Still, there was nothing to do but to hold on. The Apaches lay hidden, but if by chance anyone showed himself at the ranch there was an instant rain of spattering bullets.

"To complicate maters, the water supply began to run alarmingly low; there was barely enough for the horses and men, none to spare for the lavish use demanded in putting out even a small blaze. The suspense was horrible. Tom saw that something would have to be done. That something was very suddenly precipitated by the Indians themselves.

"Creeping up as close to the house as possible, they made a series of rushes at the side least defended, and each time, despite the lass of one or two more of their number, succeeded in throwing a lot of brush up against the house. This was as dry as tinder and a last well-directed brand set fire to the heap.

"Water was at once thrown on the flames, but they were almost immediately beyond control.

"'Boys,' said Tom, as the heat grew momentarily more intense, 'we can't die like rats in a hole. There's only one chance. We must cut our way through. The horses are here; we'll go out in a bunch. Some of us are sure to be dropped, but some of us may get through. It's our only hope; if we have to die it'll be with our boots on and our guns in our hands.'

"The men answered with a ringing cheer. It was what they wanted—to die, if need be, with their boots on; die fighting.

"'Jack,' said Tom, as he tightened his saddlegirths, and looked carefully at every strap, 'Jack, dear old boy, you and I go out together. We've done our best to save the ranch, but they've downed us at last. We'll show them what we're made of, though. Steady, now, boys, until I say go!'

"No one faltered, even in that oven of crackling flame, although the exultant yells outside indicated only too plainly the welcome which awaited them. The wounded had been fastened to the saddles, the horses were ready—none too soon, for the animals were quivering with fear. The door was thrown open, the signal given and with the well-known wild cowboy yell they dashed out.

"Straight as a bullet, in a solid bunch, all yelling like demons, they rode for the Apaches. Taken by surprise, but only for a second, by the sight of the horses, the Indians rushed to their own ponies. Whoops and shots rang out, but close together the little band rode, Tome and Jack gallantly leading.

"To right and left they emptied their revolvers, while many a red devil bit the dust, and also, alas, many a saddle was emptied, until at last they were through—all that was left, that is.

"'Hurray!' yelled Tom. 'Now for a race! They are after us, Jack. But never mind; we'll make straight for Seven Mile canyon. If we can only get through safe and sound they'll never catch us, and then it's clear thirty miles to Dolores.'

"His gaze swept the ranks. Only five of them left, and that bloodthirsty pack in the rear! Even his splendid, buoyant spirit qualied for the moment.

"Then as he looked at Jack—Jack game, but weakened by the siege, pale from excitement, blood-stained, hardly human in appearance—his nerve came back. With set teeth he dashed on. Crack! One more empty saddle—another man gone. As they reached the canyon the last man tumbled—only Tom and Jack had survived the deadly hailstorm of lead. But, as Tom's unspoken prayer of gratitude for escape formed itself, Jack fell forward on the neck of his horse.

"'My God! You're hit!'

"'Never mind; don't stop,' and Jack clung to the pommel of his saddle for support. They were in the canyon now, threading its rocky labyrinth with cautious haste.

"Tom, with thankfulness, heard the distant shouts grow fainter. How horribly livid Jack's face was in the dim light!

"'There's no use; we've got to stop,' he said, springing from his horse. 'Here, let me fix you up.' And as he spoke he bandaged the wound, a nasty one in the side.

"'Hold on, Jack; you must hold on until we get through the canyon.' There was a savage light in Tom's eyes. 'Can't you manage it?'

"'I'll try,' murmured Jack, faintly, and as the sounds of pursuit again came nearer both men grimly urged their horses to a faster pace. Loss of blood was telling on Jack. Tom saw with anguish that he could barely keep his seat on the horse. On, for a chance to exert his strength for this weaker companion, his boyhood's, manhood's trusty comrade! To die on the field of battle was nothing, but to die cornered, trapped, perhaps tortured—God, it was too much!

"The canyon was nothing more than the bed of an old, dried-up stream, full of bowlders and loose stones. It was dangerous work dashing through at full speed, but there was no time to pick their way; they could only trust to luck.

"Suddenly Tom's horse came down with a crash. He had stepped into a hole and broken his leg. Luckily Tom was unhurt by the fall.

"'Quick! Up behind me,' gasped Jack.

"The Indians were at the mouth of the canyon. They soon gained rapidly upon a wearied horse carrying double, and presently a shout announced their discovery of the prostrated horse.

"Tom's soul sickened within him. Safety only thirty miles away. Life, but life for both? Impossible.

"He had rapidly reviewed the situation as they traversed the last few hundred yards of the canyon. A jaded horse, a double burden; one wounded almost unto death—for Jack was already a dead weight in his arms—all the noble, chivalrous quality of Tom's strong nature asserted itself. Jumping from the saddle as he reached the entrance to the canyon, he rapidly unfastened Jack's cartridge belt, threw his rifle to the ground, and wound his lariat with a few quick turns around the almost unconscious man, fastened him securely to the saddle.

"'Jack, dear old chap, you go on. I'll hold them here.'

"'No, no,' Jack struggled feebly, his tone was agonized. 'With me, Tom—or—die—together.'

"'I've always been the "boss" and I'm so still. Ride for Dolores and send back for me.' He threw his arms once around his friend in a tight embrace, and with one sharp cut of the rope started the horse off like a shot.

* * * * * * *

"Waking days afterward in Dolores from the stupor of unconsciousness, Jack found himself tenderly cared for by some of the townspeople who knew him, but unable even then to explain what had occurred. Fever set in, and for several weeks he hovered between life and death, constantly raving in the delirium of Tom, calling for him, beseeching him not to stay behind.

"The Apaches had been driven back, but were not completely subdued. But as soon as Jack was able to tell his terrible story a rescuing party was organized and hurried to Seven Mile Canyon with all the speed which was prudent.

"At first no trace of Tom could be found. Then behind a rock was discovered a pile of cartridge shells, and finally down in a little gully the skeleton of a man lying face downward upon the ground, one end of a rode tied about the neck, the other attached to a stake driven deep into the ground. Alongside was a fairylike skeleton fastened by a thong of rawhide to the same stake.

"From these mute witnesses those familiar with Apache methods were able to imagine the awful fate which had overtaken poor Tom.

"This is what must have happened: Taking cover behind a rock Tom had held the Indians in check as long as possible by pegging away every time a redskin gave him the opportunity to make one of his dead shots. As the ammunition ran low they gathered closer about him.

"To Tom—brave, heroic Tom—that mattered little; his aim was accomplished. Jack was safe on the road to Dolores.

"He must have been surprised and overpowered at the end, for he would certainly have reserved a last shot for himself rather than brave Indian torture. How they took him prisoner one does not know, but having suffered such severe loss at the ranch and in the canyon it is natural to suppose that the Apaches were wild with rage. Nothing could be too devilish a torture to inflict upon Tom.

"They tied his hands behind him, tied his feet, and taking him down into the sandy gully laid him on his face upon the ground, fastened him by a rope around his neck to the stake.

"In this part of Arizona rattlesnakes are more than numerous—they simply swarm. It was the work of a moment to catch a big snake by means of a loop of cord at the end of a pole and to tie him by a piece of rawhide through the tail to the same stake which imprisoned Tom.

"The snake, thinking itself free, tried to crawl away, found itself held by the rawhide, and, savage with anger, struck at the nearest thing, which was—poor Tom's face!

"But—mark the fiendishness of the torture—the snake could not quite reach Tom.

"The rope was just long enough to prevent the reptile from touching him, not long enough but that Tom must feel the agonizing possibility of being bitten.

"Again and again the snake struck, but fell short. Poor Tom! Parched with thirst, hungry, baked by the sun, taunted by his captors, what must have been his thoughts! Did he not feel that friendship had cost him too dear?"

"My God! it's too awful to contemplate——"

"He must have been tempted to crawl near the snake and end it all."

"Finally the shower counted upon by the Apaches came. It refreshed both the snake and the man, but—the effect of moisture upon the hempen rope was to shrink it!

"Can you understand? Can you see poor Tom, digging his toes into the sand, holding back with might and main as the pressure of the rope slowly brought him nearer and nearer to his fate?

"Upon the rawhide the rain had a different effect it stretched it—lengthened it.

"The snake, feeling invigorated by the rain, again tried to crawl away. Again it was held back; again, angry and vindictive, it struck at Tom, this time a little nearer his face—and again closer, as Tom, despite his superhuman effort, was being pulled toward the stake by the shortening rope.

"At last the snake struck home.

"Can you imagine the awful agony, the lingering death, the bones—picked by the vultures? Brave, noble Tom, who died to save a friend—bah! how this smoke gets into one's eyes."

* * * * * * *

It was not the smoke that troubled the ranchman's eyes—his cigar had long since gone out.

In the dead silence which followed his thoughts, to judge by his expression, were far away.

"By Jove, that was a man!" ejaculated the Idiot. "Did you know Tom?—ach!" for just then the cowboy caught him a most beautiful kick on the shin.

"I," said the ranchman, huskily, "I—was Jack."—New York Tribune.

Aluminum heel tips are coming in vogue in England, and bid fair to come into general use. The leather is better protected than in the ordinary manner, and they will not slip on the wooden pavement, which is quite an advantage.

HOW THE PEOPLE LIVE

DROWSY EXISTENCE OF THE CITIZENS OF HAVANA.

Military Display the Only Change in the Conditions Surrounding the Place—Coffee, Siesta, Promenades and Bull Fights Go On as Usual.

Few Indications of War.

While Cuba, as a whole, has been terrifically and completely changed by the violent upheavals of war, its chief city still sits on the shores of the northern sea, sunlit and odorous. Havana, too, has undergone changes, says the New York Herald, but the changes are not those of fire and sword and famine. It has become decidedly more military than a few years ago, but this is all. Its cafes, formerly haunted by well-dressed crowds of civilian Cubans and Spaniards, now clank with spurs and sabers and ring with brimstone gossip of trochas, of battles and red routs, where the men who formerly sat cheek by jowl in the restaurants have met in deadly conflict.

Havana is full of marching soldiers that signify nothing but harmless dress parades, relief detachments and the like. The civil guards still form on the Prado and sweep down between the trees to the tune of a lively Spanish quickstep, with rifles at all sorts of angles and their hippy-hoppy hats cocked over their eyes in a style that would be considered aggressive in any other country.

But the real life of the city moves on steadily and quietly, just as it will continue to move until the day of judgment, unless stricken by some mighty cataclysm. Across the blue waters of the bay the low white houses of Casa Blanca sleep under the shelter of the bushy hill. Farther away, beyond the tile-roofed sugar houses that are empty and deserted now, and on the high mesa of the palm-dotted prairie hill, are the sleepy houses of Regla, and farther still the village of Guanabocoa, where the insurgents have made things lively during the past month.

But outside of the bodies of moving troops you could not discover a sign of war in Havana's front with a microscope. The lovely land conveys no hint of the savage and bloody exterior. The muleteers still perambulate the lonely roads with their enormous pack saddles, crooning to their sun-dreaming animals, while hammering them townward with their ragged heels.

"Venga, Moolah! Arrica, Moolah!" But Moolah, wise from experience, only lays his long ears back in dogged resentment, and plods on in sleepy comfort.

In Havana proper, while business is comparatively stagnant, there is still enough to give the usual air of slow and easy life to the streets. The narrow thoroughfares are swarming with low-topped carriages, beasts of burden, jostling drivers and negro women with such huge panniers on their heads that the mind tries in vain to grasp the effect of such a burden on the Caucasian brain. Some of these panniers are filled with bread. Others contain fruit and vegetables. Visitors have seen an Havana negro woman walking along the streets with a basket upon her head the size of a bureau, and smoking a cigar which for general size and black suggestions of nicotine has never been equaled. They are physical wonders, these tropic negresses.

RELIGIOUS PROCESSION IN HAVANA.

OBISPO, THE PRINCIPAL BUSINESS STREET IN HAVANA.

The morning life of Havana is brisk. Then everything looks dewy and fresh and bright, and whatever odors there may be have not yet risen. Odors are late risers in Havana, although it may be truthfully observed that many of them never go to sleep at all. In the morning come the peddlers, with their strange wares and shrill cries. Here and there half dozens of asses may be seen waddling along with full udders of milk. They are attended by a ragged owner, who milks into a measure whatever you may choose to buy. This is a decidedly comfortable way of running a milk route, and you are sure of getting the pure article.

Said to Be Wholesome.

This asses' milk is said to be very wholesome, too. There is no tuberculosis about a jackass, except in his heels. On one occasion the writer saw one of these lowly and intelligent beasts kick a yellow dog over the counter of a "casa de cambio," or "money changer's," and knock down $187 in gold coins that were stacked in the rear. Only one stack was left standing, and it was generally regarded as a "spare." But the jackass didn't care much about it. He simply closed his eyes and kept on thinking long eared thoughts.

All Havana breakfasts on black coffee and oranges. Somehow Americans always found this poor fare for a matutinal Anglo-Saxon stomach. The oranges are the best in the world, but the coffee has the strength of a porous plaster. After coffee at 9 o'clock comes a period of comparative activity for Cubans. They hustle about and attend to their marketing and other necessary duties. They go shopping in little peseta carriages, drawn by small and sturdy Cuban horses. But young and pretty Cuban girls do not go shopping unaccompanied. In fact, they never go out on the streets alone. They are always accompanied by a forbidding relative with a machete a yard long.

All the courting of Cuban sweethearts is done through perpendicular iron window bars three inches apart. This is pretty hard lines on anybody accustomed to the delights of a solitary parlor, low gas jets and a rocking chair built wide enough for two. In fact, the Cuban youths have a rather hard time of it. The writer has seen more than one of them come into the cafes with the red marks of the iron window bars along his face. But just now the boys are all away to the wars and the maids have no sweethearts.

They Make Siesta.

About noontime the average Cuban becomes too strong to work. He must have his siesta, and the world may wag on as it will while he takes it. Each member of an establishment has his own particular spot in which to take a nap, and it is a very rude thing for another to pre-empt it. The writer always knew where to find the barkeeper of one particular cafe when he wanted a "rabo de gallo" at siesta time. He would reach over the bar and prod vigorously around among the empty bottles and buckets until he struck a protest. Then he had him. "Here, Chico! Get up and attend to business."

"Si, hombre! Si! Que dice? Oh, dos mil cientos."

Then he would fish out an old lottery ticket, of which he had been dreaming, lay his head on the counter and go to sleep again, leaving the cafe in charge of his 6-year-old daughter, who ran about the place in a state of unblushing and Eve-like nudity.

Siesta time lasts anywhere from noon to 3 o'clock. Then Havana yawns, stretches itself and resumes business where it left off a few hours before. Even the beggars, who have also had their siesta, begin to show signs of almost human intelligence. They creep out from their various lairs and begin languidly to ply their trade. The blind girl, who put her own eyes out in a fit of pique, starts on her sunlit journey in tow of her brother. The man with the horrible leprous foot, bare and terrifying, stretches himself out in the shade of a deserted building on the Prado like a huge and offensive spider.

Many of these beggars are manufactured to order in Spain or the Canary islands, and they are certainly champions in their classes. There is one old fellow, ragged and with a yellow, withered face, like a boiled onion, gray whiskered, pursy and pop-eyed, who walks about the streets. And yet he used to be one of Havana's most wealthy and prominent merchants. He lost all his money through drink and morphine, and at present has just sense enough to beg for more. He has a staring, strabismic eye, which he winks broadcast, and a dicebox laugh. He is a Havana landmark.

In the Evening.

In the evenings the church bells begin to ring. They do not ring with the slow, measured cadence heard in Northern climes, but whang away as if hit with a hammer. And such is really the case. Two men climb up into the belfries and pound away for dear life until the ethics of Cuban bell ringing are fulfilled.

After nightfall begins the most attractive features of Havana life to a foreigner. The parks are filled with a strolling, chattering crowd. The Cuban girls and their mammas, while hooded in their mantillas, are dressed in the lightest and fluffiest of pink, blue and white frocks. The bands play, the seats are filled with spectators, officers, mashers and plantation owners, and the scene is full of life and movement. Ten cents "plata" is the price for a seat on one of these benches, and the revenue is supposed to go to the municipal authorities. It is doubtful, however, if a tithe of it ever finds its way into the public coffers. There are three collectors, and they never overlook anything, that any man could discover. There are no tickets to punch, no cash registers or bells to ring. It seemed to me to be one gigantic game of "grab."

A CAFE IN HAVANA.

Over in the Inglaterra and the neighboring resorts the cafes are full of Spanish officers, laughing, drinking, talking and smoking their endless cigarettes. Whenever an American makes his appearance they scowl and make remarks that are very audible even if not understood.

Every well regulated Cuban is afraid of the moon. There is no kind of lunacy that is not attributed, either directly or indirectly, to the effects of moonlight. Mothers teach their children to avoid its rays as they would the smallpox. There is so much difference in the temperature of the Cuban sunlight and shadow that the sensitive constitutions of a rather delicate people feel the change dreadfully. In the first place the atmosphere is ever surcharged with moisture that boils and steams in the sun and grows cool in the shade, like the air at the bottom of a well. Then up comes the moon, with her attendant fogs, and gets all the glory of breeding rheumatism, colds, fevers and consumption. "Keep out of the moonlight," is a Cuban mother's first maxim.

Have Bull Fights Now.

During the first year of the present war there were no bull fights in Havana. They are being indulged in again, however, and are as thoroughly enjoyed as in ante-bellum days. There is one feature of these bull fights that is seldom dwelt upon by chroniclers of Spanish customs.

It is the "bull for the people." After the matadors have properly slaughtered their bulls an animal is brought in for the pastime of the spectators. Its horns are sawed off until their ends are about an inch and a half in diameter, enough to prevent it injuring anybody seriously. Then a gold piece is fastened to the end of one of its horns and the public is given an opportunity to take it off. And how the spectators rush to the fray! The writer saw a dozen sailors jump into the ring and fairly hack the bull to death before it had time to find out where it was. It was slashed with machetes until its hide would not have held pumpkins. It fought as well as it knew how, and on one occasion caught its most daring persecutor and tossed him a beautiful somersault over the ring fence. Not until the bull had fallen did the sailors get the gold piece.

Altogether, however, Havana cannot be called a beautiful place. It looms above the sea like a gaunt, white coral reef ridged about a blue pool of a bay, which it clutches in its rocky arms like a sapphire. The houses, small and plain and white, stand in long rows like the tombs of the dead, and it takes an Anglo-Saxon some time to get rid of this graveyard feeling.

Carpets are unknown in Havana hotels. The writer came across one once and was tempted to throw it into the street; it looked so stuffy and out of place. The smooth marble stones, which are universal, are very cool and grateful to the feet in this hot climate. With stone floors and broad windows without glass, the Cuban sleeping apartments are well adapted to the climate.

And the sunsets are dreams of loveliness. The western sky at times is one vast rose-colored ocean, flecked with small crimson cloudships that sail placidly along, fading gradually from orange to saffron and from saffron to purple and from purple to black. The writer has stood on the punta and watched the sun go down behind the western gulf. Twenty minutes later it was night and the lamps were glimmering along the Prado.

OSTRICH HUNTING.

Profitable Sport that Is Making the Birds Scarce.

An ostrich chase is very attractive sport; or, rather, the sale of booty is so great as to attract hunters. The Arabs give themselves to it with a real passion. Mounted on their fine little horses they try as much as possible to fatigue the ostrich, for as it is eight feet high and has very strong legs it possesses a quickness of movement which the best horse cannot attain. It has great endurance. Overtaken by the hunter, it seeks to defend itself with its feet and wings, but more often it still strives to escape by flight, uttering a plaintive cry. In fact, the ostrich is deprived of the power of flight by reason of its great size. The muscular force with which nature has endowed it is not equal to lifting such a weight. Its peculiar organization has made it the courier of the desert, where it is able to quickly traverse the almost limitless expanse. The Arab knows very well that it is the habit of the ostrich to make great detours about its nest in a circle. He chases it then without ceasing until it is almost there, when, worn out, it succumbs, concealing its head in the sand in order not to see its enemy, or instinctively hoping to escape a danger which it cannot see any more. This chase requires eight or ten hours, but it offers large rewards. The plumes are worth a considerable sum, the skin makes good leather and the Arabs are very fond of the flesh. Besides, in spite of the fact that it reproduces its species rapidly, the ostrich is all the time becoming rare, and it is hunted for export and domestication in other countries. It is one of Africa's great resources and may become a new source of prosperity to Algerians if they are willing to make the effort. The truth of the popular saying, "the stomach of an ostrich," has been confirmed recently by an autopsy on one, doubtless for a time captive, when the following was found in its stomach: A parasol handle, two keys, two great pieces of coal, a glove, a handkerchief, a pair of eyeglasses, a ring, a comb, three large rocks, the necks of two beer bottles, the sole of a shoe, a bell and a little harmonica.—Paris Univers Illustre.

The Horseshoe.

Every one knows how common it is in country districts to see horseshoes nailed against the doors of barns and cottages, as a harbinger of good-luck. This old custom has lately come under notice in a paper on the "Folklore of the Horseshoe," read by Dr. Robert Laurence before the American Folk-Lore Society. He believes that the custom of nailing up horseshoes originated in the rites of the Passover, the blood sprinkled on the doorposts and the lintel at the time of the great Jewish feasts marking the chief points of an arch, which is reproduced in the form of the horseshoe. It is also possible that the custom is traceable to the idea that the horse brings luck, for in legendary lore the animal has often been credited with supernatural gifts.

The Smallest Newspaper.

The smallest newspaper in the world is published at Guadalajara, in Mexico. Its title is El Telegrafo, and underneath is the announcement that the paper is an independent weekly periodical of politics and varied news. The monthly subscription is two-pence—weekly, a halfpenny. If is printed in eight columns, each four and a half inches long and one and a half inches wide, on thick manilla paper. And yet the staff includes an editor and director, an administrator or business manager, a responsible man or capitalist, and a printer. Among newspapers this tiny Sunday journal certainly occupies a unique position.

Pincers are made by a machine which, in one operation, cuts out the handle and jaw. The two parts are afterwards joined by hand.

It is queer how different things taste when eaten out of different dishes than the ones you have been used to.

NATIONAL SOLONS.

REVIEW OF THEIR WORK AT WASHINGTON.

Detailed Proceedings of Senate and House—Bills Passed or Introduced in Either Branch—Questions of Moment to the Country at Large.

The Legislative Grind.

The nominal business of the House Saturday was the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill, which was passed before adjournment, but much of the time was devoted to political discussion. The free distribution of seeds by the department of agriculture raised a lively discussion. Mr. Northway (Rep.) of Ohio asserted that Secretary Morton endeavored to discredit the custom by procuring poor seeds, and Mr. Bromwell (Rep.) of Ohio charged that a Minneapolis seed firm had attempted to bribe him by an offer of seeds free to refrain from calling the attention of Congress to the quality of the goods they furnished the department. An amendment was offered by Mr. Mercer for the free distribution to members of poultry, swine and other live stock, to illustrate his opposition to seed gifts. At the request of agricultural organizations of his State Mr. Hill of Connecticut proposed to strike out the seed items, but his proposition was lost. Speaker Reed voted for the first time this session, and against free seeds.

An unusually large number of bills were passed by the House Monday, but few of them of any considerable importance. The bills passed included the old bill which has been pending before Congress for so many years to retire John M. Quackenbush, who was court-martialed and suspended from the naval service in 1874 for drunkenness, as a commander under date of June 1, 1895; also a bill to reimburse the heirs of Albert Augustine, of Rose Hill, Iowa, in the sum of $350 for two cows destroyed in the Cayuse war of 1847. Bills were passed to authorize the Columbia and Red Mountain Railroad to construct a bridge across the Columbia river; to prevent the carrying of obscene literature and articles designed for indecent and immoral use from a State or territory into another State or territory; to prevent trespassing upon and the protection of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga and other national military parks; to amend an act entitled an act to repeal the timber culture laws and for other purposes (the act relates only to the entry of lands in the Sioux Indian reservation); to authorize the entry and patenting of lands containing petroleum and other mineral oils under the laws relating to placer mining (the purpose of the bill was to circumvent a ruling made by the secretary Aug. 7, 1896). The Nicaragua canal bill occupied the attention of the Senate most of the day, but no progress was made toward a final vote.

The feature of the Senate Tuesday was a very spirited debate on the conference report of the immigration bill. Mr. Gibson of Maryland opposed the report and Mr. Lodge defended it. After two hours' struggle the report went over and the Nicaragua Canal bill was taken up, Mr. Vilas continuing his remarks. Mr. Teller of Colorado also entered the debate in opposition to the measure. The House bill to allow the bottling of spirits in bond was reported favorably. The day in the House was very dull, nearly the whole session being devoted to debate on appropriation bills. The diplomatic and consular bill was passed and considerable progress made with the District of Columbia bill. The bill as passed carries $1,673,708. Resolutions arranging for the formal canvassing of the electoral vote of the last Presidential election to take place Wednesday were adopted.

The contested election case of Cornett versus Swanson, from the fifth Virginia district, occupied the attention of the House Wednesday. Three Republicans and three Democrats on the Elections Committee had reported in favor of the Democratic contestee, Mr. Swanson, and three Republicans offered a minority report recommending that the seat be declared vacant on the ground that a fair election could not be held under the Virginia election law. When the vote came to be taken the minority could not muster enough votes to call the yeas and nays, and Mr. Swanson's title to his seat was confirmed by an overwhelming viva voce vote. After a brief parliamentary struggle in the Senate the friends of the Nicaragua Canal bill were unable to hold a quorum and sit out the obstruction to that measure. The friends of the bill finally gave up hope of securing a quorum and yielded to an adjournment. Mr. Vilas continues to hold the floor.

The session of the Senate Thursday was one of unusual activity. Mr. Morrill endeavored to pass the bill prohibiting the use of intoxicants in the capitol building. This aroused the opposition of Mr. Hill of New York, who denounced the busybodies and mischief-makers inspiring this class of legislation. He moved to recommit the bill, but this was defeated by a vote of 27 yeas to 30 nays. However, he succeeded in prolonging the debate to 2 o'clock, when the bill was displaced by the Nicaragua Canal bill. The immigration bill was recommitted to conference, Mr. Lodge, in charge of the measure, adopting this course as a result of urgent appeals for a modification of the bill. Before this was done, however, a warm personal and political colloquy occurred between Mr. Lodge and Mr. Chandler on one hand and Mr. Gorman on the other. Mr. Vilas added another day to his speech against the Nicaragua Canal and had not concluded when the Senate adjourned. The proceedings in the House were very dull and almost entirely devoid of public interest. The major portion of the day was devoted to the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The House agreed to the Senate's request for a further conference on the immigration bill.

Brethren Come in on Every Train, A Large Attendance

Tuesday's Daily.

At noon it could be noticed that many strangers were in town, for visiting brethren came in on every train, and the streets put on a holiday appearance. This afternoon is to be devoted to lodge work, and in the evening there is a meeting in the Opera House. Then they adjourn to the hall for some order work, and later on will be the banquet. At this D. A. Garwood will be toastmaster, and the Rathbone Sisters are the hosts.

Among the grand and district officers here are Otto Kolb, G. C.; Union B. Hunt, G. V. C.; J. F. Willard, G. I.; Grank Bowers, G. K. of R. & S.; J. E. McDonald, G. M. A.; O. W. Christie, district deputy G. C.

At the lodge meeting this evening, U. S. Weaver receives 3d degree and Will McCrory the 2nd degree.

CHARLES F. JONES

Advertising Manager for Siegel, Cooper & Co., Talks About Advertising.

Charles F. Jones, manager of the advertising department for Siegel, Cooper & Co., and whose advertisements have in a few months made New York's "Big Store" famous in a recent talk on advertising said: "We expect to spend during the present year $300,000, or perhaps a little more, for advertising. About $50,000 of this sum goes for bill-boards and sign advertising, the balance will go to newspapers. We use evening and Sunday editions only. I never touch the morning papers, as my theory is they are taken by the men to the offices while the evening papers go into the homes. The women are the buyers, you know." Some Auburn merchants evidently do not follow the example set by this prosperous firm as can be seen by glancing over the advertising columns of the DAILY COURIER. They have yet to learn that if they would succeed, they must not discontinue their advertising because they can't run our business, but must keep everlastingly at advertising. It is their loss, not ours.

Another School Bill.

There is another school bill before the legislature, and one clause alone is enough to kill it, and should kill it. It provides that all teachers shall be examined by the county superintendent but that he shall not grade their papers. The papers must be sent to the state superintendent who will examine and grade them and issue license to the successful ones. Now look at it! There are in round numbers over 12,000 teachers to be examined each year. And as each teacher would send in about ten papers, there would be 120,000 papers for the state superintendent and his assistants to examine and grade. And to give satisfaction and do justice the teachers should be notified within a week or two. It will be seen how badly this would work. It would take a large number of assistants at Indianapolis, and as they would be chosen among personal or political friends, it is not likely they would be half as capable to do the work as the average county superintendent. The school law is good enough. Why not let it alone.

CITY LIFE.

(Indianapolis Sun.)

Just a little blizzard,
Coming from the west;
Just a little gizzard,
Frozen 'neath your vest,
Just a little slip and Then a little jam
Down on the walk so cold,
Then a red-hot "Damn."

Wonders Never Cease.

No one need suffer the tortures of rheumatism, because that modern liniment, Salvation Oil, positively cures it. "I was a great sufferer from sciatic rheumatism, and the best of doctors attended me without relief. I commenced using Salvation Oil, and two bottles helped me wonderfully. It certainly has worked wonders with me, Mrs. E. J. Phelps, Box 28, Enfield, Conn." Salvation Oil is for sale by all dealers for 25 cts. Take no substitute.

MORE THIEVING.

SOME JACKSON TOWNSHIP TALENT GOES INTO THE SECOND HAND FURNITURE BUSINESS.

They Loot Mrs. Freeman's Dwelling in Her Absence, leaving the Walls, However.

Tuesday's Daily.

There seems to be an epidemic of thieving. The "thief microbe" seems to have taken possession of an unusual number of people. They don't seem particular as to what it is, so it can be stolen. Any old thing will do, so it is handy by and don't require too much exertion to reach it.

Yesterday warrants were sworn out for the arrest of Geo. White and Solomon Truit and a charge of grand larceny, and search warrants were issued to search White's house for stolen goods. The substance of the charge was that they had entered the residence of Mrs. Elizabeth Freeman in the southwest part of the township during her absence at Fort Wayne for medical treatment and had taken about all her movable furniture and household goods as well as canned fruit, etc, etc. Two of Mrs. Freeman's daughters, Mrs. Lew. Wigent and Mrs. Herbert Romine accompanied the sheriff and at White's they found a variety of articles that they at one recognized, and which were brought here and are now in charge of Squire Walter. They consist of such things as bedclothes, cushions, coffee mill, etc, etc. Truit had also been arrested, but after an examination he was discharged, it being evident he knew nothing of the matter. White, also said Truit was innocent, but told the officers that Charles Clouse had a hand in it, and had some of the goods. White had no witness ready to back up his plea of not guilty, for he claimed he had bought these goods of Clouse, as Clouse had told him his, Clouse's, father had retired from housekeeping, and was selling off his household goods. The state, also, was not quite ready and the trial was set for to-day 1 p. m. and for want of bail White went to jail.

A warrant was issued for Clouse and a search warrant for examining his house Deputy Sheriff Platter went down there but found nothing of the missing articles but arrested Clouse and he too is now in jail. The trial of both is likely to come off at one o'clock today.

Tuesday afternoon and evening, the cases were worked up before Justice Walter, with Welshelmer for the state and Emanuel for the defense. Clouse swore that White did not buy the goods of him, and his wife sustained him. His wife and father also helped him to prove an alibi, showing he was at home all night of the thieving and in the daytime helping his father. He was discharged. White was returned to jail to be tried at next session of court, and the goods will be kept till then, by the sheriff.

TIN PLATE INDUSTRY

Don't Need Government Aid and Never Did.

Under the McKinley tariff law tin plates paid a duty of 2.2 cents a pound. The present law or "Wilson Bill" reduced this to almost half, making the duty 1.2 cents a pound. Now under this low rate, the tin plate business of the United States has grown till we make all the tin we use except what is used in making tin cans and cases to send canned goods of various kinds to other countries. And this much of foreign tin is only used because when the goods are sent abroad our government pays back 99 cents on each dollar they had paid out in duty on that tin when it came here. And makers of tin now assert that they could sell these exporters all the tin they use if the government would stop paying back the 99 cents. In other words if allowed an equal chance our makers of tin would make and sell all the tin we use. It is another illustration of what we have often said: That a "protective duty" is an evil and not a good thing, and that if these shackles of trade were taken from our enterprising manufacturers, they would be fully able to compete with the world. And if these restrictions had never been imposed, and each industry compelled to fight its own battles without government aid, each would be to-day stronger and more prosperous. Let our "infant industries" stop whining for government aid, and in a short time they will not need it.

WEDDED AT NOON

Mrs. Agnes Coder McBroom Becomes the Wife of Mr. John R. Leighty, of Racine, Wisconsin.

Cleveland Leader.

A quiet wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Coder, No. 1887 Cedar avenue, last Friday noon. Their only daughter, Agnes Coder McBroom, was united in marriage by Rev. Dr. Rider, of the Euclid Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church to John R. Leighty, chief engineer of the Great Northwestern Railroad, and son of Congressman Leighty of Indiana. The happy couple left on the evening train for Racine, Wis., where they will make their home.

The M. E. friends continue their revival effort, but with only meager results.

Peter Helwig recently purchased a lot in Johns Addition for about one-fourth its former value.

Geo. Wolcott, has retired from Morses grocery to accept a work in the U. B. church in Western Ohio.

M. F. Campbell has moved to Butler, occupying a residence on West Walnut street.

Five Butler babies graced the columns of the Chicago Chronicle last Saturday, they were, Crede Newman, Dora Shunmker, Josie Carpenter, Tera Campbell, and Simons tiefel.

A dwelling belonging to Nancy A. Davis, in the north part of town burned last Thursday morning about 2:30. Steam was very low at the water works, and the alarm aroused but few of our citizens. The house and contents were a total loss before water was applied, so nothing was saved. Our people are paying about three times as much for water works as they pay for insurance on isolated property, and hire two stalwart night watchmen, yet the last three fires that occurred at night, proved total losses before water could reach them, owing to the failure to sound an alarm and get water on the fire in time to save anything. Another bad feature is the abandonment of the recently organized fire company, the town holding out no inducement for them to preserve their organization. Some of these nights we will be in mourning as have our sister cities, Waterloo and Edgerton. Organize a fire company, allow them some advantage in the way of taxes, or road work, get a thousand feet of good new hose, and all probability thousands of dollars will be saved, when the next bad fire comes.

"From hand to mouth," he gaily said,
And pressed her dainty finger-tips,
Which salutation quickly led
To one upon her perfect lips,
As fair as roses in the South:
"From hand to mouth."

'Twas something like a year ago,
And now they both are one, you see,
Although which one I hardly know.
They're living somewhere in the South

—Allen Weaver, now residing at Oakesdale, Wash., sends the COURIER a big payment ahead, and writes as we are always glad to have our friends do, as to how things are out there. He says the hard times struck them in '93, and as he had bought more property, he had to get up and hustle. He has evidently succeedde, in getting into good shape, which his old friends out here will be pleased to learn.

—Fort Wayne Sentinel:—Farmer in a number of northern Indiana counties have just perfected an organization whereby it is agreed not to purchase any farm implements this year. A system of exchange has been agreed upon. The leaders in the movement disclaim the establishment of a boycott on manufacturers or dealers and declare the organization is solely the outgrowth of the continued business and financial depression.

Thursday's Daily.

—N. P. Furguson is a new subscriber to the COURIER.

—C. S. Shultz, of Waterloo, has thanks for money advanced on his subscription to Jan. 1, '97.

—Mr. and Mrs. Sam Gibson and Mrs. Frank Rush drove to Corunna this afternoon to visit and enjoy a sleigh ride.

—Virgil Houser came up from Cincinnati Monday, and will remain a few days. We understand he has employment in that city.

—Kendallville Daily Sun:—Miss Bertha Blaney, who has been the guest of friends here for several weeks, returned home to Auburn this afternoon.

—Mrs. Frank Ryan returned from Fort Wayne last evening. She had been visiting relatives there. We believe she will return the last of this week to her home at Attica, Ind.

—Hicksville News: Mr. and Mrs. Alva Baker and little son, of Auburn, have been spending a week in our city the guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Pinkerton. They returned to their home Tuesday.

To-day is February 4, and according to millions of promises made last November, in four weeks to a day, we may look for appearance of a bright light in the east, ushering in the coming of the "Advance Agent of Prosperity."

Friday's Daily.

—Miss Alice Draggoo, of Concord was in town to-day.

J. Wm. Wagner one of our solid Garrett friends was here Wednesday. He always gives us a visit, and is always welcome at this end of the line.

—B. F. Sponhour has been out several days helping to bale hay. They baled fourteen tons at Mart Sheets' this week.

—The little four-legged weather prophet did not stay hidden very long. Every sausage maker in town has ground-hog displayed on his counters.

J. R. Palmer is nursing a very sore hand. He ran a sliver of wood into it yesterday and had to have it cut out. Of course he will be laid up from work for awhile.

—Ex-Commissioner John Hofielder was here to-day on business. We are always pleased to have visit with him. He is now taking the plan of buying flour, as the last years crop was not too poor a quality to make good bread.

—We have often complimented the ladies on their punctuality in business matters. Even in small matters they seldom forget when a thing should be attended to. Our attention was again called to this when Katie Kiblinger came in yesterday with the $1.50 that Mrs. Kiblinger carefully remembers each year, and as carefully pays.

—Self-denial is the one thing most difficult to inculcate and always hard to practice, especially when there are good things to eat within reach. But there is no self-denial necessary if you take Simmons Liver Regulator. It promotes digestion, prevents Dyspepsia and a dose after a hearty meal of delicacies will prevent any discomfort. It's the best good-night toddy.

—M. Shimp, now at Hollenburg Kan., sends the COURIER $5 on subscription and writes. I have been sick for some time, am some better now. Times have been very close here for money. We have had two failures in crops. We had a big crop last year. Corn is so cheap here now, it is only ten cents a bushel and the roads have been in such a shape that it is most impossible to draw corn to market.

Friday's Daily.

—Warren McNabb and his little son Harry came over from Garrett last evening. It gave them a chance for a good sleighride, and to transact some business besides. THE COURIER is under obligations to Mr. M. for payments his mother's subscription, Mrs. Sophia McNabb who still lives at the old home near Corunna. Our first acquaintance with Mr. McNabb was when he was a pupil in the schools up there. Lads soon become men.

—A jolly party composed of the following, Miles Baxter and wife, Fred Yeabera and wife, William Leedy and wife, Dr. Baxter and wife, Dan Link Lila Baker, Edna Davis and John Crimmins, Frank McDowell and wife, went out to J. Y. W. McClellan's Wednesday night. The sleigh ride was enjoyable and Mr. and Mrs. McClellan are grand entertainers. There was a lovely supper and a grand time generally.

—Senator Nusbaum has introduced an important bill aimed at patent medicine manufacturers. It provides that every package or bottle of patent drugs shall contain on the outside a printed formula of the ingredients contained in the medicine, and any one violating this provision shall be subjected to a fine of not less $100 nor more than $1000 to which may be added imprisonment in the county jail for any determinate period not less than ten days nor more than six months. The bill went to the committee on public health and will undoubtely cause a big fight to be made by the patent medicine companies. —Elkhart Truth.

—The Lutheran church is in a high state of prosperity as we are pleased to note. Yesterday at Sunday School 218 were present and of course there are always a few absenties showing a large school. The Sunday school collection amounted to $4.56. The recent series of meetings have been productive of much good and greatly increased interest. The accessions since these meetings began, amounted to just 90 on last evening. Mr. Brosy and his people have done a noble work and should feel greatly encouraged.

Saturday's Daily.

—Miss Maggie Snyder, of New Era, was in town yesterday.

—James W. Cool is also of the "class of '98" now having a receipt up to that date.

—J. E. Kester and Henry Lochner have thanks for recent favors.

—We had a pleasant call from Jacob Shull to-day. Always glad to meet our old friends.

—Charles Lembeck of Richland was in town to-day and gave the old Reliable a fine lift. Thanks.

Edward M. Lowenthal and Flora Strayer, Perry A. Stafford and Ollie B. Provines, Albert D. Reynolds and Della Wheeler have been licensed to wed.

Silver Dawn:—Wm. Leas was instrumental in disposing of a 40-acre tract for the A. S. Leas heirs in Franklin township. Will is a good, reliable agent to handle real estate.

—The COURIER acknowledges a pleasant call to-day from G. W. Burtzner, of Cedar Creek, and has thanks for money left with us on his subscription He is one of the prosperous farmers of that vicinity.

—The Anderson Herald now wants the prison north moved from Michigan City to Anderson. It is said that Warden Harley asked the legislature for $185,000 for repairs and it is believed a new prison should be built and located some where near the central portion of the state, as Michigan City is too difficult to reach by rail, and therefore thousands of dollars are needlessly spent. It does not seem wise to spend $185,000 in repairs on the old pen at Michigan City.

—The hobo who calls for exchanges has a new explanation for the use of them and it fits our esteemed local contemporary so nicely it is too good to keep. When asked if he wanted the old papers in order to read the society notes or to find the location of a bath house, "Naw" replied he, "de side door sleepers on dese railroads is so dirty that we want 'em to put on de floor to keep our clothes clean, see? Give us republicans if yer got any, dere softer, de arguments aint solid and de facts aint the cold kind wot knocks you silly, an' de points don't stick out enough to hurt, see? It's just like settin' on a pneumatic bed dere's so much wind about it."

The nickel social of the M. E. church will meet at Mrs. Boland's Friday afternoon Feb. 12. A full attendance is very much desired, Business of importance to be discussed.

Auburn Courier FREE.

Everybody wants the paper now as we give the only extended, True, Authentic, and Reliable Account of the DeKalb County Muddle. The trials of Ex-County Officials will be given in full in the WEEKLY COURIER. Remember we publish a Daily and give an account of the procedure each evening and the cream of all the daily matter appears in the Weekly.

HOW TO GET IT.

Send or bring to this office the names and postoffice address of FOUR (4) new yearly subscribers, and $6, and you will get the paper one year FREE. Work up the list at once before your neighbor beats you.

Monday's Daily.

—If you want real bargains in houses and lots call on Walter C. Hartman the real estate dealer.

—Mrs. Cook Ford reached home Saturday evening after a few days spent at her father's in Hicksville.

—Dr. Vesta Swarts reports a boy born to Mr. and Mrs. Ike Cool on North Main street, Sunday morning.

—M. L. Hoffman of the Junction is among those who made business calls at this office to-day.

—John A. Campbell, the veteran insurance man was here to-day on a business matter, probably to attend the tax sales.

—O. P. Learned, of Troy puts his time up to '98 on the Old Reliable, this week. Thanks. All these little amounts come very handy.

—Squire Fisher, of Altona was in town Saturday, and of course had a friendly word with the COURIER man. The squire has been the "court" for his part of Keyser township for many years.

—Hon Cal. Husselman left this morning over the Wabash for Peru where he will lecture before the Farmers' Institute. He will also lecture at Tipton before returning home.

—J. F. Liens was in Saturday and helped out the COURIER. He had the misfortune to lose his dwelling by fire a week ago Monday in that severly cold weather. It was a serious loss and at a bad time, and falls heavily on Mr. Liens.

—J. J. Latson offers his little farm for sale in this paper. It is a very desirable place and would make a good home for a retired farmer, giving him all the ground he would need for a cow, fruit, garden, etc. and it is just outside of town. Anyone needing such a little home farm, should call on him.

—Ex-trustee Levi Hewitt made this office a business call Saturday. Mr. Hewitt is one of the grand jury that did such valuable work for the public at the recent long session and in common with the other members of this body, deserves a great deal of credit for the thoroughness with which they did a duty that must have been very disagreeable to them. We have a need of such men as these in our courts about these times.

—As pleasant a visit as we have had for years, was from Capt. W. P. Myers to-day. Our older people will remember him as several years superintendent of the Auburn schools though he has been for several years a resident of Kendallville. Mrs. Myers was with him and we only sorry we could not have had time to visit with both. We hope to meet them again at an early date.

—In order to successfully handle the great crowds that are expected in Washington during the inauguration of Major McKinley, the B. & O. has arranged to lay about ten miles of additional side track to store sleeping cars and special trains on. The facilities this year will be very much greater than ever before.

Tuesday's Daily.

—Joseph E. Rohm, of Summit, made us a frendly call to-day

—Joseph Culler of Mt. Hope remembered the COURIER in fine shape Monday.

—We had a pleasant call this afternoon from Editor McDonald of the Ligonier Banner.

—Henry L. Houser, of Cedar was a welcome caller to-day and dropped a dollar in our money drawer.

—Walter Hartman sold D D Moody's home on Main street to M. E. Griswold. Mr. Moody will occupy the house until May 1.

—Attorney E. D. Hartman is acting as special judge at Angola this week. He will remain there all the week probably.

—Chas. Bullard and Maggie Musser have been granted a permit to marry.

—Geo. Lanning is now employed in the Treasurer's office.

—TO RENT:—The Albright store building on Main street at a very reasonable price.

6tf WALTER C. HARTMAN.

—Editor Parker of the Kendallville News and E. H. Carpenter of the same place were among our callers to-day. Both are "liners" of the K. P. order, and were here to attend the big meeting.

—A fine girl made her debut at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Baxter this morning. The COURIER joins with their host of friends in greetings to the little one and congratutations to the parents. Dr. John C. Baxter was in attendance.

—The notice of the M. E. church anniversary dinner appears elsewhere. The real day is Monday, Feb. 22, but Saturday, the 20th was chosen as a more convenient day for the social. We hope to see the ladies well patronized.

—Valentine day this year comes on Sunday. No doubt Saturday will be observed as the day when the postoffice employes will sigh in vain for a rest. The stock this year in the comic department is as varied and ugly as usual, while some really handsome ones are displayed for those who are "in earnest" about the matter.

—The figure nine dropped into the calendar January 1, 1889, and it will stay there 111 years from that date, or until December 31, 1999. No other figure has had such a consecutive run, and the nine itself has only once before been in the race which lasted over a century in which it continually figured.

Tuesday's Daily.

—We see by telegraphic reports in the daily papers that our friend Dan Zonker, was waylaid and knocked down by masked robbers near Hudson, last Thursday evening. There is so much sensation in these telegraphic reports, that we wait for particulars from a reliable source.

—Mrs. W. E. Wright and Mrs. Frank Depew of Corunna were callers at this office yesterday, being in town on business. The former will in a week or two open a milliner and dressmaking establishment in Corunna. That is a live little town and we believe she will make a success of it.

—Virgil Houser, was yesterday arrested on a charge of theft and plead guilty, and was taken to jail. He had taken two rings and a pair of cuff buttons from his aunt, Mrs. Chester Hoisington. It will be sad news to his parents, who have done all they could to keep him from these little, petty, mean ways, to which he seemed inclined.

—Norman W. Jones, of Garrett, professor of literature in the University at Winfield, Kansas, is at home at present because of poor health. Over study and work have brought on some nervous troubles. If the Professor does not find himself much improved in a few weeks, he will probably be obliged to resign his position, although the place will be held for him indefinitely or until he does positively decide to give it up. He was in town today calling on upon Supt. Merica and friends.

—LOST—A dear little child who made home happy by its smiles. And to think it might have been saved had the parents only kept in the house One Minute Cough Cure, the infallible remedy for croup. Davenport the Druggist.

—G. W. Wilcox of New Era, was here yesterday on business and made us a visit. He came near losing his fine residence by fire a week ago Monday, and only by active efforts assisted by the neighbors were they able to save it. It caught in the wall near the roof from a defective flue. It was insured in the DeKalb County Farmers' Co., and the loss estimated at $20 is already paid.

Wednesday's Daily.

—The delinquent tax sale Monday was light as a great deal had been paid up since notice was given. Still a few pieces were sold.

—The first mower of the season was hauled through the streets yesterday hitched to a sleigh. We believe it was not taken direct to the fields, however, but was seeking some repairs, so as to be ready on time.

—See Schaab Brothers' new advt this week. It is out of its regular place owing to late arrival of goods, but the bargains are all right just the same. Study it over.

—J. G. Raub, of Sedan, sends in his remittance for the COURIER for which he has thanks.

—We have a copy of the "Freemans Labor Journal" of Spokane, Wash., where Harry Rush lives. In speaking of the various business interests of the city, the Journal alludes to our former townsman, in very complimentaay terms. It says he came there eleven years ago and after working at his trade two years "branched out for himself," and has been very sucuessful ever since. It says he has the largest harness and saddle establishment in the entire northwest. All of which Harry's many friends here will be pleased to read.

—Our old friend, Geo. Dalloway, was in town to-day and squared up with the printer.

—Brown, Culbertson & Boland are starting the season's business on time. See their new advt.

—Two School Supply agents have been arrested at Indianapolis on suspicion of having offered money to trustees to induce them to buy goods. It is claimed that this has been attempted in DeKalb county.

—The following invitations has been sent out:

Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Waltz request the pleasure of your company
Friday evening, February twelfth, at eight o'clock.
M. E. Parsonage.
To meet the Epworth League

—Pleasant home for sale, good house and barn, abundance of fruit, less than a mile from court house. Inquire of MRS. GEO. GROGG

—Bro. Parker of the Kendallville News takes a hand in settling the postoffice struggle over there. After saying a good word for the only really worthy "possibility," Mr. J. S. Coulogue, he adds this sendoff for another: "S. H. Brillhart's candidacy grows out of his life's work for his party. During the recent campaign Sam did much hard work for the cause. His work was the hanging of the picture of the 'advance agent of prosperity' in houses, barns, outhouses and stables. Mr. Brillhart's great work had its effect as the result of the election in this city shows.

Frank Leslie's Monthly.

It would be difficult for anyone to say which is the best or the most artistic of the great Monthly Magazines, which the money and brains of enterprising publishers have made possible in these days. We have just been reading Frank Leslie's and feel free to say it is at least equal to the best. Take for example the December number which is a marvel of beauty and

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

excellence. Its illustrations are lovely and the reading of the most attractive and useful. Among the excellent articles are "A Magic Island" with lovely scenes from photographs of views on the Pacific Coast; "American Universities," this number being "Cornell," There is the continuation of the illustrated article on Gen. R. E. Lee; "At the Court of St James," in which is shown the ceremonies of presentation to the Queen, etc. etc. "Canoeing down the Rhine," a trip by American Students is very enjoyable both for story and pictures. There are many other things as excellent and attractive but the only way to get a good idea of this fine monthly, is to examine one of the current numbers.

Anniversary Dinner

The ladies of the M. E. church will give a 5-o'clock anniversary dinner, in the basement on Saturday, Feb. 20. This is for the anniversary of the dedication of the church.

BILL OF FARE.

Turkey, and cranberry sauce, mashed potatoes, corn, slaw, pickles, pie, pudding, bread and butter, coffee, tea. Mite 25 cents, and all are invited to help make this anniversary event a success. 6-7

BERRY'S HENS WERE SLEEPY.

Rode Seventeen Miles Perched on a Wagon Reach Without Waking.

From the Portland Press: Linn Berry has a big chicken farm in West Buxton, and has several hundred hens. He brings many eggs and chickens (dead and dressed) to Portland. He loads his wagon the night before and starts at 3 a. m. He has only to hitch up the horses and drive off. It is a drive of seventeen miles to this city. He reached here at just about sunrise. As he approached the United States hotel to deliver some produce someone shouted at him and asked him if he had brought his hens to market roosting on the crossbar under the wagon. He paid no attention, supposing the man was guying him. But when he stopped at the hotel and others called his attention to four hens roosting under the wagon and just waking up, it was doubtful which was the most astonished, Mr. Berry or the hens. Two of the latter were panic stricken and started down Federal street. One was caught on Temple street and the other got down almost to Exchange street before it was captured. The cook at the hotel bought the four hens for $1 and took them home. How many hens were asleep under the wagon when Mr. Berry started from home he can't tell, but it is very possible that there were more than four.

The Postal Staff and the Cats.

The cats are invariably treated with great kindness by the postal staff. Kittens are born in all sorts of odd corners, even occasionally under a desk or table in the sorting office. One cat has successfully reared during the present year a family of six in the registered letter department, but this, of course, is exceptional. They are generally born in the kitchens, as there are plenty of old wornout coats about which make a comfortable bed. As soon as they are old enough some one requiring a cat takes one home to the domestic hearth. There is often a keen struggle for their possession and a man will feed both mother and kitten on milk and watch them with an anxious eye, only to find in the end that he is a day too late, someone having forestalled him and quietly disappeared with the coveted pet.—Westminster Gazette.

A Notable Dramatic Rivival.

After a lapse of three centuries Shakespeare's "Comedy of Errors" is again to be performed in Gray's Inn hall. The production is organized by the Elizabethan Stage society, and is the more interesting from the fact that the play will be performed much as it was performed in the days of Shakespeare.

Old Market Cross.

Old Market Cross of Preebles, Scotland, dating from 1320, and which has been many times shifted during the past half century, has now been restored to its original site at the junction of High street, Northgate and Eastgate, at the expense of Major Thorburn.

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent, a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field, as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate — we can not consecrate — we can not hallow — this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us — that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion — that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain — that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom — and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

Abraham Lincoln.

November 19, 1863.

Facsimile of Mr Lincoln's autographic copy of the Gettysburg address made by him for the soldier's and sailor's fair at Baltimore, in 1864.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

A SOLDIER'S STORY OF THE WAR

By Col. Gilbert A. Pierce

"They're talking nowadays right smart about the great Napoleon," said Uncle Dan, "but when t'other day the boys asked me who I thought the greatest man, I says 'I don't know. There's Washington, an' Alexander, an' Napoleon, an' lots of others, but, my way of thinkin', Old Abe Lincoln is ahead of 'em all.'

"Greatness isn't jest a bein' stern and solemn-like. Now, Uncle Abraham could hoe his row with any of 'em argyin', an' yet some way he had the swing of them old prophets. That struck me when the war broke out, an' afore I knew it I caught the fever, carried coal oil lamps around with the rest of the crowd, got howlin' about John Brown's body moldering in the ground, and 'By Jinks,' says I, 'I'll jine!'

"Of course, Billy must stay at home to plow and sow and make the corn and hay. He'd just turned fifteen, but as I marched away, blest if there wasn't ma cryin' in his arms, an' Billy yellin' like mad, 'I want a chance to strike for liberty!' Bless me again! in less than a year if I didn't hear one day that Billy had enlisted, too.

"How I watched that boy! Sometimes praying when he kept by my side in battle, sometimes swearing, too, maybe, when he exposed himself too carelessly. At Vicksburg he fell back, crushed and maimed by the parapet fire, and I took him in my arms and bore him back, an', half crazy with fears, dashed at the fort again. Well, he rallied from the wound, but somehow he never seemed so sound as before. There was a wandering strangeness in his manner, like he didn't 'zactly know his mind, and one night, when skirmishes were daily, an' Sherman an' Hood was trying to get the chance for a winning fight, Billy was placed on picket duty where danger hovered thick. I told him to keep his eyes wide open, but after I'd got into my blanket in camp I couldn't sleep. I took my gun and hurried silently to the outposts, reached a spot close underneath the hill, and my heart stopped, for there was a scuffle, a cry, and I saw the forms of half a hundred men. It wasn't no time to think. I raised my gun. The good old musket rang out the alarm, the rebels turned and ran. The boy? There he lay, his form stretched out upon the ground, asleep at his post!

"He turned to me an' put his arm around me lovingly. 'I couldn't help it, dad,' he said, smiling his old boyish smile, and marched away between the guards. I begged, I pled, I swore that Billy wasn't like himself. No use. The sentence came. I appealed to the generals. I got only one answer: 'The death sentence of the court has been approved.' Then I went to Washington to see the President.

"It was my last hope. They wouldn't let me in. They even pushed me back as a carriage drove up. I saw who got out; I tried to attract his attention. 'Who is this man?' says he. 'Only a soldier after an interview,' says the officer. 'Only a soldier?' says he, musingly. 'Periling his life! Only a soldier, fighting the battles of this awful war! Thank God! to speak to me you need no other name. Only a soldier? Come in, my man.' And he led me up the stairs, while ministers and generals waited outside.

"I told him, with sobs half choking me, the story of my grief. His face was sad and furrowed, and he bowed his head as he listened. He looked over the papers carefully. Then he turned, and smiling gently, said, 'We'll let the other fellows do the killing. I think the country will get along with this young fellow running 'round alive.' And then he wrote: 'This sentence disapproved. Restored to his company. A. Lincoln.' Just there I lost my grip. I only cried like a baby. 'You tell your boy,' says he, 'I count on him to fight.'

"In six months Billy stood upon the roll as second corporal. Then he became color bearer of the regiment. We marched through Georgia until we faced the guns of Fort McAlister. A charge was ordered, but at first the rebels fired at such a rate that the ranks wavered. Billy, with face aflame, carried the flag far up in the advance. 'Bring back the colors to the regiment!' cried the colonel. Amid the crack and crash of the guns, the boy replied, 'You bring the regiment to the colors!' Then, with shouts and cheers, the brigade rushed madly on, and before they fairly sensed it, the day was won.

"Billy had gone down. They had to pry his fingers loose from the flag. There was a smile on his face a thousand years can't make me forget. 'Redeemed at last,' the general came and said, and placed his name among the heroes. They wrapped the Stars and Stripes around my son. When they put him in his new uniform that night, they found his treasures, and among the rest was a picture of Old Abe, and written on its back were the words, a prophecy, 'I've fought, great friend, and died for liberty!'"

"ONLY A SOLDIER? COME IN, MY MAN."

HIS FORM STRETCHED OUT UPON THE GROUND.

"I TOOK HIM IN MY ARMS AND BORE HIM BACK."

LINCOLN'S SWEETHEART.

She Was a Beautiful Kentucky Girl and Had Many Suitors.

Lincoln first met Ann Mayes Rutledge in 1832, when she was 19. She was a beautiful girl and as bright as she was pretty. So fair a maid was not, of course, without suitors. The most determined of those who sought her hand was one John McNeill, a young man who had arrived in New Salem from New York soon after the founding of the town. Ann became engaged to McNeill, but it was decided to put off marriage on account of Ann's youth. After a while McNeill left for his home in the East, saying that he would return in time with his parents. Then it came out that McNeill's real name was McNamar. The New Salem people pronounced him an impostor. A few letters were received from him by Ann, but finally the lover ceased to write to her.

In the spring of 1835 Ann agreed to become Lincoln's wife. New Salem took a cordial interest in the two lovers, and presaged a happy life for them, and all would undoubtedly have gone well if the young girl could have dismissed the haunting memory of her old lover. The possibility that she had wronged him, that he might reappear, that he loved her still, haunted her so persistently that she took to her bed. Her death speedily followed. Lincoln's grief was intense. He was seen walking alone by the river and through the woods, muttering strange things to himself. He seemed to his friends to be in the shadow of madness. They kept a close watch over him; and at last Bowling Green, one of the most devoted friends Lincoln then had, took him home to his little log cabin, half a mile north of New Salem, under the brow of a big bluff. Here, under the loving care of Green and his good wife, Nancy, Lincoln remained until he was once more master of himself.

But though he had regained self-control, his grief was deep and bitter. Ann Rutledge was buried in Concord Cemetery, a country burying ground, seven miles northwest of New Salem. To this lonely spot Lincoln frequently journeyed to weep over her grave. "My heart is buried there," he said to one of his friends. Strange to say, McNamar proved to be an honest man and a faithful though careless lover.

THE IMMORTAL LINCOLN.

An Apotheosis in His Memorable First Inaugural.

In an epoch of convulsion and cataclysm and chaos Abraham Lincoln was introduced into presidential power. He held to the syllogistic and spurned figurative speech. No fustian found favor in his prejudices.

Coming to the end of his first inaugural, Lincoln reached these words: "In your hands, my fellow countrymen, and not in mine, is the momentous issue of civil war. The Government will not assail you. You can have no conflict without being yourselves the aggressors. You have no oath registered in heaven to destroy the Government, while I shall have the most solemn one to preserve, protect and defend it."

"I am loath to close. We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature."

Lincoln's Trust in God.

"What I did I did after a very full deliberation and under a very heavy and solemn sense of responsibility," said Lincoln with reference to the emancipation proclamation. "I can only trust in God I have made no mistake. I shall make no attempt on this occasion to sustain what I have done or said by any comment. It is now for the country and the world to pass judgment, and may be take action upon it."

A Natural Phenomenon.

A party of woodchoppers recently cut down a fine white oak tree near South Charleston, O., which was at least three and a half feet in diameter and seemingly solid. They found, however, before cutting very far, that it was hollow. They then cut around it a few inches deep. It fell, when it was discovered that there was a black, charred snag inside about fifteen feet high, showing that ages ago it was burned, but enough vitality remained at the roots to grow a new tree. The tree is remembered by the oldest inhabitants and it was very large even fifty years ago. The supposition is that it was burned by the Indians.

Looking a difficulty square in the face will often kill it dead.

SAW LINCOLN SHOT.

ONE WHO WITNESSED THE GREAT TRAGEDY.

Story of the Man Who Was the First to Reach the Side of the Wounded President—His Clothing Stained by the Blood of the Martyr.

Our Nation's Darkest Day.

There now lives in Philadelphia a gentleman who saw the whole scene of Lincoln's assassination, and was the first to reach the wounded man in the prevailing panic. William Flood is the gentleman's name, and he gave the following graphic account, which is taken down in his exact words:

"At the time the President was shot," said he in answer to a query, "I was in the United States navy and was acting ensign and executive officer on board the steamship Teazer. Captain Silas Owen was the commander, and the ship was located at the navy yard on April 14. That evening Captain Owen, who had been over in the city during the day, came to the ship and suggested that we go to the theater that evening, as Laura Keene was to play 'Our American Cousin,' and the President was to be there. We went to the theater and secured seats in the parquet or orchestra chairs. The President occupied the second box up from the orchestra and second from the stage. Just as the curtain fell on the first act I heard a shot and saw a man jump from the President's box to the stage. As he jumped his foot caught in the folds of the flag that draped the box, and he fell sideways on the stage. It was quite a good jump, and he came very near falling back into the orchestra. He got up and limped away across the stage, brandishing a great long knife in his right hand, and shouted, 'Sic semper tyrannis.'

"In less time than it takes to tell it I was on the stage. How I got there over the heads of the orchestra I really don't remember. Just as I reached the stage Mrs. Lincoln looked out of the box. She was crying and wringing her hands and said: 'They have shot papa; will no one come?' I answered that I would come, and immediately climbed up the side of the boxes to the one the President occupied.

"The President was sitting as if he had fallen asleep. He was breathing, however, and we at once laid him on the floor of the box. I looked for the wound, but at first did not discover it. Miss Keene brought a pitcher of water and I bathed his forehead with that so as to revive him. I then discovered the wound in the back of his head, where the ball had entered, and the blood ran out on my arm and down the side of my coat. Some army officers brought in a stretcher and he was placed on that and carried out. I then went to the front of the box and motioned for the audience to remain quiet. Every one was talking, and there was a general uproar. As soon as it ceased for a minute I told them that the President was still alive, but had been shot, and was no doubt mortally wounded. Captain Owens and I then went out to the front of the building and found a platoon of police in the street. The sidewalks were so crowded with people that we had to get out in the middle of the road to get down the street. We went to the National Hotel, and by the time we got there the mob was so dense we could get no further, so a couple of police took us through the hotel to C street, at the rear, and we got a cab and were driven to the navy yard. I was so bloody from the wound, my right hand and arm being covered, that it is a wonder that I was not hanged by that mob. They were intensely excited at the time, and it would have taken very little to have driven them into a frenzy.

"The next day our ship went down the river to head Booth off, and did not return until after he was killed. I was then sent for to go down and identify him. I recognized him very readily as he jumped from the box as J. Wilkes Booth."

The Tree.

The Christmas tree was almost unknown in England until introduced by Prince Albert from its home, in Germany. The vegetable creation has retained many features of loveliness apart from these decorations. The "naked majesty" of the oak, the gracefulness of "the cold-place loving birch," and the willow, whose pendent branches "trembling touch the water's brink," elicit the admiration of the observer; while, with the exception of the larch, the numerous species of fir and pine retain their leaves, and variegate the disrobed grove with their unfading verdure.

Talleyrand never was in love but once, and that was when he was about 16 years old. When Napoleon ordered him to marry and picked out a wife for him, he pleaded this youthful attachment, which was immediately scoffed at by the great match-maker as a piece of nonsense.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO PUPIL AND TEACHER.

Some of the Advantages and Disadvantages of College Education—How to Teach Spelling—Reasons for Opposing the Pensioning of Teachers.

College Education.

I was interested recently in an article in the Forum on this subject. I cannot recall many of the arguments, but will give a few thoughts suggested by the writer.

It is conceded that a college education is desirable in many ways. It gives a man self-confidence, polish, breadth of view, and clearness of perception. But on the other hand it may be claimed that a college education often unfits a man for the hardships of life.

If for instance a hundred college-bred are selected on one side, and a hundred men of equal caliber who have not had a college education are selected on the other hand, and these two separate companies of men are delegated to accomplish certain results, demanding courage, valor, perseverance, industry and grit, and the college-bred men are surpassed by their opponents, this is an argument against college life. This is precisely what is claimed, that college life induces men not to undertake that which is disagreeable, or which subjects them to privations, or discomforts, or to those things which involve risk.

The question is asked, Would Commodore Vanderbilt have achieved his wonderful success as a railroad man had he been college-bred? The intimation is that he would not, that college life would have led him to see more danger in the undertaking than he otherwise would see, and would have caused him to shrink from the danger of the undertaking, and would have led him to lead a life of greater ease and personal comfort.

Surely a man needs, in his battle with adversity and competition, all the vigor and pluck that nature has bestowed upon him. If college life diminishes this store of necessary endowment it is a disadvantage to a certain extent, but the disadvantage is counterbalanced in a degree by the advantages which the college life assuredly gives.

Attention is called to the fact that college-bred men often hold themselves aloof as superior to the average mass of humanity. In so far as this is actually the case, college life is a disadvantage. No snob can be much of a success in any of the departments of life, and if colleges breed "snobbery" they are a disadvantage.

There is no rule which will apply with equal force to all men and all colleges. There are men which no amount of training would develop into a "snob." There are men also whose valor would not be diminished by any amount of study, association, or any amount of culture. There are colleges which are endeavoring to do away with any tendency along the lines mentioned. But I am certain that if the opportunities were offered many college men, to become successful in business, or in a profession, and they were told the amount of hard work, discomfort, and the hundred and one privations endured by a successful man in attaining his business or professional success, the college man would say, I prefer not to be successful rather than to undergo all this discomfiture.

On the other hand, the benefits of a college training are not to be overlooked by those who have children, and who are considering the question of their education. I desire that my boy shall have a college training. I shall endeavor to instruct him so that college life will not spoil him, and shall rely somewhat upon his natural supply of common sense to direct him against "snobbery," or indolence. After all, a boy's inherent character will tell along this line, as in almost every other case. But undoubtedly there are many men spoilt by a college life, as there are many men who are ruined by prosperity. College life puffs them up, as prosperity puffs up many people, and the earth has no use for puffed up people.

A watch is built for actual service; service is the principal object. If you place about your watch an extravagant case of highly polished gold in many thus, with expensive carvings, studded with diamonds, you are fearful lest it should be contaminated by everyday wear. You are afraid some one will waylay you upon the street and take it from you by force. You are tempted to carry it in a buckskin bag, eager that it may not become scratched. This illustrates one of the dangers of high culture upon a young man who is not evenly balanced, or has a tendency to be affected along the lines indicated.—Exchange.

Teaching Spelling.

What about spelling? It is the observance of the arbitrary usage of writers of English as to the arrangement of letters in words. This usage is without reason, so that he who thinks least spells best. Only memory of mechanical symbols is involved in learning to spell. As a separate branch of study and test of culture, spelling has long been an educational fetish. Time was when it occupied a chief place in the programs of all elementary schools, and yet the spelling of the older generation among us is certainly not above criticism. The children of to-day spell better. This fact is undoubtedly due to the very large amount of written work now done in all schools. We must teach spelling. We must teach it systematically and persistently. But it is not taught by putting spelling books into the hands of children and having classes stand in rows and take turns in guessing at the spelling of words in which they are not interested. As a school exercise nothing more senseless could be devised. No one ever did learn to spell in this way. No separate text-book in this subject is needed, and none can be used below the upper grammar grades without great injury. It is believed that these opinions are in harmony with the thought and experience, but not the patience, of the educational world.

How shall we teach spelling? Children learn to copy all the words they learn to read during the first months in school. Later they learn to copy into scrip the printed words in their reading lessons. As a third step, they learn to write lists of well-known words and easy sentences from dictation. During the recitation hour, they pronounce over and over the list of words in their readers. With books open, they name the letters in these words. They sound these same words and cultivate accuracy in pronunciation. They write little statements in which they use these familiar words. The teacher calls special attention to difficult, unphonetic words and teaches the children to spell them. As pupils progress, they learn to spell the new words in all lessons. They write much, and learn to consult their dictionaries for the spelling of words. They learn to spell by spelling. The teacher takes little time in examining the pupils, one at a time, in spelling, but much time in actually teaching them to spell.—Midland Schools.

Pensioning Teachers.

We have before us a communication urging that there should be incorporated in the proposed city charter a provision for granting pensions to teachers in the public schools who have become superannuated or who are unable to continue their work.

We are very emphatically opposed to the proposed plan. We look upon this pension business as a veritable cancer of government and paternalism. We believe heartily in the early American idea of personal liberty and independent individualism. The pensioning of public servants, no matter in what department they are employed, has a withering effect upon all those sturdy virtues of a strong self-reliant character.

The public service is not more dangerous than other fields of employment. A man or a woman who receives fair wages until no longer fit for service and does not save something for old age would not do so in any other occupation and is certainly not the best servant for the public.

There is no reason why the frugal and industrious should be made to pay taxes to support those who, as a rule, receive proportionately larger sums for their services than they do. Those who choose to become teachers usually do so because they like the work and because they think it furnishes the best opportunity of earning a living.

We believe in the utmost liberality in providing for our public school system. We are in favor of paying good salaries to good teachers, but we are emphatically opposed to the idea of pensioning teachers or any other set of officials. There is no reason why, because a person decides to follow the occupation of teaching, those who are not teachers should be compelled to pay for the support of such teachers as become old or have suffered misfortunes which all mortals are heir to.

Teachers are employed less days in the year than most people and receive proportionately higher salaries. They ought to save money for the rainy day just the same as all of the rest of us must do and if they are wastefully extravagant or if any of them chance to experience heavy misfortunes, then they must be content to receive the benefits similar to those available to all other mortals. They should have no special privileges. The Leader is opposed to the idea of pensioning public school teachers and it will never cease to voice its opposition so long as there is any likelihood that a pensioning provision may be incorporated in the new charter.—New Haven Leader.

Trained as Smugglers.

The shooting of a big dog by a customs officers in the north of France some time ago gave rise to some queer dog stories in the French papers. The officer shot the dog because he was suspiciously fat.

An examination revealed the fact that the animal wore a leather coat made to look like his own skin, and skillfully fastened at the shoulders and haunches in such a way as to completely conceal the ends in the hair. In this coat the dog carried several hundred cigars and quite a large quantity of tobacco.

On the Spanish frontier smuggling with the aid of trained dogs has long been a flourishing business, and now the same practice has reached Belgium. Cigars, jewelry and lace constitute the trade, the animals receiving a special training for the profession.

The practice consists in traveling from one place in Belgium to another in France, and vice versa, avoiding the high roads and revenue men.

The latter they are taught by bitter experience to avoid, for the smugglers who train them keep a supply of uniforms of revenue officers on hand.

The uniforms are donned by confederates whom the dogs have never seen, and these fellows beat and stone the dogs unmercifully. The result is the dogs run whenever they see a genuine officer.

When a dog is started off on his journey with his load, the smuggler sets out for the same place, but he takes the direct road, or travels boldly by rail, caring, of course, nothing for any inspection of his baggage that may be made.

A New Language.

In the course of Mark Twain's visit to Egypt, says the Saturday Review, he engaged two Arab guides and set out for the pyramids. He was familiar enough with Arabic, he thought, to understand and he understood with perfect ease.

To his consternation, he found that he could not comprehend a word that either of the guides uttered. At the pyramids he met a friend, to whom he made known his dilemma. It was very mysterious, Twain thought.

"Why, the explanation is simple enough," said the friend.

"Please enlighten me, then," said Twain.

"Why, you should have hired younger men. These old fellows have lost their teeth, and of course they don't speak Arabic. They speak gum-Arabic."

Religious Rite of Japan.

The Japanese religion demands that a man must worship "on the soil" every day. Princes and rich men evade this by sprinkling a little dirt in one corner of a room, sometimes on a square of cement made for the purpose.

Iron in the Body.

There are about 100 grains of iron in the average human body, and yet so important is this exceedingly small quantity that its diminution is attended with very serious results.

A size in stockings is three-quarters of an inch.

The oddest specimen of the snake family known to the American naturalist, not taking into consideration the two-headed snake and other monstrosities of that ilk, is the horned rattlesnake, which, up to a few years ago, was thought to be one of the rarest as well as one of the most poisonous of serpents. Prior to the time when Dr. C. Mart Merriam made the famous Death Valley exploring expedition, in 1892-'93, but few specimens of it, and those mostly from the western desert regions, had been collected. The Death Valley explorers say that Death Valley is literally alive with them. They have horns on top of their heads, and are the smallest rattlers known.

STOP, WOMEN!

And Consider the All-Important Fact

That in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience in treating woman's diseases is greater than that of any living physician—male or female.

You can talk freely to a woman when it is revolting to relate your private troubles to a man; besides, a man does not understand—simply because he is a man.

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing full well that they ought to have immediate assistance, but a natural modesty impels them to shrink from exposing themselves to the questions and probably examinations of even their family physician. It is unnecessary. Without money or price you can consult a woman whose knowledge from actual experience is greater than any local physician in the world. The following invitation is freely offered; accept it in the same spirit:

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women only. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established the eternal confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken.

Out of the vast volume of experience which she has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge that will help your case. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has relieved thousands. Surely, any woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.—Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

THE SERENADE.

St. Valentine! St. Valentine! Be thou my friend this night,
I serenade a dainty maid,
That is my heart's delight.

Oh, pray she be not cold to me as are the frosty skies,
That I may see her turn on me
One sweet glance from her eyes.

Beneath her window here I stay as still the moments go,
Till I divine by some slight sign
She hears my voice below.

St. Valentine! St. Valentine! She does not hear me yet—
What's this I see? A sign, dear me!
"THIS VACANT HOUSE TO LET!"

An Unexpected Valentine.

When my dear Aunt Maud died—she died the very summer I graduated—I was really too heart-broken to care what became of me. Still, I had to be disposed of in some way, so it was decided that I go to live with my brother Richard in South Carolina.

Dick is a bachelor, an attorney-at-law, and has a very fair practice indeed. Anterior to my advent, he had lived by himself in a pretty cottage on the prettiest street, and was rather a central figure, and was quite the most eligible young man about town.

We got on famously together, so famously that in all probability the last chapter would have found us still there, he a grizzly old bachelor, I a grizzled old maid, had not something occurred which brought about a change.

It all grew out of what happened one St. Valentine's eve.

On this day, memorable above other days, just about an hour after dinner Dick received a telegram to go up that evening to A——, a city fifty miles away, to meet an important client. He did not have time to come home, for the train was then in sight, but he scribbled me the following note, which I did not get until nearly night, because the office boy neglected to bring it until that time:

3:10 p. m.

Dear Girl—Have to leave on next train to meet a man in A——. Probably won't get home till to-morrow noon. Spend the night with the Ancient (a dear old lady friend of mine). Be sure to put that money in the bank before it closes at 4. Don't fail. DICK.

The money—several thousand dollars collected for a client—surely I could not at 7 put money in a bank that closed at 4. I could not very well carry it with me to the Ancient's, and I certainly could not leave it.

I had never heard of any burglaries in the village, so I made up my mind that I would stay at home that night and take the risk.

I did not want any tea, so I let the servant girl go early; and sat before a big oak fire in the sitting room, "thinking up" one of Dick's cases. It was a murder case, that had a great deal of circumstantial evidence leading in various directions. I soon became deeply absorbed; so deeply that I presently went to sleep at it.

I woke up suddenly, frightened to find myself enveloped in darkness. Everything was so still. I was possessed with a strange, sinking fear. I was afraid to move, afraid to turn my head to left or right lest I see something terrifying lurking in the gloomy corners. I was cold, too, and trembling. The room was chilled; I fancied it must be just before dawn.

My fear increased rather than diminished as the moments dragged by. I had a kind of instinctive animal fear of impending danger. I thought of the money. It was locked up in the cabinet at my right hand, not two yards away. I found myself listening painfully, tortuously.

I endeavored to rally my courage, to persuade myself that I had awakened from a nightmare, and was nervous. All to no purpose. Something was going to happen which would bring me hurt.

I could not throw off the notion. Just then it began to rain—a regular downfall, as if the bottom had suddenly fallen out of the clouds. I have never known it to rain so heavily. A perfect deluge, and every drop seemed to penetrate my soul. I did not move. I lay back in my cushioned chair helpless, and felt that I could not have raised my hand to my face if my life were the forfeit. Such pouring! I found myself listening behind the rain—behind all the pattering noise—listening for another sound. I had a grotesque idea that the elements and this something that was coming to me, were colleagued together, the one to screen the approach of the other.

I was listening with every fiber of my body drawn taut. Listening for what? I did not know. Something beyond, behind the rain. Then I heard it. A sound distinct from the rain patter. A sound emanating from our little drawing room—a scraping, sawing sound. It came from the front portico. I knew someone was cutting through the Venetian blinds into the house. My faintest doubt vanished soon, when I unmistakably heard the blinds dragged back and the sash creak as it was pushed up. Someone was entering the house! In a twinkling my mind was acutely active, and a thousand ways of escape surged through my brain in a moment. I unlocked the cabinet and grasped the large pocketbook which contained the notes, and thrust it into my bosom. I clutched the money in my bosom and stepped into the empty fireplace. In another moment I was scrambling up the sooty chimney with the ability of a finished chimney sweep, and I kept scrambling till I had made a stronghold for myself.

What went on down below I did not know. In the cessations of the rain I could hear the heavy tread passing to and fro in a search, I know, for that money. But I, from my lofty vantage ground, could only thank heaven again and again for such a blessed deliverance.

I was so benumbed with cold and fright that I think I lost consciousness, and would probably have tumbled down the chimney but that I was so rigid and smalled in I could not.

The next thing I remember was opening my eyes and seeing the square of war light above me. Then realizing all, my strength gave way, and I fell heavily, striking my head against something which left me senseless for hours. When I came to myself, I was in the arms of a young man whom I had never seen before.

I don't suppose there was ever a more terrified young man upon this earth of ours. Imagine an inoffensive young man turning up in a town where an intimate friend lived, coming in on the very train that takes this intimate friend out. Imagine the intimate friend cordially inviting the newcomer to his house, telling him there was nobody in it, but that he could put up there, make himself lord and master, find plenty to eat by foraging around, and get a good bed. Then to make the thing complete, give him the wrong keys by which to let himself in. Imagine this newcomer booming about town until 11 o'clock, then striking out for his friend's abode; overtaken by the rain; at last to arrive at his intended abiding place to discover he has the wrong keys, which necessitates his climbing into the house like a burglar. Imagine him piling into the first bed he comes to, very soon sinking off into the untroubled slumber of the innocent at heart, to be awakened at the peep of day by a something tumbling down the chimney. Not a hobgoblin—that were better—but a young woman and one probably more dead than alive. Imagine it all, if you can, for that is what happened to the misguided young man, who held me across his knees and wiped the blood from my broken forehead on that memorable St. Valentine's morning.

When the servant girl came he went for the doctor, and Mary got me to bed.

Dick came at noon, and was horrified at what had happened. But the doctor had pronounced me more frightened than hurt; and really, but for the dreadful cold I caught, and my wounded forehead, it did not amount to anything, and soon became a tremendous joke.

And it turned out that this friend of Dick's, whose acquaintance I made in such an unconventional fashion, was the very client whose money I defended.

And it also came about that—that he—that I—that we have—we have grown to know each other very well.—Detroit Free Press.

A Valentine.

What would I send you,
Oh, friend of mine?
Clusters of blossoms
To smile and shine,

Pansies to gladden,
Roses to bless;
Lilies to bend in
Their frail loveliness?

But snow-drifts have hidden
All beauty away,
Not a smile's in the country,
This wintry day.

Everything's waiting
To smile by and by;
When summer's returning
With blue sunny sky.

But, dear, I can never Forget you, you know,
When winter is frowning,
And chilly winds blow.

So, I am sending,
Dear heart, to you,
Wishes most tender
And love most true.
—Womankind.

Valentine Making.

The lace paper which comes upon toilet soap boxes, raisin boxes and confectionery—often large squares are used to cover the candies in boxes—may be made to play an important part in the valentine making. Strips of this lace paper may be made to finish the four sides of a card, and pictures, stamps or gilt lettering be added to the inner space, or two wide strips may be fastened to opposite sides, meeting in the middle; these are to open back and show a picture or lettering beneath. A square of the lace paper will serve to make a valentine quite equal to those in the stores. One edge of the card is turned forward and the edge of the lace square is pasted over this and forms an upper leaf. A verse, picture or butterflies may decorate the lower leaf and perhaps an embossed picture be added to the lace front. Daintily colored paper is even prettier with these laces than the white.

For St. Valentine's Day.

My earnest love! When she is meek,
And talks of prayer and penance lowly,
Her silken eyelash on her cheek—
I love her then with love as holy,
As free from earthly stain or taint,
As monk may give to shrined saint.

My winsome love! When she's inclined
To view life more in aspect human,
I'm very glad, indeed, to find
That she can be so much a woman.
I love her for the love she gives,
And think no sweeter being lives.

My naughty love! But when she laughs,
And strives to puzzle and displease me,
When, merciless, she guys and chaffs,
And does her charming best to tease me,
'Tis very strange this should befall—
That then I love her best of all!

An Airship of Aluminum.

A company has been organized in San Francisco for the building of an immense airship, aluminum to be used in its construction. The vessel will be about 200 feet in length over all, and the cylinder will be 35 feet in diameter by 125 feet, the cones tapering to a point at a distance of about 50 feet each from the cylinder. The propelling power will be a Maxim engine of 180-horse power. The projectors of the enterprise are all men of wealth.

Ragged Wayside—"Why did yer steal dat scientific paper when dere wuz lots wid gals' pictures in dem lyin' 'round?" Wandering Willy—"I like ter read 'bout de invention of labor-savin' machinery. Dis will be a flue world ter live in when dere's no more work done by hand."—Comic Cuts.

Mr. Jones' Valentine.

Jones smiles with blissful joy divine,
It was no comic valentine,
Nor yet a thing of crimps and laces,
Of furbelows and Cupid faces.
Ah! is his ticket one that wins?
More, more, my friend—a pair of twins.

With a population about half that of this country, France is getting along toward the billion dollar mark in annual expenses. The interest on the national debt is $370,000,000, and the cost of the army and navy $180,000,000. The revenues this year are estimated at $665,000,000, and a deficit of about $10,000,000 is probable.

Complaints have frequently been made with regard to the unreliability of many of the Paris guides, who make a living by showing strangers the sights of the city, more particularly the nocturnal ones in the haunts of its less reputable quarters. It is said that some of these guides are in league with rogues and reprobates, who make it a point to fleece the too-confiding sightseers and share the profits with the guides. A petition has recently been presented to the municipal council asking that body to appoint a special set of guides responsible to the authorities.

A STRANGE CASE OF RHEUMATISM.

Mother and Daughter Both Afflicted by a Similar Disease—Hands Became Numb, Cold, and Lifeless—No Circulation of the Blood.

From the New Era, Greensburg, Ind.

A reporter called one morning in September at the home of Mrs. Louise Gettel, of Centreville, Ind., and found Mrs. Gettel with her daughter, Nola, who is about 20 years of age, busy canning fruit. Mrs. Gettel is about 50 years old, and says that ever since she was a young woman she has been severely afflicted with a strange type of rheumatism, which seemed to affect her hands and arms more especially than any other part of the body. Quite frequently she would have to give up her work, being entirely unable to do anything. Her hands became numb, cold and lifeless—no circulation of blood. This feeling extended through the whole of the arm, and quite frequently, more or less, throughout her whole system. When these spells took place, she was compelled to resort to rubbing to cause a circulation of blood.

This state of affairs continued for years, and all the time to a certain extent she has consulted physicians and taken various kinds of medicine. At times a seeming relief was had, but at periods the strange, cold, lifeless, numb, and horrible feeling would return—a feeling hard to explain and difficult to describe. Some nine months ago, hearing of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, she was induced to try a box to see what effect they would have, and now can say that she had scarcely taken one box till she felt their good effect, and in her own words she says:

"I soon found a much better circulation of blood, and that numb, cold, lifeless sensation, that so long has been such a dread to me, began to be less frequent, and much less severe. This was the result of but one box. I continued until now, and I have taken nearly two boxes. I feel confident that if I keep on for awhile longer, this malady, so long a dreaded visitor, will be entirely eradicated from my system.

"Yes, I can heartily recommend the pills to the many who in any similar way may be afflicted as I have been."

To the above conversation her daughter Nola, who sat by and heard all that was said, heartily acquiesced in all her mother had told the reporter, and in addition related how she had taken a box for an illness something similar to that of her mother, and what great benefit she derived from them.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness, either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Rights of Bicyclers.

A bicycle rider was run down and injured by a street-car going in the direction in which he was going. His suit against the railway company to recover damages for personal injuries was dismissed by the lower court on the ground that his admitted failure to look behind him was contributory negligence on his part.

The appellate division of the Supreme Court, after reviewing the case, decided that a person riding a wheel must, first of all, keep a good lookout in front and on both sides; that if this be done, the rider cannot keep watch behind; and that to require a constant rear lookout would amount to prohibition of bicycle-riding. Therefore, to say the least, the question whether this rider was guilty of contributory negligence in not seeing the oncoming car should have been submitted to the jury. A new trial was ordered.

The result of the new trial will interest several millions of persons in the United States. The bicycle has come to stay, and the statutes and decisions relating to its use will constitute an important feature of the law.—Youth's Companion.

Truths About Business.

A man writing in a Chicago Daily not long ago, gives out a good many truths that our people should study. He says:

"A plain mechanic of fifty years experience would like to say a word on the young man's chances of success. I was brought up on a farm, and at the age of 17 was apprenticed to learn the trade of an all-around blacksmith. After serving my apprenticeship, I found no trouble in getting employment at my trade, and after I had tired of tramping, and had a little money ahead, I started a small shop with one forge. I soon had a good trade established on custom work and repairing, and I put in another forge, took an apprentice, hired a journeyman blacksmith and wagon-wood workman. Between times when jobbing and repair work was slack, the wagonmaker would build the wood parts of new wagons. We would take them into the smithshop, iron them, have them painted and finished up, and could sell them at a fair profiit, and by so doing keep all hands steadily employed. Now there were three men with steady employment at fair wages and an apprentice learning the trade. At the same time there were perhaps 10,000 small shops scattered all over the state doing the same. This would make a total of 30,000 mechanics employed and 10,000 boys learning the trade, preparing for the future. Where are they now? All concentrated in one or two large factories, with their capital and their machinery, employing 300 or 400 men and boys, who in a short time learn to do one part of the work in following the machine and know nothing else. If they lose their job on this they are out in the cold. This is what has taken place of the thousands of mechanics of thirty or forty years ago. But, says one who is not posted, there is still work for these shops doing repair work. Do you not know that all work made in the factory of modern times is duplicated? If any part gives out, go to the dealer; he will send to the factory and in a few hours the part will come by express ready to replace the broken part. A wrench and hammer are all the tools necessary to put it in place. Take this state as a sample of all. Go into the country village that a few years ago had from two to four small shops doing a fair business. What will you see now? It is the same with the farmer. He jumps on his machine, the reaper and self-binder, and snaps his fingers as he says: "I am independent. Don't have to hire men to bind." See here, Mr. Farmer and Mr. Everybody Else, did it ever occur to you that there must be consumers as well as producers? If not, where is your market? Where is the money to come from to buy with, if men have no employment so they can earn it? Whole pages of The Record might be takes up showing the changes that have taken place within the last forty years. But it is unnecessary. The foregeing is sufficient to show what are the chances of the young man now compared with what they were thirty or forty years ago.

Express Cars.

The American Express company has placed on the Big Four and other roads a number of armored express cars which are supposed to be burglar proof.

They are built to withstand any attack that might be made on them. A bullet-proof room is located in the center of the arsenals These rooms are built of steel one and one-half inches in thickness. The steel doors leading to either end of the car each have a small peep hole through which a gun can be ranged and fired. On either is a steel projection or turret a foot wide, and extending from the level of the window sill to the roof. At each end at the side of this turret a port is provided so that a rifle can be used to sweep the side of the train from front to rear, or to shoot in any direction.

Through apertures in this bomb-proof room, where seats are provided for two men, the top of the train is brought into range. The side windows provide a clear view of what is going on across the right-of-way. On racks built in the bomb-proof room are six riot guns, each holding six cartridges, each of which is filled with twelve buckshot. In a case of the armored room is a small caisson, in which is carefully placed ammunition sufficient for a small army.

Twenty Years....

For more than twenty years we have been telling how Scott's Emulsion overcomes the excessive waste of the system, puts on flesh, nourishes and builds up the body, making it the remedy for all wasting diseases of adults and children, but it isn't possible for us to tell the story in a mere stickful of newspaper type.

We have had prepared for us by a physician a little book, telling in easy words how and why Scott's Emulsion benefits, and a postal card request will be enough to have it sent to you free. To-day would be a good time to send for it.

A. D. MOORE.

"Chinese Wall"

It is not known to many that the Romans built a wall along a part of their northern frontier, in the northeast part Germany. A recent traveler speaks of it in a letter:

For some hours I followed the line of the "Pfahlgraben," a barrier which was put up about the year 70 A. D. as the northern boundary of the Roman empire and as a defence against the dreaded German hordes. It extended for hundreds of miles, was patrolled by soldiers, and no one could pass it at all during the night, nor bring arms and weapons through by day. At present it stretches along as a long grass-covered mound, out of which large trees are growing. At frequent intervals can be seen the foundations of the square stone towers, which were used as guard houses. The German government appropriated $200,000 not long ago for excavations, and I came repeatedly upon newly exposed masonry. At one point a castle made part of the defenses, and the remains of its walls, to a height of several feet, are still standing.

Changed Conditions.

We have often said that our country and its manufucturing interests would be be better off to-day had there never been an attempt to "protect" any of them by a high tariff or other government help. The false teachings of protection beggars are shown by a recent letter from a big concern in Philadelphia, the place of all others that has produced the most rabid protection ideas. This firm has sent the following letter to the House Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee to which are made all the applications that ask for higher tariff duties to "protect" some one. This is the letter:

"PHILADELPHIA. PA., Jan. 8.—Sir: The Midvale Steel Company respectfully appears before your committee to request that no change be made in the present scnedules of the tariff relating to the manufacture of metals and to the materials, either raw or in a partly made state, which are used in the manufacture of metals.

Premising that the object which the commitee has in view is twofold—first, the obtaining of sufficient revenue to meet the requirements of a government wisely and economically administered; secondly, the alleviation of the burden of the cost of living bearing most heavily on those of our fellow citizens who are least able to bear the load, because of their not being sufficiently provided with means of subsistence, and who have to earn their daily wages by the labor of their hand."

The Midvale Steel Company would represent to the honorable members of the committee that any increase in the rate of duty on articles imported into this country must necessarily diminish its revenue, because it would shut off or diminish to a certain extent the importation of such articles And, on the other hand, increasing the cost of the article to the consumer to the extent of the increase of the tariff would diminish the market for such articles and at the same time increase the cost of living. The very objects, therefore that the committee seeks to attain would be defeated by any charge of the tariff in the direction of any increase of the rates, but would be promptly and efficaciously reached by the diminution of the present existing duties.

While this additional tax might to a small extent increase the business of the manufacturer, any profit coming to him in this indirect manner must necessarily inure to his sole benefit, because the question of wages is one of supply and demand, and cannot in any way be affected by tariff legislation, and no manufacturer would permit any false sentiment to influence him to pay the laborer one dollar more for wages than the market supply of labor would warrant.

POINT TO REMEMBER.

It is well known to the honorable members of the committee that the price at which nearly every article manufactured in this country is sold is not based on its cost as much as it is fixed by agreement or understanding between manufacturers, who regulate the amount of product and output to the factories, points of deliveries and the prices and terms at which the manufactured article is sold. The Midvale Steel Company is engaged in the manufacture of steel solely, and as an instance of the effect of the tariff on its business it would mention that the price of tires (one of its products) has not been affected in the slightest manner by the difference between the existing tariff (the Wilson bill) and the tariff formerly enforced (commonly known as the McKinley bill). Whereas the schedule under the former tariff law was 2¼ cents per pound and the base price of tires was 4 cents per pound, to-day the base price of tires is still 4 cents per pound and the schedule is 1¼ cents per pound.

Nor has the Wilson bill affected the number of tires manufactured here to any appreciable extent. The Midvale Steel Company is the largest maker of this product in the United States and one of the largest in the world, and its business has steadily increased from year to year.

Another branch of manufacture in which the Midvale Steel Company is engaged is steel castings. That the rate of duty on steel castings is more than sufficient for the protection of this branch of industry in the United States is best evideuced by the fact that castings made of steel are sold in England at between 30 and 50 per cent higher prices than obtained in this country, and in France at over 1 per cent higher than prevail in the United States.

The Midvale Steel Company is at present engaged in increasing its trade abroad, and it greatly fears that any increase of duty in the metal schedules by exciting retaliatory measures on the part of foreign nations may have disastrous results on this new expansion of trade.

While not wishing in any way to point out to your honorable committee might be encouraged, the Midvale Steel Company would respectfully offer to the consideration of its members the suggestion that by making such treaties with neighboring friendly nations on a reciprocal commercial basis that would them to build up a more intimate commercial intercourse with the United States the members of the committee would be doing a patriotic act and deserve well at the hands of their fellow citizens."

All of which is respectfully submitted.

THE MIDVALE STEEL COMPANY,

By J. C. Harrah, President.

THE PASSING OF THE SLATE.

Will Carleton's Every Where

It is said that the good old-fashioned slate will soon be excluded from school-rooms—certain Board of Education having ascertained that microbes may be communicated by slates, and that paper is now cheap enough to warrant its being used for "ciphering."

No doubt a soiled slate may not be the healthiest substance in the world for a child to groom with tongue-moistened hands, and probably the great procession of "sums or examples" will march its way through the school room much more quietly; but few who love the droning memories of desk and recitation-room, but will regret seeing slates disappear.

What a great variety of the metal tablets used to pervade all well supplied school-rooms! There was the dear old square framed slate, with an oblique point in each corner, and four wooden pegs to bind it together. This was of different sizes, and might easily be broken by a chance dropping.

Then came the round or oblong slate hooped with a curved frame which was supposed to rest much more economically on the lap of the user, and to miss a a great many collisions with the desk. This bulletin of mathematical lore was thicker than the other, and longer lived.

Then came the slate that had shed its frame, and was simply a bleak black slab of stone. The boy who manipulated this generally managed to drop it to the floor several times a day, with a shrill ring that made all the school up to see if any portion of the roof had fallen. As soon as slate got out of its frame it became lawless and disreputable.

Once in a great while some 'scholar' appeared with a slate that opened and closed like a book; and he bore the mingled scorn and envy of half his mates.

The slate-pencils, too, had their characteristics, and varied considerably. If not of different race they were surely of different colors, one coal black and another a light gray. They were occasionally sharpened, with large jack-knives—one end of them leaning against the desk and emitting a loud screech and yell. The main question regarding a slate-pencil was whether it would "scratch" or not.

The things that used to appear on the old time slate were many and various. The legitimate encumbrance was of course, figures—figures—figures; but these were only a part.

There were pictures galore: some of them natural, if not artistic. Many a now-famous artist has used the slate for his first canvas; many an untalented child has been punished for making a rude and uncomplimentary semblance of "the teacher." Drawing, which is now a study, used to be a misdemeanor in school, and had to be done when the instructor's back was turned.

Then there was the huge letters S, made with x-connected dots and semi-circular curves; the sly coupling of names to see whether thir owners would be sweethearts; the short, sharp and quickly-decided battle of "Tit-tat-toe—three in a row;" the thrilling campaign of "Fox-and-geese," or "Twelve-men-morris;" and the puzzling process of "Go-from-there-to-there."

And the short but thrilling love-letters that were smuggled from desk to desk—to be "rubbed out" from the slate but never from the memory—these are not least among the things that will make many staid and highly respectable people regard this new and final passing of the slate, with a mildly regretful interest.

BOY PREACHER

The "boy preacher," a young man of only 17, is creating a great deal of interest in his meetings at Sugar Grove School House, two miles southwest of Auburn Junction. He has been preaching there over a week, and has services every evening. He says he may continue till cornplanting. All are invited to come and hear this brilliant young minister.

State Fish Commissioners.

The appointment of State Fish Commissioner goes to Rev. Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, Ind. It will be remembered that he was the minister who spoke at a county meeting at St. Joe a few years ago. Many of our people know him. Mr. Sweeney has held many responsible positions in the religious, literary and political life of this country. For twenty-four years pastor of one of the largest churches among the religious people of his choice, and editorially connected with several of its denominational journals; he has been connected with Butler university of the capacity of chancellor; is the author of a book of travel, for which Bishop J. H. Vincent wrote the introduction; has been president of the Indiana Christian Sunday school convention; president of the Indiana anti-liquor league. He was United States consul-general to the Ottoman 1889 to 1891. He was imperial Ottoman commissioner to the world's Columbian exposition, and was decorated by his imperial majesty, Abdul Hamid Khan II, sultan of Turkey, with the order of the Osmanieh.

Mr. Sweeney bore the recommendation of nearly every prominent fishing club in Indiana for the position to which he had been appointed.

VOTE ANNOUNCED

And Now We Know Who Will be President of These United States till March 4, 1901.

Yesterday, Wednesday, the electoral votes were counted in the presence of the two Houses of Congress, and the result announced. It was a mere formality of course, as everyone knows how it stands, but there have been several instances when this formal action was extremely important. The most notable case was that between Tilden and Hayes, when the two Houses could not settle it, and it was left to a commission of fifteen men, five from the House, five from the Senate, and five of the judges of the U. S. Supreme Court. They gave it to Hayes by a strict party vote, the eight republicans voting for him while seven democrats voted for Tilden. The result left Tilden with 184 electoral votes and Hayes 185. Hayes was given the vote of three southern states that had gone democratic. They were Louisiana, Florida and South Carolina. The "commission" threw out enough democratic votes in these to run Hayes' vote up to 185. They did not deny but the face of the returns showed a democratic majority, but they said there would have been a republican majority had the votes been properly counted. It was an unheard of decision and undoubtedly wrong, for had Tilden received but one more electoral vote to add to his 184 undisputed votes, he would have been elected. And no one doubts now, but the electoral vote of Louisiana at least should have been given him. And at best, there were three democratic electors in that state, that ran several thousand ahead of the rest of the ticket, and of the state democratic ticket. And Hayes himself as president caused to be seated the democratic governor, who had received 3000 fewer votes than had the three highest Tilden electors.

At the count, this week, there was no trouble, although had the vote been so close at as to require it, there would have been a contest over the vote of South Carolina. Only one state, Alabama, was read fully, then the others were simply announced as giving so many votes, one way or the other. The total electoral vote showed 447; necessary to a choice, 224: McKinley and Hobart had 271: Bryan had 176, and his two vice-presidents, had—Sewall, 149, and Watson, 27.

There was a good deal of dissatisfaction about the refusal to let the common people into the Hall, during the count. Complaint was made againt Speaker Reed, of the House, as to this. Each Senator and Representative was allowed but two tickets for his friends and no one could get in without a ticket.

FIRST GUN FOR US.

Senator Nusbaum has just scored his first success in the Senate, by getting passed his bill for regulating the work of auditors and county commissioners. It was brought to a vote on Monday and defeated by a vote of 18 for and 20 against. But he was not satisfied, and believing the bill was not understood as it should be, he got a reconsideration, and it came up again Tuesday forenoon, and was discussed for and against for four house. It was then put on its passage and was triumphantly carried, the vote being 40 in favor of it with only 4 against it. This shows that he had done some effective work that day. It has now been sent to the House, where Mr. Brown will have charge of it, and it is likely to pass. If it does it will be a great thing for our two members, for it is always a difficult matter for a member of the minorty to get through a bill of any sort.

THOSE PROMISES.

"Listener" in South Bend Times gets off this timely hit:

He had been a great McKinley advocate before the election but of late had lots of time to lounge at the corner grocery. "McKinley is not elected yet is he?" he said inquiringly the other night. He was assured to the contrary and then ruefully remarked, "That can't be for I was promised a sure job as soon as McKinley was elected and I haven't done a day's work since the election and the Lord knows I'm willing." The man with the gold hat dyed black and the individual with a gold cane doing duty as a chicken perch, each began to talk about something else, while the patriot who carried the banner labeled 'No fifty cent dollars for us' felt down deep in his pocket and could find nary a nick."

THE LEGISLATURE

The republican majority seems to be proceeding on the principle of "The public be d——d." It has so far ignored as far as possible the needs and wishes of the people.

The apportionment bill is a case in point. The people have not asked for such an apportionment as they are giving us. Take our six counties in this congressional district. The people of all parties are suited with the one we havenow. But the bosses are going to give us a worse one.

Again, the people have for many years been demanding a salary law, that would reduce the burden of taxation, and still give officers good pay. They got nearly such a law as they wanted from democratic legislatures. Now comes this one, strongly republican, that is likely to pass a law raising those salaries again.

There is another bill on some legal point we do not understand very well, but it is evidently gotten up by some old fogy with the intention of cutting down the innocent pastime of hundreds of our younger people. We refer to the "Hugg Bill". Our people should at once petition to have that last "g" taken off. There are still some rights the people propose to retain, or know the reason why.

IT IS THE SHERIFF NOW

Has not Turned Over all the Fees, as County Attorney Rose Finds.

There are wild rumors afloat in regard to the management of the sheriff's office, and as is apt to be, exaggerated and distorted. After our recent experiences, people may perhaps be justified in getting excited over any such matter that comes up. But we have in all these cases tried to give the facts and nothing more. So we have examined into the matter and find that Mr. Stroh's books show that he has not turned over to the county, all the fees he should have turned over. Under the present salary law a county officer must turn over to the county every dollar that comes into his hands, as fees. Under the old law he kept all fees. Among the other fees retained by Mr. Stroh is his per diem of $2 for court service. The law allows this $2 a day while court is in session, but he should turn that over to the county. Then at each quarterly session of the commissioners he is allowed his quarter's salary. Sometimes however, there has not enough money been turned over to pay him. Then he must wait. We believe Mr. Stroh has not yet received all his salary, but he will have to turn over these fees fully, whether salary is due him or not. That is all there is of the matter.

OUR MONEY

Very few people pay much attention to our money, except the effort we all have to get what we need of it. And there are so many kinds of money in use, that one would need to take some time to get acquainted with the conditions of all of them. We note a few of the most common.

SILVER CERTIFICATES.

These certify that silver dollars to that amount have been deposited in the treasury, to be used in redeeming them. And silver alone is paid out to redeem them. On the back is this:

"This certificate is receivable for customs taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued."

SHERMAN TREASURY NOTES.

These are the paper money issued under the Sherman silver purchasing act, in payment for silver bullion bought at market price and are payable in "coin." They are redeemable in either gold or silver at the will of the secretary of the treasury. On the back, they read:

"This note is legal tender at its face value, in payment of all debts, public and private, except when otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract."

NATIONAL BANK BILLS.

These say the bank "will pay bearer on demand." On the back, we find this:

"This note is receivable at par in all parts of the United States in payment of all taxes and excises, and all other dues to the United States, except duties on imports; and also for all salaries and other debts and demands owing by the United States, to individuals, corporations and associations within the United States, except interest on the public debt."

CUBAN WAR REVIEW.

TWO YEARS OF FIGHTING WITH LITTLE RESULT.

History of the Present Uprising—Story of the Stormy Island from Its Discovery—Topographical and Climatic Conditions.

A Land of Rebellion.

Nearly two years have elapsed since the Cubans declared that they would no longer endure the yoke of Spain. Millions of dollars have been expended during that time, both in the maintenance of armies and the destruction of the property of the people of the war-swept island. Feb. 24, 1895, is the date upon which the insurgents declared their independence, and before the end of the month martial law had been proclaimed in Havana, Jose Marti was placed at the head of the provisional government, and Gen. Maximo Gomez had arrived in Cuba to begin operations.

The history of the island runs coincident with our own, and is therefore interesting. Cuba was discovered by Christopher Columbus Oct. 28, 1492, sixteen days after he touched at San Salvador, and nineteen years later his son, Diego, colonized the island, Pope Leo X. erecting its first cathedral. Velasquez followed with new contingents, and in 1519 the capital was located, at once assuming a position of importance in the eyes of the free lances of the ocean. In 1538 a French adventurer sacked the town, which was rebuilt when Ferdinand De Soto, the discoverer of the Mississippi River, was made Governor. Spain prized Havana as a base of operations. There Cortez completed his preparations for the conquest of Mexico, and there Pizarro rested his men before proceeding to Peru. Despite the strong fortress erected, the French in 1554 again destroyed the town, when two other fortresses for the defense of Havana were built, which still exist—the Moro and the Punta. By 1600 the colonists were raising cattle and applying thumb-screws and the torch to the natives to induce them to reveal the spots where they found gold and silver nuggets. Then they started the cultivation of tobacco and sugar, and the woes of the natives began. Under a system of cruelty and oppression the gentle aborigines diminished so rapidly that negro slaves were introduced, and that eventually led to the internecine strife which has made one of the fairest spots on earth the home of pestilence and crime and savagery in warfare, the contemplation of which sickens a civilized world.

After invasions by the French, English and Dutch, and various claims as to the ownership of the island, Cuba was restored to Spanish rule in 1763. A new native population now sprung up, and in 1790 Las Casas, whose memory is revered by Cubans to this day, became captain general of Cuba. Its ports were opened to the world, and great public improvements were effected. Despite the dawning of prosperity, however, and the representation of the island in the Madrid

MOTHER AND BABY SHOT BY THE SPANIARDS.

Parliament, several successive outbreaks occurred, culminating in the famous "Black Eagle" conspiracy of 1829. Good governors were few, and from Velasquez down to Weyler, they were vested with absolute power. Insurgents were buried alive, intolerance throve, and the merciless dealings of the despots finally effected an amalgamation of the white, red and black races. The insurrection referred to was quelled, but others followed, and two years since the restive spirit of the people, galling under an unjust yoke, was augmented by still worse Spanish misgovernment. The beet sugar production of Germany made Cuban culture unprofitable. With hard times came discontent. The stupid Madrid Government continued its oppressive taxation, injustice and nepotism, and exiled patriots saw their opportunity to give affairs a political character.

Money was raised, arms bought, ships chartered and parties of patriots—some of them veterans of the war of 1868-78—were landed in the eastern provinces, where white and colored woodmen of the plantations and small villages were induced to take up arms.

The location of Cuba is such that in case of annexation to the United States or even the certainty of its independence, the commercial benefits accruing to this country would be very great and lasting. It is only 130 miles from Florida, and although containing only 43,319 square miles, or a little more than half the area of the State of Kansas, every section is stored with rich natural resources. It has valleys that are susceptible of raising the finest grades of vegetable luxuries, and mountains 8,000 feet high. It has 200 rivers, and its seasons are uniformly divided—rain from May to October, sunny skies from November to April. The population is fully adequate to all possible national and commercial requirements. Five years ago it was announced at 1,521,684, of whom 977,992 were Spanish, 10,632 foreign whites, 489,249 blacks, and 43,811 Chinese. Havana alone is credited with a population of 200,000 souls. There are several short railways, in the aggregate covering some 500 miles.

Cuba abounds in citrus fruits. There are peerless orange, lemon and lime groves; cocoanuts, cocoanut oil, cocoa, coffee, india rubber, tobacco—these commodities form the base of supplies easily obtained, while the interior and middle sections boast immense forests of mahogany and dye woods. It is estimated that there are 13,000,000 acres of uncleared mahogany forests alone. The wood is so common that chopping blocks are made of it, and watering troughs of red cedar. Lignum vitae for flutes, lancewood for carriage shafts and surveying instruments, and other fine varieties of rare and precious timber also exist in wild and unlimited volume. There is the richest kind of grazing for cattle. Forty-four times more food can be secured from an acre of bananas than from an acre of potatoes, and it is claimed that from that small area in Cuba 20,000 pounds of flour can be obtained in a single year, and the much-used banana wine in proportion. With all these manifold resources, it is estimated that the island in normal times would take $300,000,000 worth of merchandise annually from the United States, to which country it now sells 250,000,000 cigars every year.

Up to the present time, when Cuban independence is still hovering in the balance, the history of the last great struggle for independence in Cuba involves the same line of victories and reverses that characterized the strife of the '60s, only that the people seem more determined and better organized. The death of Marti May 19, 1895, and that of Maceo a few weeks since, were severe blows for the insurrectionists, for they idolized these men, but intrepid leaders are not lacking. Marti's great political act was the summoning of the September convention, which declared a provisional government. He was shrewd, and persistent, and in an incredibly brief space of time had vast quantities of firearms imported from the United States. By December, 1895, the Cuban forces were right in the center of the Spanish army. The latter were driven back for seven consecutive days, and Campos, then in command, was forced to change his strategic positions by Gomez, being overwhelmed at Calisco, Christmas eve, Gomez, as he had promised, was within a few miles of Havana and Matanzas, and so certain of success seemed the efforts of the patriots, that Gen. Weyler was sent "to subdue this conglomeration of negroes, bandits, assassins and adventurers." Then began the policy of terror and butchery ever since diligently pursued. The tortures inflicted on prisoners, on suspects, on helpless, innocent women and children, almost outrival the Armenian cruelties; men were lashed to death, slowly garroted, women and children were cast into burning houses, blistered with lighted matches, dismembered, and these horrors, coupled with a memory of what 300 patriot Cubans were suffering in Spain's pet convict colony—Ceuta—fired the blood of every true native patriot anew, and brought to them the sympathy of nearly every nation on the earth. The Cubans stood firm, with nearly three-fourths of the island under control, with their civil government fully established in Santiago, Puerto Principe, Santa Clara and several minor provinces.

It is a remarkable fact that when Campos, "the strong man of Spain," arrived in Cuba with 36,000 soldiers "to recognize belligerent rights" in 1876, out of 145,000 soldiers previously sent, not enough had returned to their native land to constitute a regiment. The deeds following the oppression of those years were heroic. Persecution made martyrs. In one instance, a boy of 15 was arrested for seditious writings. He was loaded with chains, kept at hard labor, and finally sent to Spain. Here he became a brilliant journalist. This boy was Jose Marti, the great Cuban patriot, who by 1891 had formed patriot clubs everywhere, and who was the first to appear as a war leader when the present revolt broke out.

The war in Cuba may be primitive in its general methods and barbarous in the matter of butchery, but it is certainly modern in the rapid development of dynamite and other explosives as weapons of offense and defense. To the dynamite gun used by the Cubans in Pinar del Rio more than to anything else may be attributed the noteworthy successes of Maceo against the Spanish troops. Invisible bullets, though deadly in their effect, are comparatively easy to stand against. It requires superhuman nerve, however, to face a healthy dynamite projectile, and it is no wonder that the Spanish troops have been invariably defeated when called upon to make a stand against such weapons. Army officers are watching the war in Cuba with great interest, as the employment of dynamite by the Cubans has satisfied the military mind of the value of this explosive for offensive purposes.

Despite her financial embarrassment Spain has recently done relatively more than any European power, with the exception of Great Britain, to strengthen her navy. At present there are four torpedo-boat destroyers in the hands of builders. The first two have recently completed their official trials, and these have been most successful in all respects. The dimensions of the vessels are 220x

TORTURED WITH BLAZING MATCHES.

20 feet, and the engines are triple expansion, developing 6,000 horse power. The engines at the trials, both in the measured mile and in the three hours' continuous steaming test, worked smoothly and with no heating. The internal appliances are of the most up-to-date character, special attention being paid to what is the general defect in all torpedo craft, namely, ventilation.

HOW LONG MUST THIS LAST?

The encounters at Bocas del Toro, Palmarito, Palmiros, Canasi, Manut Mogate and Tagnasco were fast succeeding developments of the Cuban campaign directly after the declaration of independence, but these were mere skirmishes compared to the events of the past year. The splendid march of Gomez and Maceo across the island from Santiago to Pinar del Rio, the fierce fights within cannon shot of Havana, the constant destruction of the trochas, were brilliant achievements that terrified the encompassed Weyler, until they culminated in the death of Maceo. With the opening of the new year, however, the situation seems just as complex and undetermined as it was the day after the two chieftains hoisted their flag in the eastern province, and began the battle for freedom. The end is apparently no nearer than it was a month after the first call to arms.

PERSONAL ENCOUNTERS.

Interesting Notes About Duels and Duelling.

Even in Germany the popularity of the duel is open to some doubt. Its existence is due not so much to a desire for a combat as of fear what people will say if there is no fight. There have been noted duelists who were always ready for a fray, and when they entered a drawing-room women quailed and hoped it would not be their husbands or lovers who would be so unlucky as to excite the ire of the men of blood.

During the occupation of Paris by the Allies there were duels every day, the Frenchmen usually being the challengers and the victors, as they were very skillful with the small sword. Sometimes, however, they made a mistake, as when they jeered at an English officer over losing his leg at Waterloo. The jeerer discovered that the loss of his leg did not interfere in the least with the Englishman's aim.

There have been exceptions to the mania for fighting at any price. An English captain, challenged by a Frenchman, had the choice of weapons and chose pistols. The Frenchman declared he would fight with nothing but the sword and interested friends finally compromised on lances, horseback. The combat naturally attracted much attention. A great crowd witnessed the duel. One man received three ugly prods but finally killed his antagonist.

No duelist could ever be made to smile over the famous story of the Englishman and Frenchman who were to fight a duel in a pitch-dark room. Not wishing to kill his man, the Englishman fired up the chimney when the word was given, and, to his surprise, brought down the Frenchman, who had hidden there. When this story is told in France it is always the Englishman who is up the chimney.

Fighting Fitzgerald was successful in eighteen duels before it was discovered that he always wore a coat of mail. For years his fame in society had rested on his invariable success as a duelist, and this discovery was his undoing. A certain major in fighting him objected when his sword snapped on a heart-thrust and demanded an investigation. He was afterward hanged in Ireland for murdering a neighbor.

The most tragic duel in England was between Lord Byron, grand-uncle of the poet, and a kinsman. It was fought in a tavern room by the light of one tallow candle. Lord Byron was tried for murder, but got off on manslaughter, from the penalties of which he escaped because he was a peer of the realm. This safeguard of peers was done away with only during the present reign.—Chicago News.

Woman in Business.

Woman's introduction into the business world is no longer an experiment. The feminine wage-earner is now a permanent factor in the national economy. The individual drops out of the ranks to form a center around which home springs up, but another woman, not a man, takes her place. The type remains. More and more places are being made for women, to such an extent that a recent census bulletin reports the increase in the number of women employed in gainful occupations during the period between 1870 and 1890 to have been 113 per cent., while in trade and transportation the increase was 1,051 per cent. This change is significant. It is, in fact, a revolution. Twenty, or indeed, ten years ago the girls of an ordinary middle class family in which the father was a small business man, an expert mechanic, or a farmer capable of supporting his family with decency if not absolute comfort, were expected to stay at home and help with the housework until they went to preside over homes of their own. It was considered something of a slur to say that a man's daughters were obliged to go out to work. Nowadays this sentiment is reversed. A business training is as much a matter of course for the daughters as for the sons. And no one is surprised when the daughters prefer putting the training into practice instead of devoting their time to household duties enlivened with social amusements. The growth of the idea that woman is an individual, not an appendage, that she has social duties and moral responsibilities as well as men, is really at the bottom of the revolution.—Lippincott's.

GENERAL JUAN RUIZ RIVERA.

First Mistress of the White House.

With regard to the plan for the erection of a cairn on Payne's hill, in Quincy, in honor of Mrs. Abigail Adams, which the Adams chapter of Quincy of the Society of the Daughters of the Revolution are to build on the 17th of June, it seems that the idea of erecting this memorial was discussed by the members of this society at the time of the building of the cairn in honor of Miles Standish, at Squantum, last September. The matter having also been presented to the Quincy Historical Society, it became a matter of courtesy to try to arrange a joint celebration by the two societies, and Mrs. Titus, the regent of the Adams chapter of Quincy of the Society of the Daughters of the Revolution, states that she wrote to the secretary of the Quincy Historical Society, and also to the curators, some six weeks ago, requesting that a meeting should be called to consider the matter. No action having been taken by the Quincy Historical Society, it was voted to proceed independently with the celebration which has the approval of their president, as there should be no rivalry between societies which have for their object the advancement of patriotic work.

The invitation sent out by the Daughters of the Revolution is as follows: "The Adams Chapter of Quincy, Mass., Society of the Daughters of the Revolution, invites you to be present upon the top of Payne's hill, Quincy, at 12 o'clock noon, June 17, 1896, to assist in the erection of a cairn in honor of Mrs. Abagail Adams, and to mark the spot upon which, with her son, John Quincy Adams, then a boy of 8 years, she watched the smoke and listened to the guns of the battle of Bunker Hill. Each person present is requested to add a stone to the pile."—Boston Transcript.

Crisp and New.

A much cleaner lot of paper money is in circulation now than formerly, a bank cashier states. The banks now send their soiled notes to the United States Treasury to be destroyed as soon as a sufficient quantity accumulates to justify it, and new notes are issued in their place. This has been rendered not only possible, but advisable, owing to the increased facilities for printing banknotes. One never sees a soiled banknote in London. They are all crisp and white and new, simply because the Bank of England never lets a note go out a second time. The average life of a Bank of England note is said to be five days.

DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S EYE WATER

A Rat of Taste and Talent.

A story is told of a recently deceased rat who obtained oil from a narrow-necked bottle by dipping his tail therein. Then he licked the oil from his long and well-oiled tail and waxed fat. The truth of the story is certified by reputable men, and is contained in "Stories of Animal Sagacity," a book published by S. W. Partridge & Co., of London.

The rat had the misfortune to be born in a machine shop, where only metal was used, and there was, consequently, little good food for his kind. He was brought up in penury by his parents, and after he was old enough to look out for himself, gained a precarious livelihood by looking for scraps of food accidentally left around.

It happened that the men always kept a bottle of oil uncorked, and fastened by a wire to a certain part of the machinery. It was in constant use. One evening the thoughtful rat betook himself to a study of this bottle. It lay open temptingly before him. Its contents would make him fat and shiny, and a social leader among his companions.

Could he not get at the oil? He scratched his head and thought harder. Then his thinking gave a brilliant result. He had a tail—what use was he making of it? This tail was an opportunity, and he had been wasting it, but now he could use it.

Immediately he inserted the long tail as far as it would go into the narrow neck of the bottle and soaked it thoroughly in oil. Then he withdrew it and licked the oil carefully from off it. After that he repeated the same process as often as he felt hungry. A little judiciously selected wood provided the necessary solid element in this diet. He became fat and sleek and a leader among rats.

One day he was taking a copious meal of oil when he realized that he had forgotten his hereditary caution, and that a man was watching him. The man showed no sign of attacking him, but rather a pleased curiosity, and the rat therefore stayed. The result of this meeting was that in time the rat got into the habit of taking his meals in the presence of the workmen, and that to have killed so clever a creature would have been regarded as a crime. He led a happy life, and died of oil and years.

A Discarded Lover.

President Kruger, it seems, is a man of sentiment. J. Scott Montagu, a member of parliament, now on a visit to South Africa, throws some light on this side of the shrewd Boer's character in a letter to a country newspaper of the west of England: "President Kruger," he writes, "said to a friend of mine the other day: 'In times o' peace we might grant certain privileges to Uitlanders; but in times of storm and stress, never.' Yesterday I had an interview at Pretoria with President Kruger. The President talked for a moment or two about the Transvaal, and one incident occurred which I think I am justified in relating. The Transvaal, said the President, was like a pretty girl with many lovers, each one wanting to marry her or get a kiss. I suggested, in reply, that the damsel was not free, but that she was engaged to England, and the first and only legitimate lover was the only one who ought to be considered in her eyes. The President shrugged his shoulders and made a reply to the effect that the lover had behaved very badly, and had alienated her good-will."

An Indian's Ticket-of-Leave.

When Young Chief, a prominent member of the Umatilla tribe, in Oregon, goes away for his annual vacation, he is granted the freedom of the State by the following notice to whom it may concern: "Young Chief has permission to visit Wallowa and surrounding country, with various other Indians, to be away sixty days. He is a good, law-abiding man, and very friendly toward whites. If any of his crowd are boisterous or violate any law, if reported to me, I will have the matter rectified. Any favor shown him will be appreciated. He respects the whites and asks that they respect him."

For caramels and other dark candies the brown sugar is almost exclusively employed.

A Cougher's Coffers

may not be so full as he wishes, but if he is wise he will neglect his coffers awhile and attend to his cough. A man's coffers may be so secure that no one can take them away from him. But a little cough has taken many a man away from his coffers. The "slight cough" is somewhat like the small pebble that lies on the mountain side, and appears utterly insignificant. A fluttering bird, perhaps, starts the pebble rolling, and the rolling pebble begets an avalanche that buries a town. Many fatal diseases begin with a slight cough. But any cough, taken in time, can be cured by the use of

WHEN ALL THE WORLD IS YOUNG, LAD.

When all the world is young, lad,
And all the trees are green,
And every goose a swan, lad,
And every lass a queen;
Then hey for boot and horse, lad,
And round the world away;
Young blood must have its course, lad,
And every dog his day.

When all the world is old, lad,
And all the trees are brown,
And all the sport is stale, lad,
And all the wheels run down;
Creep home and take your place there,
The spent and maimed among;
God grant you find one face there
You loved when all was young.

—Charles Kingsley.

MY RUSSIAN BISHOP.

"Keep her steady, Mac, and tell Brown, in the engine-room, to stick to her present rate of speed. Seven knots, all things considered, is decent going, even downstream, on one of these Russian rivers; and then we are in duty bound, you know, to economize the company's firewood, cheap as it is."

"Aye, aye, Capt. Burton," cheerfully responded my tall, raw-boned first officer, entering with national alacrity into a question of thrift.

Macgregor, chief mate, and Brown, chief engineer, were, with myself, John Burton by name, the only three Englishmen on board the Fair Helen, a fine steamer, of light draught but considerable engine-power, belonging to the Anglo-Russian Steam Navigation Company and built expressly for service on the Dnieper. We were pretty far to the north just then, in the government of Mohilew, where the great river first becomes navigable for anything bigger than a skiff or a flatboat, and were coming down now with a string of rafts in tow.

Macgregor left me on his round of inspection, but I, who had just then no call of duty, remained idly leaning against the taffrail and gazing, now at the summer sky of greenish blue, now at the swampy and reed-grown shores, where herds of black buffalo and flocks of sickly sheep browsed on the rank grass, and once again at the brown waters of the sluggish Borysthenes, now swollen by recent rain. Astern of the steamer was the long array of rafts which we were towing, composed of timber, cut down in the forests further north, which forms a valuable article of export to the more pastoral and treeless south of Russia. Most of these rafts had shells or straw-thatched hovels built upon them to screen the laborers from sun and rain; and at the edge of each some half dozen men with long poles in their hands kept watch in case the clumsy craft should ground among the shallows and mud-banks.

I had now spent over two years in Russia, and had acquired some little knowledge of the country, and, what was harder, a tolerable smattering of its very difficult language, while there were those who regarded me as singularly lucky in having been appointed, young as I was, to the command of the Fair Helen. The duties, however, incumbent on me as skipper of a river steamboat in Russia were not much to my inclination, and I believe I should long since have resigned my post and gone back to blue water and a sailor's life had it not been that I fell in love and that my love was returned.

Pretty Annie Clements, only child of the English manager of Prince Demidoff's paper mills at Mohilew, was the enchantress whose bright eyes detained me in Russia, and only two months had elapsed since our troth-plight had received the sanction of Annie's father. Mr. Clements, who had from his youth up filled lucrative positions in the Czar's dominion and had saved money, was a good type of a class of Englishmen who may be described as Anglo-Russians. His industry and business habits had given him a marked superiority over the people among whom he dwelt; but at the same time he was imbued with an almost superstitious respect for the government under which he had long lived and for every abuse and every freak of administrative tyranny on the part of the higher powers.

"This must be Bykhow," said I, starting from my reverie, as I caught sight of the copper-coated cupola of the Church of St. Michael overtopping the wooden roofs of the tiny town; "but what have we here!" I added, as a boat put off from the wharf and was soon alongside of the steamer, which had slackened speed in obedience to a signal from the shore. "Why, it is a bishop!"

And, indeed, the most prominent personage of the group which presently boarded us was, to judge by his garb and mien, a prelate of the Russian Church. He wore gracefully flowing robes of almost Oriental aspect, and the quaint mitre, with its narrow edging of purple and gold, which distinguishes a Muscovite bishop. Behind him came three attendants—his chaplain, his crosier-bearer, and another, who tinkled a little silver bell, at the sound of which our Russian sailors and deckmen dropped upon their knees and struggled with one another who should be the first to kiss the bishop's ungloved hand, on which glistened a great amethyst ring.

I found the bishop, who was a young man, not more than two years older than myself, very urbane and affable. He spoke French and German, too, fluently, and was in tone and bearing quite a citizen of the world.

The bishop's business with me was soon stated. He wanted a passage to the city of Kiew for himself and attendants, and also for a party of ecclesiastical students from the great monastery of Glinka, who were bound for the same place to be solemnly inducted within the pale of the Russo-Greek priesthood by the Archbishop of Kiew. There were, moreover, some three or four nuns who desired to avail themselves of the same opportunity for returning to their abbey.

At first I was somewhat puzzled. Truth to tell, the vessels of the Anglo-Russian Navigation Company did very little business in the passenger carrying line. By towing, by the transport of light goods, and so forth, we earned a decent dividend; but although we had an elaborate printed tariff of charges, "the neat private cabins" and "saloon" for first-class passengers had come to be sadly conspicuous by their absence. However, the bishop, with his easy way, made things pleasant. Russians, he said with truth, needed in fine weather but scanty accommodation. Students, nuns and himself could rough it, only thankful for a speedy journey. And the payment he would leave to me to apportion.

"A compliment," added the prelate with a laugh and a shrug, "which I assure you, captain, I would not offer to my own countrymen. But you English have a conscience."

I did not forfeit the national reputation for fair dealing by charging His Worthiness—for such I believe to be the correct designation of a Muscovite bishop—too much for the meagre comfort which I was able on board the Fair Helen to supply to this clerical company. We set to work with hammer and saw, and, as all sailors, even Russian fresh-water mariners, are handy fellows, we soon knocked up some rough cabins for the nuns, while I gave up my own quarters to the bishop. As for the students, the weather was fine, and a set of hardy young fellows might surely make shift to keep the deck.

There were, as it turned out, four nuns, two of them being tall, burly Tsvorniks, of that she-grenadier aspect so common among the Russian peasant women who take the vows, and the other two slight, delicate in manners and apearance, and unmistakably ladies. There were twenty-three students, well-grown lads enough, but apparently shy and ill at ease, and who huddled together in a mob when brought on board, and shunned conversation. Nor were the nuns very communicative; but the bishop, who was a fluent and agreeable talker, made amends for the taciturnity of the rest.

At Stostitza, where we stopped to take in firewood, and where the overseers of the rafts went ashore to hire fresh laborers in the room of a dozen fever-stricken wretches on whom the miasma of the muddy river had done its work, and who had been left behind it at Bykhow, a sad procession went by the wharf alongside of which the steamer lay. This consisted of some thirty political prisoners, Poles, as we were told, implicated in an abortive revolt near Minsk, and now on their way to Siberia. They were of all ranks and ages; some with delicate hands and faces that told of culture and refinement; others who showed the marks of honest toil; but all bore themselves with a certain air of quiet dignity, which seemed to impress even the half savage Cossacks who guarded them. There was something in the proud endurance of the captives which touched me. They were in chains, their clothes were worn and ragged. Their faces were wan with the privations of a Russian prison, and all were footsore and weary. Yet it was impossible not to admire the patient courage of their demeanor.

"Bah! They are not of our century, these Poles," said the bishop, taking a pinch of snuff and offering to me the gilt box with suave courtesy. "They sacrifice themselves for a dream."

We were a long time at Stostitza, for the overseer's new hands were hard to coax away from the vodka shops, though when they did arrive they certainly turned out to be fifteen as strapping fellows as I had ever seen; men, too, who walked with the steady step of old soldiers. Of this, however, since conscription passes half the peasantry through the ranks, I thought little, but gave orders to cast off the moorings, get up a fuller head of steam to make up for lost time, and push on to Rogaczew, our next halting place. Four versts down the river I caught the gleam among the tall reeds of the bank of Cossack lance points, and soon, rounding a head-land, descried the kafila of prisoners. These latter marched but slowly, and their mounted guards, under the orders of an officer in green uniform—a major, as I guessed by his medals and the glitter of his epaulettes—were driving them on with blows and threats. Just as we came abreast of the captives I heard the overseer of the rafts shouting hoarsely orders which seemed worse than useless, for by some mismanagement of the poles the raftsmen had grounded one of the cumbrous structures on a sand bank. The tough towrope jerked and creaked.

"Stop her, there below—reverse engines!" I called out; but scarcely had I done so before, to my utter amazement, the travelling bishop drew from beneath his purple-hemmed cassock a silver whistle and blew a long, shrill note. The effect of this signal-call was magical in its rapidity. Wading waist-deep in the water, the raft-workers whom we had taken in at Stostitza hurried to shore, scrambled up the slippery bank and rushed like so many tigers upon the escort that guarded the prisoners.

"Ha, traitors! Cut the villains down!" thundered the Russian major, whisking out his saber and aiming a heavy stroke at the first assailant who reached him; but a cudgel parried the blow, and in less time than it takes to tell it the officer was disarmed and dragged from his saddle. Of the nine Cossacks eight were dismounted and bound without any serious resistance, but the ninth eluded the hands that clutched at his bridle, fired, wounding the man nearest to him, and, wheeling his shaggy steed, rode off at a gallop, pursued by a storm of pistol balls and curses.

"Help, Captain! Cap"—— gurgled in choking accents a well-known voice, and I looked round, to see Macgregor vainly struggling in the grasp of three ecclesiastical students, one of whom held him by the throat. Another of these interesting neophytes was pressing the muzzle of a revolver to the forehead of the scared helmsman, while five or six had found their way to the engine-room, to judge by the sounds of scuffling that proceeded from the hatchway.

"Secure him!" cried the false bishop, pointing to me, and three young fellows, all well armed and all with their black robes disordered and revealing the very secular garb which they wore beneath, rushed upon me. Bewildered as I was, the English instinct of giving as good as I got prompted me. One antagonist, stunned by a well-directed blow, dropped like an ox beneath the pole-axe; a second was tripped up and the pistol wrested from his grasp; but then a flash of blinding fire glared before my eyes, and next all grew black and hushed and quiet, and the very world seemed to swim away from me as I fainted.

When I regained my senses it was night. The stars were twinkling above us and the wash and ripple of the river were the first sounds which reached my dulled ear. How my head ached! The throbbing pains it occasioned me made me try to lift my hands to my brow, but I could not stir. I was bound and helpless, and I groaned aloud.

"Is it you, Capt. Burton?" said a lugubrious voice near me. "'Deed, then, but I'm glad to hear ye speak, though it is that way, for I thocht ye were dead."

"What has happened, Mac?" I asked feebly. "Can you not help me get up? Who boarded us—pirates, or"——

"Nae pirates, captain," interrupted the mate. "The job's a polectical one, nae doubt, and Sharpe himself was a saint to you fause-tongued loon o' a bishop, as he ca'ed himself, the ringleader o' the gang. And as for helping ye, laddie, how can I do it, seeing I lie here, tied neck and heels, like a calf for the shambles? Brown and the fireman and the rest of the crew are all in irons below, with the hatches battened down over them. The overseer and the raft laborers have run off, frightened, puir chiels, out o' their bits o' wits, and the major and his Cossack reivers are about as comfortable, Capt. Burton, as oursel's. Our best hope is in the coming o' the police."

But, alas! when the police and military, in the gray dawn, came lagging up in obedience to the summons of the solitary Cossack who had ridden off unharmed, we found that from the Polish frying-pan we had been promoted to the Russian fire. The major, who had passed some hours in impatient durance tied to a willow tree, with a gag between his teeth and a cord around his wrists, actually foamed with rage when we were hustled into his presence.

"But for your help, English hounds," he vociferated, "yonder rebel slime would not have interfered with the Emperor's justice. Prisoners have been rescued, loyal soldiers have been brained, disarmed and deprived of their horses. I myself —— Here, corporal, take the scoundrels away. They shall suffer for the success of their rascally accomplices."

Macgregor and Brown, being able to walk, were sent off to Kiew, each with his right wrist chained to the stirrup-leather of a mounted policeman, while I, on account of the weakness caused by a severe blow on the head inflicted with the butt end of a pistol, was conveyed in a jolting country cart to Tchernigov, where I was duly lodged in prison.

Very bitter were my reflections as I lay on my hard pallet bed watching the scanty sunbeams that played upon the barred window of my cell and listening to the shrill squeaks and pattering feet of rats distressingly tame that haunted the jail. What was I to do? My employers would probably supersede me as commander of the Fair Helen. Of Siberia I had no serious fear, but a long imprisonment might end only in expulsion from Russia. Annie was lost to me. I knew the routed prejudices of her father too well to believe that he would ever accept a son-in-law who had conspired against the imperial authorities. And who was to persuade Mr. Clements that I was blameless in the matter? I could fancy him in his armchair stolidly declaring, in reply to Annie's pleadings on my behalf, that there was no smoke without fire, and that as I had made my bed so I must lie. And so weeks went by.

"Mr. Burton, or Capt. Burton, you are free!" It was an officer of rank who spoke, pleasantly enough, tapping his boots with his gold-mounted riding whip as he stood on the damp stone floor of my cell, with the door open behind him, admitting welcome air and daylight. "Your innocence and that of the other British subjects confined at Kiew has been at last fully proved by the confession of the principal rebel, Count Demetrius Sobieski, wounded and taken at Wilna. Ah, I see you do not know of whom I talk. Well, he was your passenger."

"The bishop?" I asked, half stupefied.

"Yes, the bishop," replied the general with a laugh. "The students and the last batch of raft laborers being, all of them, disbanded Polish soldiers who were willing to risk their lives for the rescue of the Minsk prisoners; an exploit in which they succeeded only too completely. As for the nuns, two of them were men in female apparel and the others were simply Polish ladies of noble birth whose husbands were among the exiles, and who were resolved to aid in their deliverance or to follow them to Irkutsk. Your vessel, the Fair Helen, you will find at Kiew, with your mate and engineer on board of her. And now, Mr. Burton, it only remains for me, on the part of the government, to express our regrets, &c."

Annie and I are married, years since, and I command a ship of which I am part owner, but we do not live within the range of green-and-white frontier posts that mark the Czar's dominions.

SAVING THE LAST DIAMOND

The Remaining One of an Heirloom Cluster in a Man's Tooth.

A new way to keep a diamond from being lost or stolen has been discovered by F. Van Craenbroeck with the aid of a Hyde Park dentist. Instead of having the gem set in a ring or stud Mr. Van Craengroeck caused the precious stone to be placed in a cavity in one of his teeth, where it will be both ornamental and useful, and probably in no danger of falling into the hands of thieves.

This particular diamond has a known history that extends back through the French revolution and four generations of the young man's family. It was to preserve it, and not because he needed it as a toothfilling, that he had the stone set in an upper bicuspid.

The diamond is a small one, weighing only an eighth of a carat, but it has been carefully cut. Originally it was set with twenty-six others in a gold band ring belonging to Mr. Van Craenbroeck's great-great-great-grandmother, who was a native of France. The ring went through successive generations, and each new possessor lost some of the gems. Finally, when Mr. Van Craenbroeck obtained the ring from his mother several years ago there was only one diamond left.

Some time ago Mr. Van Craenbroeck's mother died, and he was especially anxious to preserve the diamond as a memento of her. The ring, having lost its setting, was of little value as a keepsake.

Dr. Fredus A. Thurston, whose office is in the same building as that of Mr. Van Craenbroeck, volunteered to set the gem in a tooth, where it could not fall out, probably would not be found by thieves, and would be a pleasing addition to a smile.

A hole was drilled in the front of the first upper bicuspid tooth in such a position that when the diamond was set it would sparkle in plain sight whenever the young man smiled. The cavity was drilled round, but the stone had been cut with one large facet and many small ones. The hole was only deep enough to admit a part of the stone, the remainder being allowed to project from the tooth like the setting of a ring.

The cavity was finally filled full of tooth cement, and the diamond was pressed into it. The large facet was left on the outside. Then the dentist took a small mallet and a bit of wood and pounded the diamond into place, just as is customary in filling teeth with gold. When the pounding was complete the setting of the stone was ended, with the exception of scraping away the cement from the edges of the diamond, which will be done later.

It required the most careful handling to keep the diamond from getting lost. Whenever it dropped out of the cavity during the fitting process the sparkle was all that enabled the dentist to find it. Once or twice it dropped to the floor, and the owner of the diamond and the dentist had a long search for it.

The precious tooth-filling shines best by lamp light, when it is visible across a good-sized room. Even by daylight, however, the sparkle of the gem will be sufficient to attract attention whenever its owner parts his lips. As it is placed at the front of the tooth the setting will last a lifetime.

It is said that this is the first case of a diamond being used in Chicago as a tooth-filling. The experiment has been tried in New York in one or two instances, and in Europe, but there is no known instance where a gem with the historical interest of this one has been set in such a queer place to preserve the stone and not the tooth.—Chicago Tribune.

A Horned Rabbit.

J. C. Rutledge, of Kansas, is reported to have killed a horned rabbit. The animal did not differ materially from the ordinary cottontail found in nearly every part of the country, except that at the base of the ears there cropped out two horns, each a little over two inches in length and about an inch in circumference.

JOHN A. SALZER SEED CO. LA CROSSE, WIS.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any kind of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald, I concluded to give them a trial, and I found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $2 a call. A dollar's worth of lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the tabules to any one affected as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly affected to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." And the daughters, familiar with her case and knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received from Ripans Tabules, decided that their mother was quite right.

THE CLIPPER MAY EXPLAIN.

For some years the Garrett Clipper has been trying to pose as the "ring buster," the "taxpayers friend" the "exposer of frauds" and so on to the nauseating point. It has to us, who know them, always been a cause for doubt, if not suspicion, that they were professing a little more purity than their boiler capacity would bear. Yesterday the commissioners, attorneys and others were closeted in a room examining the various "raised orders" that have been attracting so much attention, when they came again across one that had been issued to the Garrett Clipper or its publisher. The order was for $109 75, while the stub on the order book showed only $9.75. Who changed this order? We have heard it claimed that Mr. Coffinberry wanted the change made so that the stub would show but $9.50 in case any other printer should see it, as it might make others jealous. We do not know whether this is the true explanation or not Was that order "raised" or was it "lowered." Did the Clipper get only $9.75 on a $109.75 dollar job and let some one have the odd $100 free? Or did the Clipper get $109.75 for a $9.75 job, and allow it to show only $9.75 on the stub?

June 18,1891, the offical publication in the COURIER showed we had found on the books $9.50 allowed to the Clipper. Sept. 22, 1892, the records show that Downey, of the Butler Review, had two or three allowances, the sum total of which shows the suspicious footing of just $109.75. Perhaps it was Downey's bill after all, got mixed up with the Cipper's. The more we study this matter the more we would like to have it explained. The Clipper should explain. No doubt it can make the mystery clear if it will. We wait and watch for that explanation. It is a smaller matter than some of the rest. but it may furnish the key to the whole operation. If the Clipper has not the space to spare, the COURIER, which is a large paper, offers space in its colums free. Write, or telephone No. 20, Auburn.

A NEW Botanical Discovery

THE WONDERFUL KA-VA-KAVA SHRUB.

This valuable new botanical discovery, that of the Kava-Kava Shrub, or as botanists call it, piper methysticum, found on the banks of the Ganges River in East India. From a this is perhaps the most important discovery of the century. The use of the Kava-Kava Shrub, like other valuable medical substances, opium and quinine, was first observed by Christian missionaries among the natives as a sovereign remedy for Kidney diseases.

Alkavis, which is the medical compound of the Kava-Kava Shrub, is endorsed by the Hospitals and Physicians of Europe as a Sure Specific Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases. Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Brick-Dust deposits, Rheumatism. Liver Disease, Female Complaints, pain in the back, and all diseases caused by impurities of the blood, due to defective action of the Kidneys.

In the New York World of February 8, 1893, the discovery of ALKAVIS is described as the latest important advance in Medical Science. The Medical Gazette Dec. 15, 1892 records the wonderful effects of this new curative, upon patients both in hospitals and private practice. The London (England) Medical Recorder in August and September, 1892, publishes records showing that cures of Kidney and Urinary disorders increased over ninety per cent. in the first month's use of ALKAVIS, in every hospital ward, the number of patients being 350 to 370 each week. The Paris (France) Review of Medical. Progress, for Sept. 1892, publishes a list of 87 patients cured by ALKAVIS, previously considered incurable The Prussian Military Hospital Reports, Nos. XXIVXXV. give marvelous accounts of the cures wrought by ALKAVIS in chronic and severe cases, including advanced Bright's Disease and Jaundice, and the endorsements are equally strong from every other source.

The Church Kidney Cure Company, New York City, so far are the only importers of Alkavis, and they have appointed S. E. Hoisington, of Auburn, Ind., cor. 12th and Van Buran sts., as their sole distributing agent for this section. Those desiring Alkavis will call on or address the above agent. Send to our agent for book of one thousand cures, with guarantee of cure when three bottles of Alkavis are taken.

COUNCIL ORDERS LIGHTS OUT

And Until Some Other Method of Lighting Can be Secured Auburn will be Dark.

It is a deplorable condition of affair that our town must go without its streets lighted with electric lights, but such was the action taken by the members of the city council last night. As had previously been noted in the COURIER and anxiously looked for by our citizens the awarding of a new contract to the Mining Co., was to take place last night. Messrs. Henry McIntyre, G. A. Bishop, Chris Shaffer and F. E. Davenport appeared on behalf of the Mining Company and Mr. McIntyre presented the proposition to light the town for another period. It will be remembered, that a few days ago the COURIER, by permission of the board, published a list of Michigan towns and what each paid for electric lights. Mr. McIntyre wrote each of these towns to ascertain from the secretaries or managers the cost of lightning, and read to the board the published report and the answers which he received. He stated that from the way the members of the board had acted concerning this matter it appeared to him, that back of the whole thing, there was another hand which contained a club ready to strike forth. He stated the proposition of hiscompany was to light the town for all night service, $100 per light per year, and for midnight service $75 per light per year. He further stated that he thought it advisable for the town to only have midnight service; that considering the scarcity of money, etc., the town was going beyond its means to burn street lamps all night. To settle the question as to whether all night or midnight service would be adopted, a motion was made and the council decided on midnight service. The members of th Mining Co. then retired from the council chamber and the board proceeded to fix a price which they thought would be fair. A ballot was taken and resulted as follows, one $65 per year; three $60 per year, and one $50 per year. A majority being in favor of paying $60 for midnight service, moonlight schedule, new lights, etc., the clerk was instructed to ask the members of the Mining Co. to return to the room and the matter was presented to them by Chairman Miller. Mr. McIntyre responded and stated that they could not accept that proposition; that if they did it only meant bankruptcy, and that they could not furnish lights at less than $75. Members of the board expressed themselves not willing to raise their proposition. Mr. McIntyre stated that the company desired to do the fair thing with the board and would not shut off the lights, if they desired the service temporarily till further arrangements could be made for lighting. A proviso bill for service due the company up to date had been allowed and the clerk was instructed to notify the company to discontinue their service of lighting the streets at once. The incandescent lights in the engine house will be continued. No action was taken by the board as to any other method of lighting the town. The matter will probably be taken under advisement until the next meeting. By that time no doubt our citizens will have come to the conclusion that it is not very pleasant to be without street lights.

All our people are invited to attend these services.

NAMES OF TOWNS CHANGED.

The Rochester Republican says: "Towns, like people, sometimes change their names. Persons change their names for various causes. Sometimes to avoid discreditable features. And this is occasionly true of towns, but not often. It is usually for convenience. But this reminds us that the names of several towns in Fulton county have been changed. Untib 1856 Akron was called Newark, and about the same time Pleasant Grove merged into Kewanna. What is now known as Blue Grass was originally called Mt. Vernon, and afterward Marshtown. DeLong was formerly Marshland, and recently Bloomingsburg became Talma and Hoover's Station was changed to Grant and now it is Athens. Al Toner, on the Vandalia, has given place to Lucerne, and No Place to Desolation. If we remember correctly the postoffice at Richland Center was first called Sedalia, so named by Miss Minnie Shryock, when she assisted Postmistress Ryland in the postoffice at that place. The towns of Sturgeon and Carlton, in Richland township, have dropped out of existence, postoffices and all. About the time of the completion of the L. E. & W. railway, then the I. P. & C., the town of Lincoln, just over the line in Miami county, was rechristened Macy in honor of David Macy, a railroad magnate of no small dimensions. Fulton and Green Oak in this county are about the only oldtime landmarks that have not experienced a change of heart and desired to be known by some other cognomen."

To the above list enumerated by the Republican might be added many more in the surrounding counties. For instance, in Marshall county, Ilion is changed to Tippecanoe, and Burlington to Ayer. In Miami county Eel Rio is changed to Denver, and White Hall to Waupecong. In Wabash county Harrisburg is changed to Disko, and Whitley county Springfield to South Whitley, and Millersburg to Colamer. In Kosciusko county Galveston is changed to Clunette, Paultown to Silver Lake and Kosciusko to Wooster.

Habeas Corpus.

Attorney Will Leas, of Waterloo, s here Tuesday to attend to some matters. Among them, was getting out a writing of habeas corpus to release John H. Luttman from jail. Luttman had been arrested and fined on charge of malicious trespass, It appears he injured some shade trees and destroyed other things on a place he was renting. He paid his fine and all the costs, except the cost for witnesses, which he claimed he did not have to pay. It was for these witness costs that he was put in jail. A writ of habeas corpus, if granted, would set him free. We do not yet know as to the outcome of the application It depends, we presume, on the point of law, whether Luttman is obliged to pay those witness fees.

AN ANSWER.

John Smith, of Damascus, Syria, asks how we pronounce the too common word, "gerrymander." We don't know how it would be in Syriac, but here in Uncle Sam's dominions, in the land that produced Elbridge Gerry, the man whose name was injustly fixed to any bad apportionment law, we can easily settle it. The "g" should be pronounced as "hard "g" not a "j" or soft "g". It should be as in the word "get" not like the word "jet." No one would think of calling Elbridge Gerry, Elbridge Jerry. So we should say "gerrymander" not "jerrymander." We suppose from the above inquiry that the people of Eastern Syria are about to redistrict their province for legislative purposes,

PENTE, CLEARFIELD, CO., PA., February 13, 1897,

MR. BARNS,
Auburn, Ind.

DEAR SIR:—

I send to you $3 per money order to be credited to my account which pays up to April this year, I think I can send you more during the summer to pay a little in advance, asking your pardon for getting in arrears. I wish you success and that the rest of your readers may pay you what they owe you. Myself and family are well, the two oldest children, Dolph and Della, are attending the Industrial School at Big Rapids, Mich. Fine winter weather here, plenty of snow. We are 2,100 feet above sea level in the Alleghenies. It is a very healthy climate.

Truly yours,
J. H. HORNBERGER.

AT HOME

Senator Nusbaum was home over Sunday but has returned to finish out the remaining three weeks of the session. He has put in a winter of hard work there, as has also Mr. Brown, but they find it difficult for a democratic member to get a bill even considered. The Doctor got one bill considered by the Senate, by having it handed to him by a republican friend, so that it appeared to be a republican measure. As a matter of fact there was no politics in it, and this shows the partisan tendency of the legislature all the more. No matter how necessary a law is, it must come from a republican member, or not be given a thought. But a republican bill no matter how unnecessary may have a good chance to become a law. In another article we consider some of the new laws that are being proposed, and will likely be passed.

FOR MEN ONLY.

Monday evening, February 22, 1897, at Corunna M. E. church at 7 p m. Sermon lecture by Evangelist Geo. C. Ulmer. Facts for fathers; hints helping husbands; sins soiling sons and breakers before brothers pointed out. Plain words about plain facts, in a plain way, by a plain man.

If you do not want the truth, do not come. Admission free. Collection taken. Introduction to these talks to men given to the regular Sunday night congregation. Subject, "Your Body the Temple." 1 Cor. 3: 16, 17.

THE GEETING BILL.

This is the bill that affects the school system of the state and which in our judgement will affect it adversely should it become a law. In this connection we feel like copying some comments we find in the "Exponent" a school journal published by the High School at Waterloo. The article is probably by Prof. Keep, and makes some excellent points. In speaking of the proposed new law he says:

The only objectionable feature we can see is a tendency to separate the country and town schools in removing the superintendent from the latter. We feel that the schools of the state ought to be a unit in purpose and plan from the lowest grade of the district school to the senior class of the University.

JOHN COBLER.

The subject of this sketch was born in Franklin Co. Pa., July 12, 1816. He moved with his parents to Holmes Co., Ohio, in 1822

He was united in marriage with Jane Griffith, April 16, 1837. She preceded him to the spirit world having died Dec. 11, 1884.

He with his wife moved to DeKalb Co. Ind., in 1839 and settled on the home place about five miles east of Auburn. Here he continued to reside until his death Feb. 13, 1897. His age being 80 years 7 months and 1 day.

Of nine childres he leaves one son A. Griffith of Bay City, Oregon, and two daughters, Mrs. John Cramer and Mrs. Geo. W. Swander, of Auburn; twenty-five grand children and fifteen great grand children and neighbors to mourn his loss.

A father dear has gone to rest,
A voice we loved is stilled;
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.

With aching hearts we left him
Beneath the cold damp sod,
But knowing that his soul had gone
To meet its giver, God.

Hatching Devils.

The people in the vicinity of Lockwood's in Jackson township, are experiencing an old time revival. Services are conducted in the new U. B. church recently built by Rev. Tabbott, an evangelist from Michigan. The meetings have been in progress for several weeks, and the church is rapidly increasing in membership, from persons who live within a radius of four miles. So powerful are the services of Rev. Tabbott, that even the worst sinner is moved, and has began to think about his spiritual wellfare. But there still remains in the vicinity some who are in deep trouble, and feel that they will not submit to the preaching of Rev. Tabbott, or the Divine Preacher, and have made themselves notorious by causing trouble among the workers in the church, and have even gone so far as to set a small building near the church on fire, that the meeting might be disturbed. On Saturday night the church was crowded to standing room, as the services were nearing a close a distant cry of fire! fire! fire! could be heard, and it came nearer and every one and more especially those who live in the immediate vicinity, thought their own house, and others thought it might be the church. In a few seconds more and the doors flew open and every window went up and from both doors and windows people went out with a force. The minister kept his pulpit and advised the people to be patient that it might be a false alarm, but out they kept going till, word was received that the flames had been quenched. The fire proved to be in a small shed belonging to a Mr. Gerber, who lived just a few rods distance from the church. Mrs. Garver informed the people that there had been no stove or fire in or nerr the building during the day, and that some one had set the building on fire with a view of breaking up the meeting. The congregation were soon seated in the church and the meeting continued. The minister then stated that the Devil was in some of the people in that vicinity, and that there was an incubator there in which devils were hatched, and with a few more remarks along that line the meeting closed.

Fell Down Stairs

While working about his home on South VanBuren street this forenoon Solomon Bates was seized with an attack of something like epilepsy and fell from the top of the cellar stairs to the floor of the cellar, sustaining injuries that will confine him to the house for several weeks. Dr. Hines was called and upon examination found that, besides a broken rib, Mr. Bates had suffered a bad fracture of the collar bone and numerous bruises. The unfortunate man has suffered greatly during the past year from rheumatism and this accident of to-day is a most unfortunate addition to his suffering, though he is to be congratulated that results were not more serious.

CONCORD.

Will Draggoo came home last week from Trenton, N. J. J. B. had a reunion of all his children, F. E. from Auburn, Cora, Mrs. Keller from Butler, Mary, of St. Joe, and Dema, of Spencerville. There were fourteen children and three grand-children. Will will shortly leave for the East.

Mrs. Mollie Buchanan and Mrs. Mollie Baker visited Mrs. Goldsmith and daughters last Wednesday of Mt. Hope.

Mrs. G. W. Draggoo and daughter Alice, were guests of B. F. Blair and family, of Newville Wednesday.

Rev. T. E. Lancester, of Columbia City, is assisting Rev. E. W. Evans in his protracted meeting at Rehoboth

L. D. James, of Fort Wayne, was here Friday on business, the guest of I. S. Bone and wife.

Cinna Baker and Master Walter drove down to St. Joe Monday.

Mattie George came home from Tiffin, Ohio.

Wm. Carr, of near Auburn, was a guest of his aunt Mrs. G. W. Draggoo and family Sunday.

Miss Minnie Hornberger, of Butler, was the guest of Mrs. Maud Jenkins and Bettie Culbertson last week, left Saturday to visit her sister Myrtle, Mrs. Tousley, of Ligonier.

Saturday we were called in the recorder's office on business expecting to meet strangers; but to our surprise met our amiable friend Miss Nettie Ernest.

The three year meeting was held Snuday at Fairview with a large attendance.

Dickens Night at Opera House.

We congratulate Manager Henry upon a notable engagement, that of Miss Jane Coombs, one of the world's greatest actresses, who will appear here April, in her celebrated characters of Lady Dedlock and Hortense in Charles Dicken's masterpiece "Bleak House," supported by her superb company.

WATERLOO

Quite an amount of ash bolts are being shipped from this place to Angola, for heading or staves probably.

Speer & Co. have the finest assortment of chinaware and other table dishes and crockery ever brought to town. They have bought a second lot, the one lying to the west of their store. It was property of the Sanborn heirs, and bought through R. M. Lockhart.

Joseph Coats, who resides near Edon, Ohio. was here this week, visiting the family of Isaac Speer. He is a brother to Mrs. S.

Mrs. Will Leas is making changes and repairs on the first floor of their business block, as she intends to occupy it with her millinery store. It is a large, nice room, and there will be a good chance for some one to rent a half of it, as one side would be ample room for a good business.

We challenge the county to show a finer room than the first floor of the Oddfellows' block in the new row. It is being fitted up for J. D. Campbell, who will move his drugstore into it about the second week in March. The wood work is done by Kiplinger and Imhoff, and is in the highest degree artistic. The counters. etc., are made of quartered oak and of fine workmanship. The front and oramental work of the prescription counter, is the handiwork of Mike Kiplinger, and is lovely. It will pay anyone to go there and buy a pound or two of quinine just to see this lovely work. Mr. Camybell will find it an excellent location.

The COURIER reporter called at the Crooks & Lightner store, on the Citizens Bank, and at the office of W. H. Leas, and found all busy, and evidently prospering. We have heretofore given a brief notice of the beautiful quarters in which the bank now is. We also met for a moment, Uncle John Leas, who, though feeble is at least as well as he has been for some time. We met Rev. Mr. Butler, I. J. McFadden, Hi Bartholomew, Postmaster Getts and many others.

Will Gavitt's father from Fremont, Ohio, reached here Sunday evening, being called here by the serious illness of the son, who is lying at the point of death.

Mrs. S. Z. Dickinson seems a trifle improved. Mrs. Soule is no better.

There is an arrangement on foot by which we expect to have electric lights at least incandescent lights. J. P. McCague may move his machine shop and machinery to the foundry, and unite with the town, to have electric lights. It may be the town will furnish a part of the plant, and some additional buildings, and arrange for Mr. McCague to run the machine from his boiler.

There is some talk that Crooks & Lightner will move into the Winslow building south of the railroad.

Without A Rival.

As a positive cure for sprains, bruises, and pains of all kinds, Salvation Oil has no equal. Mrs. Frank Julf, 518 Gratiot Ave., Detroit, Mich., writes: "I used Salvation Oil in my family and can say it has no rival as a liniment; it certainly cures pains. I sprained my ankle and it cured me and since then I have always used it for any pains and bruises." Salvation Oil is sold for only 25 cents. No other remedy will do the work as promptly. Sold by F. E. Davenport, Auburn.

WATERLOO, IND., Jan. 20, 1896.

I was taken with lameness in my hip joint and had all done for myself that could be done and still grew worse, till I got so bad that I could not rest in any position and could not bend my hip joint a bit. Then I was advised to call on A. Y. Rosenbury and he told me if I would stop everything else, he could cure me and I did so and in about two months after, I was well and comfortable and this has been ten months since and I am as well to-day as I ever was. This is a true statement in my case.

Respectfully,
THOMAS KELLEY.

ELKHART, IND., May 8, 1894.

This is to certify that my child had the eczema all over his face, so bad that the yellow water was seeping out all over his face. I tried some of the best doctors and could not get it checked. Then being acquainted with A. Y. Rosenbury, of Waterloo, Ind., and knowing of some of his wonderful cures I took my babe to him and he took it through a course of treatment and I could see a change in a few days, and it kept getting better right along and is still well of the disease. This is given voluntarily.

—LOST—A dear little child who made home happy by its smiles. And to think it might have been saved had the parents only kept in the house One Minute Cough Cure, the infallible remedy for croup. Davenport the Druggist.

—Ed Weeks has bought the Lock building on Ninth street, mention of which was made yesterday, and will move his grocery into the same as soon as it can be repaired. This will make a good location for a grocery and besides will save Mr. Weeks a good many dollars in rent.

—Four Albion ladies came over today noon and will be the guests of Auburn ladies for a few days. They are, Mrs. O. P. Barnum, Mrs. Dick Stone, Mrs. Elza Shaffer and Mrs. J. J. Martin. They were guests of Mrs. G. H. Yesbera at dinner to-day and at tea with Mrs. W. C. Hartman. There is a solid friendship between the ladies of the two county seats.

—The South Bend Epworth League has declared in memorial against the presidential inaugural ball festivity as being productive of evil and far reaching and it appeals to Mr. and Mrs. McKinley to abstain from its entertainment and recommends that it be omitted, since both Mr. and Mrs. McKinley are members of the M. E. church Epworth League.

—It is said of a woman who freely used her tongue to the scandal of others, that she made a confession to the priest of what she had done. He gave her a ripe thistle top, and told her to go and scatter the seeds one by one. She obeyed, and then returned and told her confessor. To her amazement, he bade her go back and gather the scattered seed, and when she objected, that it would be impossible, he replied that it would be still more difficult to gather up and destroy all the evil reports she had circulated about others. There is a moral in this for the scandal monger.

Friday's Daily.

—W. J. Frederick was over to-day from Garrett.

—Charles Bartels went to Fort Wayne to-day. He is being treated by Dr. Schoultz.

—J. D. Campbell, of Butler, was an early caller this morning and left several dollars, to apply on his subscription.

—V. E. Harding of Corunna, will receive COURIER another year. He was in to-day and advanced his subscription to '98.

—Who says a woman has nothing to do? In one year she cooks breakfast dinner and supper 365 times, washes the dishes 1,095 times, gets the children ready for school twice a day for 180 days and puts the baby to sleep 1460 times, not to mention a few odd jobs.

—A society has just been organized in Boston for the purpose of distinguishing mushrooms from toadstools. We have not learned what the process is, but presume that it is merely an elaboration of the old science, the principle of which was that if you ate it and it killed you it was a toadstool; but if you survived it was a mushroom.

—A great many wonder why we have so many old maid school teachers. This is easily accounted for and also demonstrates their wisdom. They do not care to give up a forty dollar a month job, for a fifteen dollar a month man. They have more authority in the school room than they would have in most households.

—Mr. Watt at the north end has put in a good deal of time cutting wood this winter. He says John Shoffer, out in the country has cut several hundred cords. Mr. Watt is at home now and ready to do any odd work that has to be done at this time of year.

—Many Auburn people have been attending the revival meetings at Lockwood's out of town. The sleighing has been good and the meetings have been interesting. A bob sled load, Saturday night was composed of the following: Mr. and Mrs. Eben Kutzner, Rev. J. D. Brosy, Mrs. John Kruger, Mrs. John Maxwell, Mrs. Ike Jones, Mrs. Wm. Thomas, Mrs. Ed. Beaty, and Misses Cora White, Mattie Huffman, and Edith Mortorff.

—Ed. Kundard will in a few days move from Kendallville to Waterloo, where he has a good position waiting him.

—Lafayette Buss is among the friends who called on us this week.

—E. N. Myers, of Concord gave us a good lift this morning.

Saturday's Daily.

—Ex-Sheriff John W. Boyle has thanks for recent favors.

—D. D. Rincholt of New Era, made us a brief but very pleasant call to-day.

—John H. Kruse is one of the latest names on the roll of honor for the WEEKLY COURIER.

—Surveyors Kronts and Scholes, were out in the country at work three or four days this week.

—Mrs. Harry Scott, of Angola, has been in the city a few days visiting her people and other friends.

—L. C. Loveland has thanks and credit for paid up subscriptions, brought in to-day by his son.

—Among our numerous callers to-day, were Stephen Lutz, Lewis Wason, Adam Heitz and J. N. Boyle.

—Among those who made busines calls on us Friday were Eugene Carper, J. W. Johnson J. W. Platter, Fremont Smith, and A. E. Foltz.

—Mr. and Mrs. Harry Rainler are the proud parents of a nice little baby boy, born yesterday. And Harry says "all" are doing well.

—Jacob Link, Joshua Miller and A. H. Blaker, have thanks for substantial favors to-day. The first named sends the COURIER to his son Joseph at Beulah, Mich.

—Jeff Boyle came over from Butler to-day. He is looking the picture of perfect health, and weighs more than fifty pounds heavier than he did when he lived here.

—A Pittsburg professor proposes to furnish advance information of earthquakes. Imagine sitting up all night for an earthquake and then be told that the bureau had made a miscalculation, like the weather department.

—The Albion ladies returned home this afternoon, after a very agreeable time spent with the ladies of this place. There has always been a friendly feeling between the people of the two towns.

—Joseph Sewell, of Waterloo was among our callers yesterday. He used to reside in Auburn, and is a son of N. G. Sewell, of Franklin. He has been engaged in helping to rebuild the burnt block in Waterloo, as well as the opera house there.

—Bucklen's Arnica Salve.—The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay repuired. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For ale by Robbins & McCord. tf

—A letter received to-day from Pearl Kelley says the Westmidister girls are all well and hard at work. They were all treated to a ride and visit to the Home of the Feeble Minded, the other day. They felt that it was sad to see so many young persons so unfortunate as not to have their full faculties. Of course, however, we also rejoice that they are cared for so kindly.

—We believe our friend Higley, of the Butler Record is allowing himself to become unduly excited over Dr. Nusbaum's bills in the legislature. A citizen who fails to complain of the apportionment, bill the corrupting additions to the election law, and the addition of a dozen or two new judicial districts and judges ought not to find fault with other bills.

Monday's Daily.

—Norris Friend and A. E. Foltz have thanks for late favors.

—L. W. Treesh fixed up the COURIER till in good shape Saturday. Thanks.

—Ed. Beams and wife of Spencerville were in the city yesterday.

—Geo. Ettinger and wife spent Sunday in Waterloo the guests of his parents.

—"Bargains in wheels, painted, tired and boxed" 7-2 mo.
ECKHART CARRIAGE CO. Auburn, Ind.

—Phil Plum was in town yesterday. He reports that his father, Jerry Plum is no better.

—A big double wagon from Garrett brought in a dozen or more people last evening to attend the meeting at the Baptist church.

—Rev. W. L. Meese is lying quite sick of grip at his rooms on East 6th street. He drove up into Franklin township, Saturday, to begin meetings near his old home, but was taken sick and had to return. We sincerely hope his illness is not serious.

—John D. Lannum reached here Saturday. His home is still in Chicago, but he is now at his former line of work traveling for a patent medicine house. This time it is for the Beggs Medicine Co. His family are all well.

—J. H. Kling and Lester Pearman, two of our young farmer friends from Newville township, made us a short visit to-day.

—Singing of the first spring birds was heard on our streets this morning.

—I. J. McFadden, one of Waterloo's old veterans did the handsome thing by the COURIER Tuesday.

CORUNNA, DeKalb County, Ind., July 21, 1896.

This is to certify that I had the Eczema for 2 years and my suffering was intense. I tried three different doctors and found no relief. I went to A. Y. Rosenbury and in five weeks he dismissed my case. It has been 9 months since he dismissed my case and at present I am feeling well and comfortable. I give this cheerfully and ask others to do as I have done and be satisfied that this is a true statement in my case.

MRS. JAMES STONEBRAKER.

Tuesday's Daily.

—Ed. Kendord, of Kendallville, was in town to-day on business.

—S. A. Miser did the square think by the printer on Monday.

FOUND: A kid glove, undressed leather. Owner call at this office.

—Chas. Kinsey and wife, are visiting at South Milford.

—Mrs. Wash Askew is still confined to her home. She has been sick for a week or more.

—Leonard Shipe and Frank Henney of Fairfield made this office a friendly visit yesterday.

—Misses Rosa and Send Schiffli and brother Laurenze spent Sunday with friends in Garrett.

—Our old friend Martin Wetzel was in to see us Monday. He is as live as most of the young fellows.

—W. H. Palmer brought in the cash to-day for the subscription of his father E. H. Palmer, now at Larwell

—D. B. Bordner of Butler was over to-day to pay his taxes and also made his annual payment on the COURIER.

—TO RENT:—The Albright store building on Main street at a very reasonable price.

6tf WALTER C. HARTMAN.

—The ladies of the Lutheran church will give a supper on Wednesday evening, Feb. 24. The place will be announced later on.

—$10.00 down, $5.00 a month buys a good lot in S. W. Auburn, at a special bargain. WALTER C. HARTMAN, the real estate dealer.

—Goshen has added to the capital of the Buttermilk Soap plant of that city till it stands at $50,000. That is the way to build up an industry, give it plenty of capital.

—Mr. Fluke is still poorly and confined to his house. He is able to get up and down, but sometimes has to be helped. But he does not seem to improve, as we could wish.

—Road master, Michael Lumm, of Columbia City was in town to-day long enough to pay the COURIER a visit and anvance his subscription up in '97. We are always glad to have a visit with Mr. Lumm.

—Mrs. Henry Nichols one of Angola's pioneers, died at that place yesterday of paralysis. Her husband, who is a veteran of the late war survives her. They were among the first citizens of that place, and we are told put down the first sidewalk ever built in the town.

—Mr. Miner of the Garrett Herald and his son, J. M. went to Angola yesterday. Mrs. Murray of the same office went with them, as that was her former home. Mr. Miner returned today, but the others will visit friends a few days longer.

—Miss Harriet M. Bogardus and a company of twenty five artists assisted by local talent numbering one hundred people will present spectactular "America" at Henry's Opera House on Monday Feb. 22, no one should fail to see this pleasing and at the same time instructing and patriotic entertainment. Admission 15, 25 & 35 cts., reserved seats on sale Friday morning.

WATERLOO, IND., Jan. 20, 1897.

To whom it may concern;—I have suffered with eczema for four years and had it bad. I tried three different doctors and got no relief. I then called on Dr. Rosenbury and he took my case and I soon got better and still improved, till now I am well and comfortable, and will say that this is given voluntarily for the good of others. I don't begrudge the money I paid him. I am comfortable and well. Yours With Respect,

EDWARD WAREHAM.

—Michigan came near losing her presidential vote last fall. They had recently changed their election law and forgot to make any arrangement for gathering up the federal vote. All the state officers however, were republicans and kept the matter quiet and had the vote taken up as before and did not mention it till a few days ago, when some one introduced a bill into the legislature providing for taking up such returns. This was the first the democrats knew of the weak point.

—Mrs. W. T. Allison, formerly Miss Rebecca Shull, writes us from her home at Phillipsburg Mont., that all are well including their family and that of Josiah. They have had a winter something like ours, only the two weeks of severe weather showed as low as 32 below zero. Of course they are all for free silver out there now, and very properly so, too.

BABY HARRISON DEAD.

Sunday morning the five weeks old baby of Prof. and Mrs. Harrison died at their home on west Seventh street. The little child had been suffering from a severe cold and its death, it is thought, was caused by catarrhal fever. Funeral services were held at the residence this afternoon at 3:00 o'clock and conducted by Rev. Walts and interment was in Woodlawn. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of the COURIER with their host of friends in the lost of this brightest jewel in their household.

BAPTIST CHURCH.

Two of the smallest revivalists that ever conducted meetings in our city are holding forth at this church every evening this week. The singer is Will E. Houghton and the preacher is Rev. Will P. Pearce. Everybody invited.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

Commissioners.

There was an extra session this afternoon, Friday, called for the purpose of closing up the work and settling with Mr. Ernest, the expert accountant who has been examining the county matters. It is believed he has done all that is to be done, and that with the facts he has brought out, the losses can all be made plain. It is the opinion that the county will not lose anything or at least not much, except the expense of examining the books and accounts. It is expected that Mrs. Coffinberry will make any losses from that source, at least all losses to the county, though we cannot say how the bondsmen will come out. And we presume the bondsmen of both Fair and Moody will suffer some.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, and Commerce, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

HORSEMEN MEET.

Meeting of the Stewards of the National Trotting Circuit.

A meeting of the stewards of the National Trotting Circuit was held at the office of the Detroit Driving Club, Detroit, Mich. Those who were present as representatives of the various associations are:

D. J. Campau and P. M. Campbell of Detroit.

Col. William Edwards and Secretary S. W. Giles of Cleveland.

Sam Pentland and Charles E. Conrad of Columbus.

H. C. Rockhill of Fort Wayne, Ind.

W. H. Goeker, Secretary of the National Trotting Association, was also present.

The dates for meetings will be as follows:

Saginaw, July 6 to 9.
Detroit, July 13 to 24.
Cleveland, July 26 to 31.
Columbus, August 2 to 6.
Fort Wayne, August 9 to 14.
Indianapolis, August 16 to 21.
Glenns Falls, August 24 to 26.
Beedville, August 31 to September 4.
Fleetwood Park, N. Y., September 6 to 11.

The aggregate of purses will amount to $250,000, the largest in the history of the association. Action was taken, according to which every club must give purses averaging not less than $1,500 each.

Cuban Affairs.

A special from Havana says: Through Canraguy Las Villas, Matanza and Havana the Cuban bands are swarming. Around the capital itself and in a small territory where there are neither mountains nor forests in which the Cubans might shelter themselves, they show a degree of boldness that is amazing, in view of the power of the Spanish army and the odds against them. Pinar Del Rio is not pacified at all, and the Spanish official reports themselves prove that fighting is going on daily there.

Firemen Hurt.

While the No. 10 Reel Company was answering a fire alarm at Indianapolis, and in the act of coming out of the house, in front of which a big sewer is being excavated, a negro stuck his head up, at which the horses shied and dashed the reel into a lamp post. Harry Davis, driver, and George Toon, pipeman, were thrown off and badly hurt, and George Newland, who attempted to stop the horses, was stepped on. The reel was knocked out of service.

Colonel Miller's Car.

The car in which President-elect McKinley will ride to Washington next month is owned by Colonel John F. Miller, of Richmond, Ind., who is the General Superintendent of the southwest system of the Pennsylvania lines. He tendered the use of his car to McKinley more than three years ago, and the acceptance was made soon after McKinley was declared elected.

The Inter-State Base Ball League.

Mansfield, Ohio, has been accepted as the eighth member of the Inter-State base ball league. The circuit now comprises Toledo, Youngstown, Springfield, Dayton and Mansfield, Ohio; New Castle, Pa.; Wheeling, W. Va., and Fort Wayne, Ind. Con Strouthers, former manager of the Detroit team of the Western league, will manage the Mansfield club.

College Burned.

The Lancaster Medical Institute at Lancaster, Ohio, was destroyed by fire. Dr. Simon of Jackson, W. Va., a patient for the Keeley treatment, perished. In attempting to escape he became confused, crawled under a bed and could not be found in time by his rescuers.

Both Escorts Killed.

Andrew and George Volke and two lady friends left Wanatah to go to a dance in the country. In crossing the Pennsylvania tracks they were run down by the Ft. Wayne accommodation. Both men were instantly killed, the ladies escaping unhurt.

Generous Offer.

At a meeting of prominent Baptists in New York City, at the residence of J. D. Rockefeller, the latter promised to contribute $250,000 toward paying off the total indebtedness of $486,000 resting upon the Baptist Foreign and Home Missionary Societies.

Chinese Arrested.

Chinese Inspecter Scharf has arrested a number of Chinese at the Grand Central depot, New York City. He charges that they came from Montreal and were illegally admitted into this country.

Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Feb. 23 and 24.—Hanlon's Superba.
Feb. 26.—"Evangeline."

Fatal Eplosion.

Two men were killed and six others seriously injured by the bursting of a boiler in a sawmill of Wyrick Bros., at Magnolia, Ark. The dead are Calhoun White, white, and John Lewis, colored. The loss to the property amounts to about $5,000.

Twenty Drowned.

It is now learned that through the loss of the British cargo steamer Cyanus, from Bilboa for Glasgow, near the Island of Ushant, off the coast of Brittany, France, twenty of her crew were drowned.

Olney Offered a Chair in Harvard.

Secretary Olney has received from President Eliot of Harvard University an invitation to fill the chair of international law at that institution after the expiration of his term of office in the State Department. The Secretary has taken the offer under consideration.

Woman Elected Chaplain.

Mrs. Rebecca Mitchell, of Idaho Falls, president of the Idaho Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has been elected chaplain of the State Legislature, an unusual honor for a woman. She was largely instrumental in securing woman suffrage for Idaho.

A. M. BILLINGS DEAD.

Very Wealthy Chicago Business Man Has Passed Away.

Albert M. Billings, president of the Home National Bank, founder of the People's Gas Light and Coke Company, and one of the typical business men of Chicago, died Sunday evening, aged 83. His illness was of brief duration, dating from Friday. Mr. Billings could hardly be classed among the early settlers of Chicago, but he was distinctively a pioneer business man. His career began in 1859, when with Commodore Garrison he started the manufacture of illuminating gas on the West Side. He was born in Royalton, Vt., in 1814, and gained an early experience in commercial affairs that fitted him admirably for the rush and bustle which he encountered when he came West to try his fortune. Mr. Billings was a very rich man. Nobody among his most intimate friends pretends to know the extent of the wealth he accumulated. He acquired his fortune through the possession of a tremendous energy and a remarkable shrewdness as an organizer, coupled with an integrity that was never questioned in all his dealings. His word was his bond, and Chicago has had good reason to be proud of his interest in her welfare. His personality was strong, even to the point of eccentricity, yet underneath a brusque and sometimes forbidding exterior he concealed a generous nature. It is said of Mr. Billings that he wore his wrong side outward. He believed in concealing the doings of his right hand from his left when called upon to respond to the demands of charity. His habits were of the simplest kind, with all his wealth, and he never missed an opportunity to impress the lessons of economy upon those with whom he came in close contact.

INVADE BRITISH MARKET.

Americans Underselling Local Ironmakers at Birmingham.

United States Consul Parker, at Birmingham, England, has supplied the State Department with extracts from local papers showing that the British ironmakers are disquieted by the receipt at Birmingham of large consignments of American pigiron at £4 5s per ton, or 10 shillings under the English minimum. There were also reports of negotiations in Philadelphia for the sale to European buyers of 20,000 tons of billets at £3 15s per ton delivered. The British ironmen generally ascribe this phenomenal movement to the trade depression in the United States, which causes forced sales abroad, but others point to the steady continuance of the American shipments as evidence that they must be made at a profit, and hold that superior natural advantages and improved processes of manufacture have turned the scale.

BRAZIL FANATICS GAIN MEN.

Victorious in Several Encounters with Government Troops.

The Brazil fanatical insurrectionists, under Conselhiro, have now 6,000 well-armed men, organized and concentrated in Bahia. The people in the rural towns are helping the fanatics with arms and money. Where this help is not given the vengeance of Conselhiro's band falls upon the settlers. In this manner more than sixty rich plantations have already been destroyed. The Government has been informed that several foreigners have joined the fanatics and are pushing forward a more scientific military organization among them. In several skirmishes with the Federal troops the latter were defeated. The fanatics have obtained steam launches, and now patrol the rivers and streams in the districts where they are strongest. In this way the range of the devastation committed by them is extended and the utmost terror prevails in that region.

Cattle Shipments Checked.

Complying with the act of Congress for the suppression of contagious diseases among domestic animals, Secretary Morton has issued to the managers and agents of railroads and transportation companies, stockmen and others a circular notifying them that a contagious and infectious disease known as splenetic or southern fever exists among cattle in California, Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia, portions of Tennessee and the Indian territory. From Feb. 15 to Nov. 15, inclusive, during each year, no cattle are to be transported from the territory indicated to any other portion of the United States, except by rail for immediate slaughter, and when so transported strict quarantine regulations are to be complied with. Cattle from Mexico may be admitted into the United States, but they will not be permitted to cross the quarantine line otherwise than by rail for immediate slaughter, except by special permit. Notice is given that cattle infested with the boophilus bovis, or southern cattle tick, disseminate the contagion of splenetic fever, and they are to be considered as infectious cattle and be subject to the rules and regulations governing the movement of southern cattle.

Gift to the President and Olney.

Senor Andrade, accompanied by Secretary Olney, called on President Cleveland, bearing a testimonial from the governor and people of the State of Zulia, Venezuela, in recognition of the good offices of the President and Secretary Olney in the matter of the boundary dispute. The testimonial consisted of a rosette composed of 172 samples of rare woods from the forests of Zulia and a cane made of 125 pieces of these roots.

Starvation in Louisiana.

Thirty thousand people in the State of Louisiana are practically starving to death. A relief committee, which has inspected the stricken parishes east of Shreveport, says this number of people will have to be sustained during the unfruitful season. The State has already expended $65,000 for corn and provisions for the sufferers and calls for funds. A meeting was held in Shreveport under call of the Board of Trade and $5,000 was subscribed.

Carrier Pigeons Soon to Be Pie.

Joseph Hahn, a Chicago traveling salesman, had three homing pigeons which he used to send missives to his wife from various ports of the country. He let them fly from the car windows, and in a day or so they always appeared home. But their days of love-bearing are over, for Sunday night some one stole the three pigeons from Mr. Hahn's house, and by this time they very likely have been served in a game pie.

Limits the Price of Armor.

The Senate Committee on Naval Affairs reached a conclusion on the report to be made as a result of its inquiry on the subject of armor plate. The committee will recommend that the Secretary of the Navy shall not be authorized to pay more than $400 per ton for armor and that an appropriation of $1,500,000 be made to be used in the establishment of a plant in case the manufacturers refuse to accept this price.

Fell Dead in the Pulpit.

Mrs. William I. Fee, aged wife of Rev. Mr. Fee, a well-known former Methodist minister of Springfield, O., fell dead in the pulpit while exhorting at a big revival at Felicity. Women screamed and men wept. The couple celebrated their golden wedding three months ago.

Anxious for Seizure.

According to reports received from the island of Crete, the situation has not changed for the better. The revolution is spreading and the Christians are, in most cases, fighting under the flag of Greece. The conservative element in the legislative chamber is opposed to the policy of seizing the island in defiance of the powers. They argue that Greece should not attempt to annex the island until she is assured of the support of some one of the great powers. They claim, further, that Europe is not prepared to sanction anything that might serve to impel the Turkish problem toward solution at this time. It is possible, they assert, that the warships of other nations will co-operate in re-establishing, if not maintaining, peace, and that King George may be served with notice that he must not override the European guaranty of Turkish reforms on the island of Crete. On the other hand, the radical element insists that Crete should be annexed to Greece without delay and in spite of all opposition. At any rate, they assert, an aggressive stand may force the whole Turkish situation, under cover of which Greece can obtain possession of Crete. During the uproarious debate Tuesday afternoon the radical element urged the Government to take a firm stand on the matter of union with Crete at all costs. So warm did the discussion over this question become that personal encounters between the various deputies were only prevented by the intercession of friends.

WOOL GROWERS MEET.

They Will Ask Congress for a Protective Tariff on Merino.

The National Wool Growers' Association met in Washington with thirty-six members present, representing practically all of the wool-growing States and territories. A resolution was adopted calling on Congress for such a protective tariff upon merino wool as will give the growers east of the Missouri river 20 cents per pound, farm value, for unwashed merino, and 25 cents, farm value, for washed. For sections west of the Missouri river 16 cents is demanded, farm value, for unwashed. A committee of seven was appointed, with President Lawrence as chairman, to confer with representatives of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers and with representatives of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, with a view to an agreement as to the pending wool and woolen tariff schedule, with a reservation, however, to the effect that the growers would not agree to any proposition not in accord with their views.

TESTING FINENESS OF COINS.

Commission Making Annual Examination at Philadelphia Mint.

The annual test and examination of the weight and fineness of the coins reserved at the several mints during the last year opened at the Philadelphia mint Wednesday. The test and examination are made pursuant to the provisions of section 57 of the Revised Statutes, the President being required to designate the commissioners. At the same time, the affair is very much of a farce, or a pleasing bit of fiction, something on the line of the examination of the vaults of the House of Commons the day before the opening of Parliament in search of possible conspirators. Few of the commissioners nominated from year to year know a thing about the weight or fineness of coins, and the affair has become little more than a junket.

CARS FALL OFF A TRESTLE.

Ice Weakens a Structure at Franklin Mine, Md.

The breaking of an ice gorge weakened a trestle on the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railway at Franklin Mine, Md., causing the trestle to give way about midnight, while an excursion train was crossing it. The engine crossed safely, but the combination car and rear coach went into the stream, which was unusually high, owing to a thaw, and this threw the engine on its side. There were fifteen passengers aboard and they became panic-stricken, men and women battling to escape. All eventually got out of the coaches and probably reached shore in safety. Robert Ross, engineer, and John N. Howard, fireman, attempted to jump from the engine, but Ross was caught in the wreck and died from the effects of inhaling escaping steam.

SAFETY FOR DEPOSITORS.

Kansas Legislator Wants All Banks to Protect Their Patrons.

At Topeka, Kan., Representative Gillespie incorporated a rather novel idea in a bill which he has introduced in the House. The bill provides for the creation and maintenance of a guarantee fund for the protection of depositors of defunct State banks. It provides for the levy of a quarter-mill tax on all deposits in State banks to make a fund, to be deposited with the State Treasurer. When a bank breaks and the assets from all sources are exhausted, the State Treasurer shall pay the depositors the balance of the money due them from said bank out of the fund accumulated.

Cleveland on Passports.

The President has recommended to Congress that 3,000 copies of passport regulations of foreign countries be printed for distribution by the State Department. The communication also advises all Americans going abroad to secure passports before leaving the United States.

Scalpers Are Victors.

The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce killed the railroad anti-ticket scalpers' bill.

CLEVELAND AND HIS MINISTERS PREPARE TO GET OUT.

What They Expect to Do When Uncle Sam's Pay Checks Stop—Mr. Cleveland Will Go Direct to His New Home at Princeton.

After March 4.

Washington correspondence:

YET a little while and Mr. Cleveland's household of cabinet ministers will hold its last meeting, after which its members—a majority of them, at least—will scatter to the four quarters of the land to take up anew the burden of life as it is lived by unofficial members of the business and social world. Most of the cabinet ministers will, undoubtedly, be filled with joy because of their release from the cares of state; others will put off official life with lingering regrets, and yet others are apparently laying careful plans looking to their remaining in Washington, for the present, at least.

The prospect of handing over his portfolio to a successor evidently possesses no unpleasant features to Secretary of War Lamont. He will cut loose from the martial environments of the war office and go to New York by the first train he can catch on the 5th of March. Secretary Morton will seek to forget the cares of office among the almond-eyed natives of the orient. The prospect is evidently an alluring one to the Secretary of Agriculture, for he talked enthusiastically about his plans to the writer.

"I shall go from here to Chicago," he said. "I have three sons in business there, and I intend to stay and visit them for awhile. Then I shall go to my place in Nebraska City—Arbor Lodge. I have lived in that neighborhood nearly all my life, and I intend to stay at my Nebraska City home for a little while. When I do get ready to take a trip anywhere, I am going to Japan with one of my sons, Paul Morton, who is vice-president of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road. It will be entirely a pleasure trip, and we have plans all laid for making it a thoroughly enjoyable one."

When Hoke Smith's successor leaves the scene of his short term of office as Secretary of the Interior, he will help to move the wheels of business in St. Louis again. "I am neither glad nor sorry to leave Washington," remarked Secretary Francis: "the few months that I have held my present office have been pleasant ones to me, but I shall not have any regrets when I am rolling westward in the direction of St. Louis. I shall return at once to my business life there."

Postmaster General Wilson proved to be in a negative rather than a positive humor when discovered in his office. While signing documents with the patient, untiring energy of a machine, he undertook to deny various rumors that have been afloat concerning his future ambitions in the business world. "You can deny," he said, as he added another autograph to the heap on his desk, "that I have been offered the managing editorship of a New York newspaper. I have been offered, but have not accepted, the presidency of educational institutions in various parts of the country. As an actual matter of fact, I have made no plans."

"I shall return to my corporation practice in Boston," said Secretary of State Olney. "My business there has gone right along during my absence, and March 6 will probably see me in my Boston office engaged in the duties that I left to come here." For many reasons Washington will miss no cabinet minister more than it will Attorney General Harmon. He has taken an active interest in local amateur sports, and the athletes of Washington will shed tears when he leaves. "I go back to Cincinnati," he said, in reply to the writer's query, "to take my old place there with the firm of Harmon, Colston, Goldsmith & Hoadly, of which I am the senior partner."

STEVENSON'S MYTHICAL ORANGE ORCHARDS.

Secretaries Carlisle and Herbert declared the future to be a sealed book to them, so far as present intentions are concerned. Secretary Carlisle preferred to fence my questions regarding his future movements. Rumor has it that he will practice law in New York, Cincinnati and half a dozen other places. As not even an ex-Secretary of the Treasury can be in more than one city at once, one rumor is as good as another. The fact is, say the Washingtonians, that Mr. Carlisle has yet hopes of staying in Washington, and, if his ambitious wife can manage it, he will.

Private Secretary Thurber talked freely concerning the plans of the present incumbent, and incidentally knocked in the head a variety of rumors with regard to Mr. Cleveland's intentions when he says good-by to the White House.

"The President," said Mr. Thurber, "with Mrs. Cleveland and the children, will go direct from Washington to his new home at Princeton, N. J. He intends to stay there only a short time, but hopes he will be allowed during that time to enjoy the welcome change from the bustle of official life to the quiet of a private residence. Buzzard's Bay has too firm a hold on the affections of both the President and Mrs. Cleveland for Princeton to charm them long. They will go to Gray Gables after a short stay at Princeton, and Mr. Cleveland expects to remain there for some time. He is in robust health, but has made no plans for going into active business life after March 4. He will take a prolonged rest before considering the question of getting into business again."

Vice-President Stevenson regrets very much that rumors of his vast wealth and growing estates are founded on nothing more substantial than shifting sand.

"I see they have me booked for California," said Mr. Stevenson, when asked regarding his future intentions. "There I am to assume the management of big olive groves that I have purchased presumably with the money I have put by during my term in Washington. I wish the kind friends who have credited me with possessing these olive and lemon treasures were correctly informed, but it isn't true, I regret to say. I have my home at Bloomington, Ill., and there I intend to go when I leave Washington."

Senator Hoar introduced a bill providing for a commission of three persons to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States.

The House Committee on Ways and Means considered a bill recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to authorize the sale of forfeited opium to the highest bidders.

Ex-Secretary John W. Foster is teaching a Bible class in the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, of Washington, which is attended by about sixty people, including several public men.

Senator Platt, of Connecticut, has introduced a bill amending the copyright laws so as to provide that if any person shall cause to be published any copyright article contrary to law he shall forfeit $1 for every copy sold.

The agreement recently concluded between this Government and Canada, abolishing the cattle quarantine between Canada and the United States and substituting a rigid inspection between the countries, has taken effect.

Richard R. Kenney, Democratic contestant from Delaware, was sworn in Friday as Senator, his credentials being regular and signed by the Governor. This marked the culmination of a long contest over the vacant Delaware seat. No objection was made, it being admitted he had at least a prima facie right, though Mr. Chandler stated his belief that H. A. Dupont had been legally elected, adding, however, that Mr. Kenney could be seated and the matter brought before the Senate hereafter. The seating of Kenney augmented the Democratic membership to forty, and for the first time raised the full membership of the Senate to its proper quota. It effects no essential change in party strength, however. The Senate passed the following among other House bills: Authorizing the Duluth and North Dakota Railroad Company to construct two bridges across the Red River of the North between Minnesota and North Dakota; amending the law relative to the Rock Island bridge to permit street railway companies to provide electric power in lieu of rent for the use of the bridge.

The Senate was in executive session most of Monday considering the Anglo-American peace treaty, so that little time was given in open session to the transaction of regular legislative work. Early in the day the bill rearranging the judicial districts of Texas was passed over the President's veto by the unusually heavy majority of 57 to 1, the negative vote being that of Mr. Caffery, of Louisiana. Speaking of the bill Mr. Mills (Dem.) of Texas said the burden of the President's objection was that the judge of the court, the clerk and the marshal opposed the change. "It is strange to me," said Mr. Mills, "that the President does not consult the fifteen representatives from Texas—thirteen in the other house and two in this—instead of accepting the view of the court officers." The effect of the veto is to make the bill a law without further reference to the President, as it already had passed over the veto in the House. At 1 o'clock, on motion of Mr. Sherman, the Senate went into executive session and so remained until adjournment at 5:25 p. m. The day in the House was devoted to the consideration of District of Columbia business.

The House Tuesday agreed to the final conference report on the immigration bill by an overwhelming majority (217 to 33) and passed two more pension bills over the President's veto. The modifications of the immigration bill contained in the conference report by which an intending immigrant was required to be able to read and write "the English or another language" and which permitted the illiterate wife and minor children to accompany an eligible emigrant removed the main opposition to the bill. The beneficiaries of the pension bills passed over the veto were both of the class known as "remarried widows." A bill was also passed to prevent the fraudulent use of the word "copyright" on books and other publications. The open session of the Senate was wholly perfunctory, and after transacting some routine business the doors were closed and an executive session continued throughout the day. The bill was passed to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of the South pass by closing the existing crevasses in Pass L'Outre in the Mississippi River. The routine business was cleared away by 12:35 p. m. and on motion of Mr. Sherman the Senate went into executive session and at 5:40 p. m. adjourned.

The electoral votes of the forty-five States of the Union were formally counted at the joint session of the House and Senate held Wednesday for that purpose, and Vice President Stevenson proclaimed the election of McKinley and Hobart as President and Vice President respectively. Senator Morgan, champion of the Nicaragua canal bill, announced in the Senate his abandonment of that measure for the present session of Congress, and thereupon it was displaced by the bankruptcy bill. He gave notice that he would renew his advocacy of the bill at an early day of the coming extra session. The bankruptcy bill succeeds to the advantageous position of "unfinished business." The agricultural appropriation bill was taken up late in the day and passed at $3,255,500. The House bill was passed extending the time for complying with the requirements of the act forfeiting railroad lands. The House has passed the Senate bill relating to the carrying of obscene matter by express companies, and it has gone to the President for his signature. The penalty for violation, upon conviction, is a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment at hard labor for not more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the Court.

The House Thursday passed the fortifications appropriation bill with but a single amendment and made some headway with the postoffice appropriation bill. The major portion of the day was consumed in political debate on the financial question, which was precipitated by a provision in a bill providing for funding the debt of the territories. The bill aroused the opposition of Mr. McMillin (Dem.) of Tennessee because it provided for gold bonds and the payment of interest in gold or its equivalent. Mr. Knox (Rep.) of Massachusetts said that the stipulation regarding gold bonds applied only to Arizona, which had outstanding gold bonds to be refunded. An amendment by Mr. McMillin (Dem.) of Tennessee was as follows: "Provided, That the principal and interest of the bonds funded under this act shall be payable in any lawful money of the United States, except the Arizona bonds above described heretofore issued." This was adopted, and the bill passed.

Notes of Current Events.

Count Cassella, the Pope's private chamberlain, formerly of Denver, died at Rome. He was born in London in 1829.

Edward W. Emerson, of Concord, son of Ralph Waldo Emerson, has been chosen as poet for Phi Beta Kappa day at Harvard, next June.

It is semi-officially stated that negotiations for a treaty of general arbitration between France and the United States were commenced about a year ago, but were only resumed when it was announced that the Anglo-American treaty had been definitely concluded.

The Russian legation in Washington has sent a contribution of $100 to the popular fund now being raised in Washington for the relief of the city's poor.

Capt. Henry King, chief editorial writer of the paper, has been appointed to succeed the late Joseph B. McCullagh as editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. No change will be made in the policy or style of the paper.

Official advices from Manilla say that the situation there is greatly improved and that the rebels do not dare to approach the capital. It is reported that 6,000 insurgents, while trying to cross the Isthmus of Noveleta of the province of Cavite, were repulsed with heavy losses.

THE INDIANA SOLONS

Attorney General Ketcham sent to the Legislature Monday a long communication in reference to the investigation of the Vandalia Railway Company, and with it a statement submitted at the request of the Legislature, by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. In his communication the Attorney General charges that the statement furnished by the railroad company is not a true one, that it is taken from the published reports which were made up with the view of defrauding the State. The next step will be to try and pass a bill authorizing the Attorney General to proceed in the courts against the road for the collection of the $1,500,000 alleged to be due the State. The bill which has been prepared provides that if the debt is found to be a just one the State shall take possession of the road and operate it until the debt shall have been paid.

The Legislature Tuesday, as for some time past, did nothing of importance. At the Republican caucus Tuesday night it was decided to stand by the apportionment bill. A half dozen Republicans had previously refused to support it. It is understood the bolters have agreed to abide by the caucus action. Representative Bellamy Sutton's anti-French bill of fare amendment to the hotel bill was called up, but did not result in the sport that many had looked forward to. Mr. Sutton explained that he had never expected the amendment to become a law. "If others can get along with the French bills of fare at the hotels when they come to the city I can," he said. Without permitting a discussion a quick-witted member moved to lay the amendment on the table before the discussion got started, and it was killed without a struggle.

The Senate Wednesday, after an all-day debate, passed the bill amending the general election law, substituting a pencil for the stamp now used in marking the ballot; preventing fusion between parties by providing that the name of a candidate shall not appear more than once on any ballot, and prohibiting a candidate from withdrawing after his name has been certified to the election board. The bill was passed by a strict party vote. The Senate also passed the caucus bill repealing the present metropolitan police laws and substituting one under which the new Republican Governor may appoint police commissioners for each throughout the State. The Republicans in the House passed the legislative apportionment bill agreed upon in caucus.

The lower branch of the Legislature Thursday passed the bill providing for the creation of a labor commission and for the arbitration of labor troubles. There was but one vote against the bill, and it is believed it will pass the Senate. The bill provides for a commission composed of two electors appointed by the Governor. One must have been for ten years an employe for wages at a craft, and the other must have been an employer of men for ten years. The commissioners are authorized to appoint a secretary at a salary of $600 a year. In case labor troubles arise the commissioners are to put themselves in communication with the parties to the quarrel and endeavor to bring about a settlement. In case of no settlement the commissioners and the Circuit judge of the county in which the trouble arises shall compose a board of arbitration. The bill provides that the commissioners shall receive $10 a day for time actually expended, and the necessary traveling expenses. There goes with the bill an appropriation of $5,000 for 1897, and the same amount for 1898. The entire afternoon in the House was occupied with a discussion of the bill presented by Representative Jones, the only colored member, providing that children of colored parents shall be admitted to the white schools of the State. Under the present law they are supplied with separate schools in the larger cities, and are entitled to enter the white high schools. The House adjourned without having reached a vote on the bill. The Senate passed several bills of minor importance. Gov. Mount approved the bill creating a Superior Court circuit of the counties of Howard and Grant, and appointed Hiram Brownlee of Marion, late candidate for the nomination for United States Senator, judge of the new court.

Court Etiquette.

It is contrary to custom in the Austrian court for perishable articles to appear twice on the imperial table. The result is large perquisites for the attendants. To one man falls all the uncorked bottles, to another the wine left in the glasses, to another the joints, and to another still the game or the sweets. Every morning a sort of market is held in the basement of the palace, where the Viennese come to purchase the remains of the banquets. Long ago, in England, even the greatest men in the land were pleased to receive such perquisites. In the reign of Henry II., for instance, the lord chancellor was entitled to the ends of one great candle and forty small ones per day. And the aquarius, who must be a baron in rank, received one penny for drying towels on every ordinary occasion of the king's bathing.

On the Mississippi.

This country, to people who have not looked into the matter, does not figure as a large owner of floating property outside of war vessels and lighthouse service; but a recent careful estimate shows that on one part of the Mississippi river the nation owns over 1,000 craft of different kinds. That is the stretch between New Orleans and Cairo, and the value of the vessels and their outfit for riprap, revetment and levee work does not fall below $6,000,000. When the work is rushing there are at times 10,000 men employed on the vessels and in connection with the tasks assigned them.

Ingenious Machines.

Pens are made by machines which seem almost to think. The steel is cut into ribbons as wide as the length of one pen and these are fed to machines which cut out the blanks, then fashion, stamp them, split the points and place the maker's name on the backs. The pens are now complete, save the annealing, and this forms a separate operation. After being annealed they are counted and placed in boxes. A machine has been invented for performing both these operations.

Going to Alaska for Gold.

Reports from the Pacific coast say that never in the history of the West have so many people taken passage on the steamers for Alaska. The discovery of gold in certain parts of the far-off territory is, of course, the attraction for many of the visitors; but the increased facilities for transportation and the possibility of seeing some of the grandest scenery in the world have induced many tourists to choose Alaska rather than Europe as their objective point.

A RAY OF SUNSHINE.

Five little baby fingers,
  Outstretched in eager glee;
Five little rosebud fingers,
  A pretty sight to see,
Opening and shutting in rapture
  Grasping a sunbeam bright,
Striving in vain to capture
  The ray of sparkling light.

I glanced at the face above them,
  So happy and full of play;
Blue eyes as bright and sparkling
  As the dancing sunbeam's ray;
And a prayer arose, unbidden,
  That my child might always find
The rays that are often hidden
  By the world's rough stones and wind.

If we could always gather
  The sunbeams in our way,
The rays of hope and mirth and love
  That shine on our darkest day,
Our faces would grow brighter,
  Our hearts grow warm and glad,
Our burdens all seem lighter,
  And life not half so bad.

THE LIGHTHOUSE MYSTERY.

"My man, do you want a berth?" said he.

"Aye, aye, cappen," said I. "I want one badly. I'm half starved and half frozen."

He made no answer, but just a sign to follow him, and he stalked away and I pegged after him. He kept close along the shore as we walked, and for a while he said nothing. At last, however, he turned and pointed seaward.

"You see that?" said he.

He indicated a lighthouse on a lonely rock.

"I'm the keeper," said he. "I want you to cook my meals and keep my bachelor's hall for me. Now and then I shall want you to row in and buy provisions. The work won't be hard. I think the pay will suit you. Do you know why I chose you?"

"No, cappen," said I.

"Because I saw that hope was at an end with you," he said. "It's only a man who had come to that who could live with me in a lighthouse."

"I was on a desert island once," said I. "After that I shan't be afraid of a lighthouse."

I'd been in a lighthouse before; it was no new thing to me, but after I'd been there a few hours I wondered what my master hired me for. It was like being pensioned off; there was nothing to do. But, mark ye, when it came night, and the wind began to moan about the lighthouse, and the lamps were lit and all outside was black as pitch, and all the sound we heard was the swash, swash of the waves, my master mixed some grog and called me to sit along with him. That looked sociable, but I can't say he did. He sat glowering over his glass for a while, and opening his mouth as if to speak, and shutting it again. Then said he:

"What's your name?"

"Ben Dare," said I.

"Would you mind calling yourself Brace?" he asked.

"I've no reason to be ashamed of my name," said I.

"Look here," said he. "I am a gentleman born and bred. I never came to earning my bread before. I'm ashamed of it. This is what I mean. If any strangers come out here and ask for William Brace, why, you can say you are the man. You claim to be lighthouse keeper. It's easy. I don't suppose much company will call, but I choose not to see them, if they do. That's what I hired you for."

"Oh," said I.

"You see," said he, "I got this place through a rich man who had influence. Those who gave it to me never saw me. If I die some day, why, here you are in the place. If I go off, and I may, here you are still until then. I'll pay you well, and you know your duties."

"Well, it's shamming," said I, "but after all, what does any one care what my name is, and what shall I call you?"

"Call me nothing," said he. "Call me captain, as you did when I met you, but never speak of me to any one."

Gentleman or no, he wasn't lazy. He didn't care how he worked. The lamps were as bright as jewels. There wasn't a speck of dirt in the whole tower. But let any boat come nigh us, away he went and hid himself, and came out with a white, scared face and a shaking hand. At night he was afraid to go up to the lamps alone, and he'd look over his shoulder and turn white as we stood there together. At last he took a new turn. He sat staring at a corner for a while. Then he spoke to me in a low voice:

"Brace, do you believe in ghosts?"

"I ha'n't considered the question," I answered.

"Well," said he, softer than before, "look into that corner," and he pointed. I looked.

"Don't you see anything?" he asked.

"No," said I. "No, cappen."

"Ah," he muttered; "very well, very well; I'm glad you don't."

But that wasn't nothing to what happened the very next night. We slept in two bunks nigh each other, and naturally when he woke up with a yell I woke too. He was shrieking and shaking and wringing his hands.

"The woman! the woman!" he said. "She stood here just now, all red with blood. It dripped down the white ruffles. It dripped on her hands. Stop her! stop her! She has gone to call them. Stop her! stop her!"

"Where did she go?" I asked.

He stared at me with wide-open eyes, all the whites showing, below and above.

"She couldn't have been here," said he. "It was a dream."

"Lord love you—a nightmare," said I.

So we went to sleep again. But I heard of the woman so often after that that I grew used to her. The cappen, as I called him, got to be worse and worse every day. I wanted to go ashore and fetch the doctor, but he would not hear to it. He raved if I tried to leave him.

At last there came a hot, hot night in June. It was burning hot all day and a dead calm at night. About dark the cappen went to sleep, and I went and sat where I could see the water and the lights ashore. It was so clear that I could hear the sailors in a Spanish ship moored not far away singing in their foreign lingo. And I was sort of quiet and dreamy like, when something happened that waked me mighty wide and sudden. Something was standing on the steps below me, something white. Something came toward me. It was a little slender figure, with long hair all about its shoulders. I couldn't see its face. I don't think I really saw it plainly at all. But it went past me softly while I looked, and I knew it was a woman in a white ruffled gown, and that she had gone to the room where my master lay. I shook too hard for a moment to move; but as soon as I could I started up to go to him. Just then a voice cried:

"Lighthouse, ahoy!"

I answered "Aye, aye," and stopped a bit. Duty first of all things with a sailor.

A boat lay at the foot of the steps, and four men jumped out of it.

"We want William Brace, keeper of this lighthouse," said one, a big man in a linen overcoat.

"I'm one that answers to that name," says I.

He swung a lantern over my head.

"Search the place, my men," said he.

There was no use saying anything, but I did try to stop them.

"I've got a sick friend aloft," says I. "Don't disturb him. I'm afraid the woman will skeer him, anyhow, he's so low."

"What woman?" said he.

"The one that came aboard with you, sir," said I.

"No woman came with us," he snarled. "Stand aside. Men, do your duty." They went up stairs. I followed. I saw them walk into the cappen's room. I heard them cry out and stand still. When I got to the door they stood in a row looking down on the bed. I looked, too. Man nor woman couldn't frighten the cappen more. He was dead.

"What had he done?" I asked the officer.

"Killed his wife," said he, "that's all. No doubt she deserved it; but it's not allowed by law when they do."

"God help him," said I.

We were sitting on the front steps. I loved him passionately and ill concealed it, I fear. We were talking in a desultory fashion, which is inevitable among people of undeclared intentions who see each other very frequently. I know that I felt terribly nervous, trembling almost, and weak. Suddenly he blurted out the old commonplace question: "Do you think that we will be friends always?" "Friendship, love, hate, indifference, some one of these the future certainly holds for us!" I said. "Let it be love," he answered softly, as he reached out and took my hand. The word marriage never occurred between us that evening, but when he left me our understanding of each other was complete. Five years elapsed before another lover came. This time he was 30 years of age, but mature in manner, the result of business cares. He came to see me often, but not at close intervals, and I had not yet come to regard him as more than an entertaining friend. One night we went to the theater, and came home. As I gave him my hand at the door he thanked me gallantly, saying: "You have made me very happy to-night." "A most pleasant task, I assure you," I replied. "Would you care to assume it permanently?" he asked straighforwardly, and I said: "If it would please you, yes." He kissed my hand and left, saying he would return the following night. I floated upstairs in ecstasy and lay down that night with the most satisfied feeling I have ever experienced in my life. But he died, dear old fellow, and left me to tea and cats.

Girls often, when discussing those among them who have been "out" a long time, without getting a husband, ask the question: "Can you tell me why it is that she is still unmarried? She seems to have had so many chances." Out of the plentitude of my experience let me offer a little advice. In the first place, do not be over-anxious, a fault to which I imagine many are prone. Don't flush your game too easily, or it is apt to get away. An old rule is to make the charm of your personality so penetrate his whole existence that life without you will become a blank. Just how to accomplish this most desirable result is another question. It can't be done by rules, and comes by nature of a dispensation which those who possess it are not aware of. A more practical rule is to be perfectly open, perfectly natural. These are a woman's most alluring qualities in a true man's eye. If the young man is willing but timid, you will only frighten him still more by attempting to make up the deficiency by an over-display of affection. All he needs is a little assistance. If he is not timid, but cursed with elusiveness, the quality of falling "out" of love gracefully, pursue him relentlessly if you can do it without alarming him or attracting the attention of others.—St. Louis Republic.

Taken at His Word.

When William Hyde, who afterward became postmaster of St. Louis during Cleveland's first term, was managing editor of the Republican, in that city, he threw down the gauntlet in an editorial on some question of local importance. It was immediately accepted by Editor McCullagh of the Globe-Democrat, and a warm debate was precipitated between the two able editors. The intensity of feeling grew apace, and, as often happens in controversies of that kind, drifted into one of scathing abuse between the editors. It was fun for the readers of the rival papers, but disagreeable to the friends of the participants, who expected that serious trouble would result, both men being courageous and daring.

Finally the vitrolic paragraphs of Editor McCullagh stung the other editor with such force that he dispatched a personal communication to McCullagh, telling the latter that the city of St. Louis was not large enough for both of them to live in at the same time, and that one or the other had to leave the city immediately, and since he himself did not contemplate an early departure McCullagh should govern himself accordingly.

The cool and calculating editor of the Globe-Democrat replied by the same messenger that he would answer the communication the next morning in the editorial columns of his paper. And, true to his word, the editorial appeared over the signature of "Mack," his war nom de plume. The editorial, which was double-leaded, declared that he had received a communication from Mr. Hyde the day previous, in which the latter had stated that the city was not large enough to hold them both at the same time, and that Hyde or McCullagh must leave town. Following this came a lavish expression of deep regret on the part of the Globe-Democrat in having to announce the sudden and untimely departure of Editor Hyde of the Republican; that Mr. Hyde was a man who in his long residence in St. Louis had earned the esteem and respect of all who knew him, and that in his leave-taking the city would suffer a distinct and irreparable loss. The editorial then concluded with a long biographical sketch of Editor Hyde, as if he had died on the previous day. The satire was even more pungent than had been the editorial paragraphs previously published. It was effective, too, for it ended the controversy, and both editors pursued the even tenor of their way within a stone's throw of each other without further trouble.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Gen. Nettleton's Joke.

"Gen. George H. Nettleton, who died at Kansas City the other day," said an old-time acquaintance, "was one of the quietest practical jokers I ever knew. A good many years ago, when Gen. Nettleton was the manager of the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad, he sent a telegram that attracted more attention than any other message ever sent over the line. One day in the early summer Gen. James Craig, then the president of the road, went to Chicago on his private car accompanied by Mrs. Craig and a party of ladies. Gen. Nettleton wired ahead to all the important towns that Brigham Young was on his way east with a crowd of his wives. At every station crowds gathered about the car, and when the train reached Hannibal the throng was immense. It took Gen. Craig a long time to take in the situation. It was with difficulty that he made the newspaper reporters in Chicago understand that it was one of Nettleton's jokes. When they did understand it they wrote up the joke quite as extensively as they would have written up the item they thought they had."—The Sunday Republic.

Dextrine.

Dextrine is one of the most remarkable discoveries of the present day. The name is far fetched, being derived from the circumstance that it "revolves its plane of polarity to the right." It is one of the most extensively used substances in the arts and sciences, answering the purposes of a mucilage, exceedingly strong and ready of adhesion, as is seen by the tenacity with which ordinary postage stamps adhere to the backs of envelopes. It is at first made by roasting starch until the substance becomes of a light brown color and gives forth the odor of freshly baked bread. Its manufacture and composition were long a secret, and a high price was asked and obtained for the product, but as soon as its identity with common starch became known, great quantities were made and the price immediately declined.

Perfectly Truthful.

Helen—So he has proposed at last! How did it happen?

Maude—I told him that I was going to be married.

Helen—Why, Maude!

Maude—Yes, and it aroused him instantly. He actually raved. And so I took pity on him, and we are engaged.

Helen—But you told him a fib.

Maude—Not at all. When I told him I was going to be married, I meant to him.—Boston Transcript.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

POMP AND STARVATION.

When the military academy bill was before the Senate, the other day, objection was made to an amendment to pay the transportation and subsistence of the West Point military cadets during their visit to the capital on the occasion of the inauguration of Mr. McKinley. Mr. Gray, of Delaware, opposed the amendment, and in the debate which followed, Senator Allen, of Nebraska, and Stewart, of Nevada, made some sharp thrusts at the extravagant preparations being made for inducting Mr. McKinley into office with great pomp and display.

The cost of the inauguration parade and festivities will run into millions. The ceremony of taking the oath of office will make Mr. McKinley the President of the United States, and this could be done without any gorgeous pomp, or the expenditure of millions. Moreover, such a ceremony would be more in keeping with the simplicity of a republic, whereas the preparations now under way smack more of the furore made over the coronation of the Czar than they do of the customs of the freest country on the face of the earth.

From every large city in the land, and from thousands of small towns and villages, comes the cry for relief. Thousands are perishing from the lack of food and fuel. The homeless are driven into crime by the pangs of hunger. Will a gorgeous pageant at Washington, on March 4, benefit any one of these unfortunates? Those who support the pomp and ceremony, which will attend the coming inauguration, will claim that most of the money will come out of the pockets of the military and political organizations which would be in the grand parade. True, but this does not excuse a frivolous waste of millions, when everywhere over this broad land comes the cry of suffering. If the clubs and other organizations arranging to visit Washington on March 4 would abandon the trip and devote one-tenth of the proposed expenditure to the cause of practical charity, the keen misery of many thousands would be lessened, and the finger of the entire earth would no longer point to starvation in a land which prides itself upon its plenty, and glories in its charities.

The waste of money in inauguration furore and pomp in times like these is a crime. Every dollar paid out for a needless and lavish display means just so much money turned away from the direction of charity. Millions for a useless pageant, while all around us thousands are starving, is un-American, unchristian and unnatural. The voice of the pulpit has been raised against many lesser evils; let it now thunder forth in the interest of American humanity.—Philadelphia Item.

Alger Is Attacked.

It is whispered about Washington that there may be serious opposition to the confirmation of General Alger as Secretary of War in President McKinley's cabinet. It has been known among the leading Republicans that General Alger's war record has been alluded to frequently as one which would put him on the defensive should he ever become the subject of consideration in executive session. General Alger's friends are now privately circulating a reply to the charges made against him in the New York Sun in 1892. The Sun's editorial, printed Feb. 11, 1892, is as follows:

"What is this about General Russell A. Alger, of Michigan, as a Republican candidate for the Presidency on a platform of patriotism and pensions? The various biographies of General Alger dwell more in detail upon the beginning of his military service than on the end. He was major of the Second Regiment, cavalry, General Sheridan's old regiment. On Oct. 16, 1862, he was promoted to be lieutenant colonel of the Sixth Michigan cavalry. Subsequently he was transferred to the Fifth Michigan cavalry and became its colonel.

"In September, 1864, Colonel Alger and his regiment were in the Shenandoah valley taking part in Sheridan's great campaign against Jubal Early. About the first of that month Colonel Alger applied for ten days' leave of absence. The application was disapproved and returned by his division commander, General Wesley Merritt, because of the active operations then in progress. Upon the return of his application disapproved Colonel Alger left his regiment and went to Washington without leave. There he procured a detail on court-martial duty in that city.

"This fact was reported to General Merritt, who reported in turn to General Sheridan, who brought the matter to the attention of the war department, recommending that Colonel Alger be dishonorably discharged from the army for being absent without leave. In consequence of that recommendation from Philip H. Sheridan Colonel Russell A. Alger was discharged from the service on Sept. 30, 1864.

"The record does not read that he was 'dishonorably discharged.' The punishment recommended by General Sheridan was softened and he was merely discharged. The incident terminated his military career. After the war was over he procured in some way the brevet of brigadier general and major general of volunteers.

"These facts are not stated in the current biographical sketches relating to General Russell Absent Alger."

According to General Alger's friends he was not aware of this record nor the recommendations for his dismissal until twenty-four years later. It is also asserted that General Alger was the victim of Custer's jealousy because of the former's rapid advancement in rank.

The Old, Old Story.

When the new Congress is convened in extra session by President McKinley next month a tariff bill on the lines of the one bearing his name, and which was voted down at the polls in two successive national elections, will be ready for adoption. The Republican members of the present House are hard at work on it, and they expect to have it in shape for presentation very shortly after March 4. In some respects this new tariff is going to outdo the former high protective one which made the President-elect famous. The duty on wool, on which the issue was largely fought out in 1892 and 1894, is to be increased very considerably from what it was in the McKinley act of 1890.

Notable among the features of the tariff law that is to be is the care taken of the agriculturists generally. The Republican leaders have evidently concluded to coddle the farmers as they never were coddled before in any measure of this sort. Those along the Canadian border are to be "protected" by the imposition of extravagantly high duties on almost everything that they raise, including donkeys and chestnuts.

Everything that has been learned about this new tariff bill confirms the prediction that it will discriminate, as did the former McKinley law, against the poor and in favor of the rich. The raw material that goes into the clothes that the masses wear will have to pay double, triple and quadruple what it pays now under the Wilson act.

Sugar Trust's Crime Confessed.

Probably to Senator Lexow's surprise, and undoubtedly to his own chagrin, Henry O. Havemeyer, President of the sugar trust, made an admission while on the witness stand before the investigating committee on Friday which may have very serious results for all the members of the combination, whose chief confesses that it controls four-fifths of what has become one of the prime necessities of life.

Evidently Mr. Havemeyer was "rattled" or he was overmastered by that autocratic feeling which seizes on all men of ability who have been permitted to have their own way too much in the world, and which in incautious moments leads them to boast of their own power. When Lexow asked him the one question that was really of consequence the sugar magnate lost his cunning in order, doubtless, to impress his hearers with his own importance, and with the greatness of the combination which he represented.

The question was based on the testimony given by Mr. Havemeyer before a United States Senate Committee in 1894, when he confessed that the trust was able to control the price of refined sugar up to the importing point, and actually did so, and that the combination was formed for the purpose of regulating both the output and the selling price.

The President of the sugar trust did not want to answer plainly as to the truth or falsity of what he said then and did some fencing that seemed to irritate him, and when Lexow suddenly asked this:

"Is it not a fact that you do actually control the price and output to-day?" he leaned back in his chair and replied emphatically and defiantly:

"Yes, sir; that is undoubtedly the fact."

Section 168, paragraph 6, of the Penal Code of the State of New York, declares this a conspiracy, which is punishable as a misdemeanor.

"To commit any act injurious to * * * trade or commerce, or for the perversion or obstruction of justice, or of the due administration of the laws."

Regulating the output of a necessary article of life and fixing its price for all the purchasers is undoubtedly an act "injurious to trade and commerce," and likewise an obstruction of justice. Ought not the officers of the sugar trust be put in the criminal dock on the sworn testimony of their own chief?—New York News.

Sparrows Chase a Rat.

A flock of sparrows chased a rat the other day, chased it determinedly and cruelly, and for a time made life a weary burden to the poor rodent.

Probably it had been robbing their nests, since it was running wildly away from a building with the noisy birds in full pursuit. The rat crossed the street diagonally, making for a hole under the sidewalk; the sparrows flew above him, surrounding and pecking him precisely as the same birds will do a hawk. They cut off his retreat, wounded him severely, and chased him across the street again.

Back and forth they all hurried, until it was plainly evident that the rat was getting the worst of it. His head and back were bleeding copiously, his tail had also suffered and his strength was ebbing noticeably. At last the sudden advent of a cat scared the sparrows and liberated the rat. The cat sprang into the center of the struggling, feathery, excited group, and attempted to catch both birds and rat. But they all escaped her.

The rat made a bound for the hole, which it happened to be near, and the sparrows departedly hastily.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Egg Consumption.

A Parisian scientist asserts that he has compiled trustworthy statistics concerning the number of eggs annually consumed by the nations of Europe. According to his tables, the greatest egg-eating countries are England and Germany. In 1895 England imported 1,250,000,000 eggs, for which was paid about $20,000,000. The eggs came principally from France. During the same year Germany imported 20,000,000 pounds of eggs, also representing about $20,000,000. Most of these eggs came from Russia and Austria-Hungary. Of all European countries Russia has made the greatest advance in exportation. In 1890 she exported only 11,000,000, but in 1895 the number rose to 1,250,000,000, representing a value of $10,200,000. A significant fact in connection with these statistics is that in those countries which are the greatest exporters of eggs the omelet is the favorite dish.

DEADLIEST WEAPONS KNOWN.

Probably Made to the Special Order of Some Cold-blooded Assassin.

"Two of the most beautiful and at the same time murderous objects I have ever seen in all my travels I picked up in Paris during my trip there last summer," said J. V. Atkinson, of Savannah, Ga., to a friend.

"I bought both of them from an old gunsmith in the 'Quartier Latin,' and he assured me they were without doubt the only ones in existence, as far as his knowledge of death-dealing instruments went, and he also told me that he had purchased them of an old Spaniard who had spent most of his life in the South American countries, and had never seen anything that would in any way approach them for villainous, murderous purposes.

"The first, as you see, looks innocent enough, and when I ask you what you think it is you will reply—

"A silver matchbox," answered the reporter, as he gingerly handled the beautifully chased silver object.

"Touch that spring."

At an easy touch the lid of the box flew open on a powerfully hinged spring and disclosed the interior, and in a compartment about one-half of the capacity of the box were a dozen wax matches.

"Now, you'll find a tiny bottom on the side next you and near your thumb. Just press that lightly."

As the suggestion was followed a little, sharp-pointed, creamy white, curved object popped into view from that portion of the box now occupied by the matches.

"What is that?"

"That," said Mr. Atkinson, "is no more nor less than the fore fang of the Great American rattlesnake. You will notice that the fang is sharp as a needle at its point, that it is slit for a distance up the middle, and that it is hollow. You will also observe that a fine, amber-colored, jelly-like substance is contained within the hollow of that fang. That is nothing less horrible than the venom of the rattlesnake, and the rankest poison, the most deadly of agents known to man. A couple of scrapes on a man's hand or face means a certain and a horrible death. Nausea, and vomiting, retching, convulsions, semi-paralysis, complete paralysis, state of coma, death in a most horrible form and the swelling to horrible proportions of the corpse as it rapidly turns black from the virulence of the venom.

"You can readily see what a terrible weapon it would be in the hands of an unscrupulous villain. A scratch or two and the deed would be done, while the victim would simply imagine that he had been scraped by a pin.

"Its companion piece, of devilish ingenuity, is a needle gun. Peculiar looking thing, is it not?" asked Mr. Atkinson, as he passed a richly engraved and silver mounted object, that looked like a cross between a miniature double barreled shotgun and a revolver, to his friend, who handled it with extreme caution.

"That little gun is but five inches over all, and yet it contains within those chambers, in the box-like part, between those fine watch spring steel barrels and the pistol grip, enough of fiendish mischief to lay out a dozen strong men.

"The charge is a strong and powerful cartridge, made of a highly explosive chemical which, by the peculiar construction of the chambers, makes so little noise that it could not be heard by a person ten feet away. The instrument of destruction is a bunch of fine cambric needles that have had their heads flattened to offer resistance and catch the propelling force, and their points have lain in the very same sort of venom of which I spoke until they are thoroughly corroded with it.

"As they leave the gun they scatter and penetrate to the most vital spots, where their terrible work is quickly done. Nothing short of a post-mortem examination of the most rigid kind would betray the cause of death."

It Meant Everything.

The man in the bicycle suit laughed heartily.

"Very funny," he said.

"What?" asked the man with a large section of skin gone from his nose.

"Why, these 'Don'ts' for bicyclists," replied the man in the bicycle suit.

"Let's see them," said the man who was short of skin.

The man in the bicycle suit handed him the paper.

"The best one isn't there," said the man with the fantastic nose, shortly. "If it was the rest wouldn't be necessary."

"What do you consider the best one?" asked the man with the bicycle suit.

"Don't ride," answered the man whose nose stood in need of grafting, and then he carefully put a large piece of court plaster where it would do the most good.—Chicago Post.

A Polite Man.

It was told to a certain king of England that Lord Blank was his politest subject. "I will test him," said the king, and showed Lord Blank to the royal carriage, holding the door for him to enter first, which he did. "You are right," said the king, "a lesser man would have troubled me with ceremony."

When you are in trouble, people who call to sympathize are really after the particulars.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Christ.—Christ was a simple man, who had never read Homer or Caesar, or knew how to paint or carve stone. Still he is the ideal Christian.—Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, Presbyterian, New York City.

Punishment.—God punishes as the righteous parent must ever punish—for the benefit of the one punished, and for punishment that will endure until the improvement is brought about.—Rev. F. A. Bisbee, Universalist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Saloons and Churches.—The laborer who is out of a job finds the churches shut, but the saloons open, and to the poor man there sometimes seems more brotherhood in the saloon than in the church.—Rev. W. D. Bliss, Christian Socialist, Boston, Mass.

Benevolence.—When a Gould gives to society, it is but a tardy and small return for what a Gould took from society. A little less in benevolences and a little more in just dealings to society and the praise would be more deserved.—Rev. R. A. White, Universalist, Chicago, Ill.

Charity.—The charity that consists of giving a check to help the needy and knowing nothing of the life of the one helped is not Christian charity. We need more of the philanthropy taught at Calvary by him who gave himself.—Miss Jessie Ackerman, Baptist, Chicago, Ill.

Companionship.—A man is known by the company he keeps. If you go with a man who drinks, a man who steals or a man who lies, you are liable to drink and steal and lie. I might advise a man to keep good company, yet he might keep good company all his life and not be saved.—Rev. Sam Jones, evangelist.

Recreation.—Amusement is as necessary to mankind as is food, or air, or light. It tones up the individual. It cheers his wearisome road through life and lightens the monotonous toil and labors of the matter-of-fact and work-a-day world. Every one of us needs recreation, the indulging in some lightsome recreation.—Rev. Joseph Silverman, Independent, New York City.

The Fear of God.—If we would nurture civilization and moral culture, if we would keep society from anarchy and barbarism, if we would stem the tide of animal passion which is constantly striving to flow over the world, we must make God known to men. Society must be built upon that one corner-stone, the knowledge and the fear of God.—Archbishop Ireland, Catholic, St. Paul, Minn.

Spiritual Help.—Every impenitent sinner is like a disabled ship at sea, and assistance is imperative immediately, or loss is imminent and irretrievable. Every human soul has a precious cargo, and eternity alone can appreciate its priceless value. Thousands of our disabled fellow-men can never reach the celestial haven without some moral tow.—Rev. W. G. Partridge, Baptist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Pity.—There is nothing more hardening to the sensibilities than the failure to translate pity into action. Christ's pity was practical. We are told that he had compassion on the hungry multitude, and the immediate result of it was how many loaves had he. This is finely illustrative of the way in which Christ's whole nature moved at once and in unison.—Rev. George D. Baker, Presbyterian, Philadelphia, Pa.

Falsehood.—Many of the truths about God and man are suppressed. Any man who to-day attempts to proclaim the whole truth, who strives to reveal the facts as they are, is liable to be condemned. No man can, in any way, attack a wrong without being a traitor to some cherished evil in society. As a consequence of this voluntary suppression of truth, there is a gross misunderstanding of the main facts of life. Men live and walk in falsehood.—Rev. I. J. Lansing, Baptist, Boston, Mass.

Where Sound Travels.

Eighteen miles is the longest distance on record at which a man's voice has been heard. This occurred in the grand canyon off the Colorado, where a man shouting the name of Bob at one end, his voice was plainly heard at the other, which is eighteen miles away.

Lieut. Foster, on Peary's third Arctic expedition, found that he could converse with a man across the harbor of Port Bowen, a distance of 6,696 feet, or about one mile and a quarter.

Sir John Franklin said he conversed with ease at a distance of more than one mile.

Dr. Young records that at Gibraltar the human voice has been heard at a distance of ten miles.

Sound has remarkable force in water. Colladon, by experiments made in the Lake of Geneva, estimated that a bell submerged in the sea might be heard at a distance of more than sixty miles.

Franklin says he heard the striking together of two stones in the water half a mile away. Over water or a surface of ice sound is propagated with greater clearness and strength.

Dr. Hutton relates that on a quiet part of the Thames, near Chelsea, he could hear a person read distinctly at a distance of 140 feet, while away from the water the same could only be heard at 70 feet.

Persons in a balloon can hear voices from the earth a long time after they themselves are inaudible to people below.

At Long Range.

As the following is published in the Army and Navy Journal, it may be copied without offense to the military profession, no doubt.

"Father, are generals brave men?" asked Johnny.

"Yes, my son, as a rule," was the answer.

"Then why do artists always make pictures of them standing on a hill three miles away looking at the battle through an opera-glass?"

There are others, but people never find it out until they are married, and it is too late.

A DYING STATE

Two U. S. Senators and a Representative in Congress For 8,000 Votes.

Nevada, with a vote of less than what Allen county now has, was made a state in order to get its vote in Congress, in 1864. It to-day, has a smaller vote than Elkhart county alone, as shown by the following article:

"A problem is apparently taking form in the far west that looks anything but simple, and yet it will have to be solved before many years. It concerns the "State" of Nevada, and the contemplation of that "rotten borough," which possesses as much power in the United States senate as New York or Illinois, is not pleasing. It is virtually owned by the two senators, Jones and Stewart, who out of their millions can afford to pay all its expenses in order to hold seats in the senate. It is the merest shadow and mockery of a state, and yet it claims to have, and has a right to claim, an equal place in the union with the rest. What a farce!

Twenty years ago its decline began, but it has been hoped that it would recover, and that new resources would be discovered and attract population, but the expectation has been indulged in vain. Its whole history is decreasing. Here is the record of its presidential vote since it was admitted to the union in 1864:

1864—Lincoln	9,826
McClellan	6,594	—total 16,420
1868—Grant	6,480
Seymour	5,218	—total 11,698
1872—Grant	8,413
Greely	6,236	—total 14,649
1876—Hayes	10,383
Tilden	9,308	—total 19,691
1880—Garfield	8,732
Hancock	9,611	—total 18,343
1884—Blaine	7,193
Cleveland	5,578	—total 12,711

Only 8,507 votes within the borders of it 110,000 square miles of territory! Not as many as were cast in a single ward of Chicago. And yet what power they have in national legislation!

Of course the answer of Jones and Stewart to the presentation of these facts is the answer Boss Tweed once made—"What are you going to do about it?"

Nobody as yet knows what can be done about it, but it is becoming a question for serious consideration, and an answer will have to be found. Dying and dead states have no place in a living union."

A GERRYMANDER

Half the Counties of the State Kicking, but the Bosses Don't, Mind That.

The infamous apportionment bill has passed the House of Representatives, only one republican voting against it, Mr. Butler, of Steuben. And he voted against it, not so much on account of its general unfairness as for the fact that it substantially deprives Steuben county of a member of the House. Mr. Babcock, of Lagrange, was expected to vote against it, but at the last moment, when enough democrats and fair minded republicans stood ready to help him get through an amendment he had in his hand, that would have helped Lagrange and Steuben—just at that moment he got up and to the surprise of all, said he would drop his amendment and vote for the whole bill as it stood, for he felt that his party interests were of more consequence than the interests of his county. So he did vote, and then sat down and buried his face in his hands. We only hope his hands were big enough to hide his shame. After several years of assertions that they would make a "fair apportionment," when they had a chance, they are giving us the most unfair one we ever had. We do not complain so much of the arrangement that gives them a majority of the districts, for that is always done. But the great injustice is in leaving so many counties without any representative at all. We have already mentioned the case of making DeKalb and Steuben together send a member of the House. DeKalb can get that member every time, if it chooses, for in a republican joint convention, DeKalb has more delegates, and if they use this power, and nominate a DeKalb man, Steuben can't help herself and has to go without a member living within her borders. It was this that made her member, Mr. Butler, vote against it. The bill will likely pass the Senate. But Senator Nusbaum will go on for his full four years to represent the old district of Noble and DeKalb, and Senator Gilbert will also be senator for Steuben and Lagrange, for a senatorial term cannot be cut off.

Are You Thin?

Look about you! See for yourself! Who suffer most from sleeplessness, nervousness, nervous dyspepsia, neuralgia, despondency, general weakness? Who are on the edge of nervous prostration all the time? Those who are thin. Opium, chloral, bromides, headache powders, only make matters worse. Iron and bitters are only stimulants. To be cured, and cured for good, you need a fat-making food. You want new blood, rich blood; and a strong nerve tonic.

SCOTT'S EMULSION of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites is all this. It feeds the tissues, makes rich blood, and strengthens the nerves.

Book about it free for the asking.

Fifty Years Ago.

This is the stamp that the letter bore
Which carried the story far and wide,
Of certain cure for the loathsome sore
That bubbled up from the tainted tide
Of the blood below. And 'twas Ayer's name
And his sarsaparilla, that all now, know,
That was just beginning its fight of fame
With its cures of 50 years ago.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the original sarsaparilla. It has behind it a record for cures unequalled by any blood purifying compound. It is the only sarsaparilla honored by a medal at the World's Fair of 1893. Others imitate the remedy; they can't imitate the record:

50 Years of Cures.

NEW DEPARTMENT.

McKinley proposes to make a new department with a new cabinet officer, the department of "Commerce and Industry." The department is all right, except that it adds to the expense, but it seems there were not enough offices to provide for all of McKinley's friends. It would not add to the expense, if the department of agriculture should be abolished and this new department take its place. The department of agriculture has done no good so far. Agriculture will atke care of itself if let alone. But we want new markets in which to sell what we raise. Give us a department of "Foreign Commerce' with a live agent in every chief city of the world. Then "agriculture" and "industry" will take care of themselves. Give us a little more business sense and not so many ornamental offices.

WHY IS THIS, THUS

Why is it that reputable papers will invariably take their news from the most unreliable of their exchanges? Note the following from the last issue of the Angola Republican:

"Perry Fair, deputy treasurer of DeKalb county is laying at the point of death with consumption. He has made a full confession and the state does not intend to punish him for his connection with the DeKalb county robbery, says the Churubusco Truth."

Now, the Republican exchanges with all the DeKalb county papers, and has an abundant chance to get the truth. Fair is troubled with asthma and has been in poor health several years, and is still in poor health. But he has made no "full confession" as yet, and if he had, is it likely he would not be punished for a crime of this kind? The truth in the Fair and the Coffinberry matters, has been told and retold in DeKalb papers, but the lies of outside sources, seem to have secured the right of way.

THE LEGISLATURE.

There is a bill in the legislature to make the prison north, that at Michigan City, a place to confine only the worst cases, while the one at Jeffersonville, will be used for milder criminals. It also appears that the Michigan City prison has been poorly managed since the present Warden has been in charge. When the democrats had it before that it made several thousand dollars each year and paid over to the state after paying its own expenses.

The people are watching this legislature to see if they raise the salaries of officers as they seem to be trying to-day.

The old gag about paying a half a million more for building the State House, is coming up again. In fact every fraudulent claim seems coming to the front. Republicans have the power to stop these raids on the state treasury, just as the democrats did a few years ago.

On Friday the bill of Mr. Jones, the republican colored man was called up, for the third reading, but was re-committed to the committee on Education by a vote of 45 to 43, when it really required a two-thirds vote at this stage to re-commit. The speaker did not seem to care whether his ruling was proper or not, but insisted that the bill stood re-committed, and added, "When the speaker makes a ruling, it will stand whether right or wrong." Tom Reed could do more than this. It should be added that the bill was to give colored children equal school priviliges with white children. The republicans nearly all voted to re-commit the bill, which means to kill it as it will never be called up again. The democrats all favored the bill, as the votes show.

The apportionment bill has been so changed that it does not now agree with reports heretofore published in the COURIER. As it now stands it gives DeKalb county one representative and then gives one Lagrange and Steuben together or in substance only a half member each. This is as unfair to those two counties, as was the plan with which the law started out. Steuben county generally has a smaller vote than Lagrange, and when the two counties hold a joint republican convention, the delegates from Lagrange would outnumber those from steuben and could take the candidate of Lagrange every time, and thus leave Steuben out in the cold, with not a man in the legislature, at least not in the House.

This case of Steuben, shows need of a change in the state constitution, which should provide that in apportioning the state for legislative purposes, each county should first be given one representative. This would dispose of 92 out of the 100 members of the House. Then the other 8 members could be divided one to each 8 most populous counties giving no one county more than one extra member. The objection that would be urged against this is that some member would have to represent twice as many voters as other members. But this would be a small matter and would be better than the present proposed law, which would leave some counties with no member at all in the House. And the large counties are always sure of one or two senators. Take Marion county, which is given three senators, would have with its two representative, five members in the two Houses. That is enough. Allen would have a senator and two representatives and Vanderburg would have the same. It is but justice that each county, as a coporate body, should have a member in the House. And this plan would insure the people against such unfair divisions by any party.

A division on the number of voters always gives room for taking unfair advantage. Look at the proposed law. After giving Grant county, two representatives, and Miami, containing the city of Peru, only half a one, it goes on to give Grant part of another, by making a joint—representative district of five counties, Grant, Huntington, Wabash, Miami and Howard, a territory as big as the present 12th congressional district. But its vote gives a is republican member. For the same reason, the four counties of Madison Hamilton, Boone and Montgomery are made into a joint district reaching nearly across the state, coming within two counties of the Ohio line, and one county of the Illinois line. This will give our readers some idea of the great swindle contained in the new "gerrymander."

A Valuable Prescription.

Editor Morrison of Worthington, Ind. "Sun" says: "You have a valuable prescription in Electric Bitters, and I can cheerfully recommend it for constipation and sick headache, and as a general system tonic it has no equal." Mrs. Annie Stehle, 2625 Cottage Grove Ave. Chicago was all run down, could not eat nor digest food, had backache which never left her, and felt tired and weary, but six bottles of Electric Bitters restored her health and renewed her strength. JOHN DEPEW.

John DePew was born near Auburn, Ind., in 1851, being at the time of his death 51 years, two months of age. He was a great sufferer for nearly two years with the dreaded disease cancer of the stomach. At times his suffering was very great, but he bore it all with christian patience and was never known to complain. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn his early death, the youngest being but a babe, beside a host of friends and relatives. Everything was done that willing friends could do, and only a day or two before he died, it was thought he would get well, as the swelling in his feet had all left and he was resting easier than he had for months. He died so easy, with no pain—it seemed as though he was lulled upon an angel's lap into a breathless sleep. ***

BUTLER.

Charles Campbell was home from Angola Normal last Sunday.

Peter Barnhart an old and well known citizen of this township, and for the past few years of Butler, died at his home on the south side last Tuesday evening, Feb. 9, aged about 70 years. His funeral took place from the Disciple church last Thursday. About the time the procession reached the cemetery his aged wife who was confined to her bed by serious illness also passed away, and her funeral took place from the same church, and her remains were laid to rest by the side of her husband last Saturday. They leave two sons and one daughter to mourn their sudden and unusual departure. We think this is the first instance in the history of our town that a husband and wife died so nearly at the same time.

Monroe Norford has taken an equal partner in his joys and sorrows, in the person of lady from Fort Wayne. Her name has not yet been revealed.

When we get the full exposition of the thorough research now being made into the county's financial records we will perhaps know why we are head over heels in debt, and still poor.

SHE KEPT BUSY.

The Chicago Chronicle says that a delicate woman on the witness stand, being requested by a lawyer to "please state to the court exactly what you did between 8 and 9 o'clock on Wednesday morning," after a moment's reflection, replied: "Well, I washed my two children and got them ready for school and sewed a button on Johnny's coat and mended a rent in Nellie's dress. Then I tidied up my sitting room and made two beds and watered my house plants and glanced over the morning paper. Then I dusted my parlor and set things to rights in it, and washed some lamp chimneys and combed my baby's hair and sewed a button on one of her little shoes; and then I swept out my front entry and brushed and put away the children's Sunday clothes, and wrote a note to Johnny's teacher, asking her to excuse him for not being at school on Friday. Then I fed my canary bird and gave the groceryman an order and swept off the back porch, and then I sat down and rested for a few minutes before the clock struck 9. That's all." All said the dazed lawyer. "Excuse me judge; I must get my breath before I call the next witness."

COUNTY MATTERS.

Thursday's Daily.

We had hoped and believed that the county' stroubles with its officials had already reached the worst stage. But it seems they had not. There has all the time been rumors, very naturally connecting the offices of auditor and treasurer with the irregularities so far disclosed. But all the investigations have been conducted quietly and much of it in secret, and nothing but uncertain rumors could reach the public. It is for this uncertainty that the COURIER has hesitated to make any statements further than what it has already. And even now it cannot give any details. And those in the investigation, have not apparently, felt free to give any definite statements. However, it appears from developments this week that Auditor Borst and ex-Treasurer Sawvel are mixed up in the matter, and even ex-Surveyor Hook, it is said has had his attention called to irregular transactions he cannot satisfactorily explain. And Frank Dills who assisted Mr Borst, as deputy-auditor under Mr. Coffinberry, is connected with these rumors that go out of the court house. As already said, the details have not been given. We have not learned how much is laid at the door of Mr. Borst, or Mr. Sawvel, though it appears they are the deepest involved. Whether their transactions are criminal we cannot say, in the absence of definite knowledge, but it looks as if it would be dificult for them to escape punishment. We are told they have offered to replace the money value of the crooked work charged to them, and if so, we presume it will be accepted. These men stood high in the community and in the opinion of the writer, and it is with great regret that we chronicle their shortcomings. We hope they may be able to clear themselves, but the outlook for it is very discouraging. And if guilty, they should be punished.

CLOSE CALL.

As Wm Walsworth was coming into town Thursday, he had a hair raising experience at the point where the wagon road crosses the Wabash track, about a mile east of town. He was on a load of corn fodder that he had got on the farm and was bringing home. As he neared the crossing he thought of the train, and realized it must be about noon when the west bound 12:09 train would be along, and at that point going full speed. But he saw nothing of it, and dismissed it from his mind. But as one gets nearer the crossing it is not as easy to see the track to the east and the short time it took him to go this little distance, it seems, gave the train time to reach the wagon crossing, for just as he jolted of over the track, and the last wheels had cleared the track, the train whizzed by. It was not a question of minutes but of seconds, for his wagon was only a few feet from the rails. A few seconds slower. and he and his wagon would have been torn to pieces.

BRIDGE LETTING.

Thursday's Daily.

Yesterday was the day the Commissioners met to receive bids for bridges. And it was lively times. There were twenty-nine bids, in all, though only six iron bridges are to be made and two with stone abutments. Nothing was decided yesterday as it took some time to examine the various bids. This forenoon, the stone work of the two bridges, was let. Mr. Rupel, who has done so much stone work in the county was the successful bidder on these. They are for the bridge just west of the Rakestraw school house two miles west of town, and the bridge near Orrin Clark's, west of Altona.

Friday's Daily.

—Today we find the commissioners have settled all their bridge letting contracts. The names of the successful competitors and the bridge and its cost, are given below:

The Iron Substructure Co. of Columbus, Ohio gets the bridge at the Rakestraw farm, and the one at Orrin Clark's near, Altona, both in Keyser township. Both of iron and the total cost of the two is $1277.50. These are the two bridges for which Mr. Rupel makes the stone abutments.

The Massillon Bridge Co. gets bridge No. 7, in Keyser, on the road extending west on Seventh street of Auburn, near Hathaway's, for $787,23. Also, No. 8 in Wilmington, the one on the Newville road where two bridges are now. This will take the place of the two now in use, and cost $693.88. Both these bids include both the bridge and the substructure, or abutments. The bridges are to be of iron and the substructure is to be what is called "stone backing," that is there will be face and wings of stone properly supported.

G. W. Werntz, of Auburn Junction, gets No. 7 in Wilmington, 35-foot span span for $500. No. 9 in Wilmington 30-foot span, for $428.59. He is to build iron bridges, with wood abutments of timber properly supported

The Board had a big job on their hands, but had the good judgment to get Jay VanAuken to help them as he is not only an expert in figures, but a good engineer as well. There were 30 bidders and 100 different bids. And each bid, whether for stone or for the iron and steel work of the bridges had many different points to be considered. The big sheet on which these different conditions of the 100 bids is drawn out in order, is a bewildering thing for a green hand to took at. But the Board and Mr. VanAuken put in rapid work yesterday, and got it all clear. Our own impression is. they have made good bargains on these six bridges, for the different companies were bidding at the bottom notch.

As noted yesterday, Mr. Rupel got both jobs of stone work. Those who bid against him for this were A. Wheelock, Lyman Lockwood, Mr. Kruse, and Clemmer & Johnson.

As soon, this morning, as they had cleaned up this bridge business, the commissioners and County Attorney J. H. Rose, sat down at once to a feast represented by piles of county orders, which they are giving the finishing touches. If anyone thinks this is an easy or a pleasant task he will change his mind when he gets at the details, which will be at the proper time.

ELECTRIC BITTERS.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any person, but perhaps more generally needed in the Spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is orpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of this medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, Indigestion Constipation, Dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store.

THE JUSTICE COURT

A Sedate Man From Sedan Accused of Hugging the Girls, not Wisely, but too Well.

Thursday's Daily.

It is a slow week that does not bring some work into our justice courts here in Auburn. This week has it sensation in 'Squire Walter's court. It is a case from Sedan. Oliver Wheaton a middle aged man, whose home is the former Joe Jones place just north of the village, figures as defendant in what his accusers will try to make a sensational matter. It appears, that Wheaton, who has heretefore borne a good reputation and in fact is a deacon in the Lutheran church there had in some way incurred the enmity of a family named Freece. But this was little thought of, as the Freeses have not made themselves so very popular at any time. But about three weeks ago, Mr. Wheaton, learning that a member of his church John Likens was sick, felt it his duty as a Christian and an officer of the church, to go and see if any assistance was needed. While at Likens, the alleged trouble occurred. Two girls were there helping to do the housework. One was a Freese girl, since married, and the other girl named Stout. Both girls were peeling potatoes, and having a lot of fun, and finally in some way they got Mr. Wheaton mixed up in it. After they had thrown peelings at him for a time, Wheaton who is of a jolly disposition, went for them at a pretty lively rate, and they had quite a scuffle, all in fun however. But a few days later the Freese people and their friends began to circulate stories, reflecting on Wheaton and the way he had treated the girls. They claimed Wheaton had made himself altogether too familiar and had even hugged the girls "with malice aforethought." Wheaton was astonished when he heard of the charge and Mrs. Wheaton nearly broke her heart over it. But the talk kept getting worse, and Wheaton offered to apologize to the extent, that he had been too fast in his scuffle with the girls, but all would not do. And now the aggrieved people bring suit calling it "assault and battery," and it is going on to-day before Justice Walter. Mr. Welsheimer as proecutor is for the state, and W. H. Leas of Waterloo is attorney for Mr. Wheaton. It bids fair to be a lively trial.

—LATER:—A change of venue was taken to Walborn's court and the case will be heard tomorrow.

Friday's Daily.

The trial of Mr. Wheaton, as spoken of in yesterday's DAILY, was brought on again this morning before 'Squire Walborn, and then came some delay as to preliminary matters. It was finally decided to have a jury and this put the case off till this afternoon, when business began. So we cannot give results to-day.

Spring Clothing,

But we don't think so. We are preparing for a very large Clothing Business the this Coming Season. Already the new suits are beginning to arrive. To say they are pretty doesn't express it. Not like last spring, mostly everything black, but just the contrary, neat, bright and clean, checks and plaids, in all imaginable shades of Brown Mode and Tan.

It might not be amiss to mention right here that the Prices Are Even Lower Than Last Year.

Perhaps our method of buying has much to do with this happy fact. Most of these goods have been bought

Spot Cash, No discount, No Dating and No Traveling Salesman.

BIG FIRE LOSS.

A Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Elevator at Toledo Destroyed.

One of the most expensive fires that has visited Toledo, Ohio, in the past two years was the burning of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway elevator "A." As the building is located on the river front, the fire department could do nothing but let it burn and endeavor to save the surrounding property. According to the best figures obtainable, 280,000 bushels of wheat were stored in the elevator and about sixty car loads which were unloading, making 328,000 bushels. The loss on the elevator and grain will aggregate $355,000. The grain was fully insured, while the elevator was insured for 75 per cent. of its value. Spontaneous combustion is given as the cause of the fire. There are thirty cars burning on the tracks, making an extra loss of $30,000.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

Lit the Gasoline Lamp and a Terrible Explosion Followed.

The family of Jacob Cielez, of No. 663 Canal street, Cleveland, Ohio, was almost completely wiped out of existence the other morning by a holocaust of flames. Eight persons were burned and five will probably die. Jacob and Mary Cielez, husband and wife, were fatally burned and their four children, who are all under six years of age, received severe burns. Albert Jerno and Joseph Jerga, boarders, were also badly burned.

Cielez arose about 5 o'clock to light the fire and mistook the gasoline lamp for the kerosene lamp. The result was a terrific explosion when he applied the match. The greatest difficulty was experienced in getting the family out of bed and into the yard. All of them are at the hospital. The father and mother and three children are dying.

Dug Their Own Graves.

Memphis special: A report has reached here of the lynching of two negroes near Webb City, a remote village near Greenville, Miss., a week ago. The negroes attacked the house of a white man and burned it to the ground. The inmates of the house escaped the flames and carried with them a trunk containing $800. The negroes seized the trunk and made way with it. They were soon afterward captured by a posse and ordered to dig their own graves. After completing the gruesome work the negroes were lynched. The matter has been kept very quiet and details are meager, no names being obtainable.

A Stag Fishing Party.

President Cleveland and Commodore E. C. Benedict are going fishing after March 4. The Commodore's fine steam yacht Oneida is to be fitted out for a cruise in Southern waters. The date of sailing will be about March 15. Florida will be visited and some of the West India islands may be touched. Pompano, tarpon, bonitas and Spanish mackerel are to be the prey. It will be a stag party on the Oneida. During the absence of Mr. Cleveland his wife and three daughters will be the guests of Mrs. Benedict at Greenwich, Conn.

Hannah Will Not Be in the Cabinet.

It is definitely settled that M. A. Hanna will not go into McKinley's Cabinet. Hanna announced that he had determined to remain in Ohio. He will contest in the Legislature next winter for the full term in the United States Senate.

Printer Hanged.

Daniel McCarthy, a printing house employe, was hanged at Chicago for the murder of his wife May 12, 1896. The murder was committed in a fit of jealousy. He received religious consolation, and was calm on the scaffold.

Burned to Death in Fun.

At St. Clairsville, Ohio, Howard Smith, convicted of manslaughter several months since, poured oil on the clothing of Henry Sherwood, a mere boy, and then set fire to him. Sherwood died. The act was intended as a joke.

Diamond Robber Arrested.

Navaro Andrea, one of the three Italians wanted by the New Orleans police for a $10,000 diamond robbery, and for whose arrest a reward of $2,000 was offered, was arrested in Chicago recently.

Lost Her Home and Babes.

At Iron River, Mich., Mrs. Thomas Broswoski locked her two children in the house and went down-town. During her absence the house caught fire and burned, together with both children.

Killed Over a Nickel.

In a quarrel at Carney Creek, Tenn., over a nickel, Marsh Winston killed John Wilson. Both are prominent men. Wilson, before he fell, wounded Winston terribly with shot.

Cuban Army Routed.

A special from Havana, via Key West, Fla., says: If the official reports are correct, the insurgent army under General Maximo Gomez has been divided into small corps and Gomez himself is in full retreat before the continued advance of Captain General Weyler.

Father and Son Killed.

Samuel Spencer, Sr., aged 85, and Samuel Spencer, Jr., aged 40, father and son, were killed at Wyalusing, Pa. They were walking on the Lehigh Valley Railroad track and were struck by an express train.

WESTERN.

Thirteen million square feet of American lumber was imported into China last year, mostly from Washington and Oregon.

Deputy Sheriff Bouggett, of Williams, A. T., captured James Parker, the Nelson train robber, twenty miles north of Peach Springs, Monday afternoon. When overtaken Parker was wading in the middle of Diamond Creek and offered no resistance. The bandit was completely worn out. His feet had been frozen and were badly blistered. He said he had been without food for fifty hours. The penalty for train robbery in Arizona is death.

The will of Albert M. Billings, who died at Chicago Feb. 7, was admitted to probate. The estate in Illinois is valued at $2,300,000, which is a smaller amount than Mr. Billings was popularly supposed to be worth. His estate, however, it is said, will figure up nearly $5,000,000, as he had large interests in New York, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota. Besides this, during his lifetime, Mr. Billings gave his son, C. K. G. Billings, large amounts of money to help him in business.

Cleveland, O., dispatch: There is now being formed a combination which may prove a worthy foe of the Carnegie-Rockefeller deal. As soon as the last-named combination was announced the Minnesota Iron Company, anticipating ore troubles, began looking about for some large consumer to join interests with. This consumer it has found in the Illinois Steel Company, which has not been a member of the steel rail pool. The Minnesota company owns immense tracts of ore land in the Mesaba range, and the Illinois Steel Company is a worthy competitor of Carnegie. Cleveland iron ore men declare that the agreement between these two immense interests has already been reached.

Dr. Arthur Duestrow, the St. Louis millionaire, was hanged at Union, Mo., in the coutryard of the county jail Tuesday. A few hours before the execution took place Duestrow threw off the mask of insanity, sobbed like a woman and admitted that he killed his wife and child. At Clayton, a suburb of St. Louis, Peter, better known as "Cottonhead" Schmidt, and Sam Foster, colored, were hanged. Peter Schmidt, who is only 16 years old, was swung off first. He died with a sullen look on his face and without any sign of repentence. Sam Foster, the big brutal negro who followed him to death fifteen minutes later, was so weak that he almost had to be carried to the scaffold. His lips quivered and his eyes filled with tears as the black cap was drawn over his head. Both died almost instantly. The two men, or rather boys, held up Bertram E. Atwater, a young Chicago artist, at Webster Groves, a suburb of St. Louis, the night of Jan. 23, 1896. Mr. Atwater, who was on his way to pay a visit to his fiance, resisted and was shot dead within a stone's throw of the door of her house. John Schmidt, who has also been convicted of complicity in the murder, has been sentenced to hang March 18. He is a cousin of Peter Schmidt, who was hanged.

A special train from Chicago, chartered by Henry J. Mayham, a Denver investment broker, reached Denver at 3:52 Tuesday morning, having run 1,026 miles in 18 hours and 52 minutes. This journey goes into history as the greatest railroad feat ever accomplished. The best previous railroad long-distance record was 19 hours and 57 minutes for 964 miles from New York to Chicago. Mr. Mayham, who left New York Sunday, chartered a special train at Chicago in order to reach the bedside of his dying son, William B. Mayham, as quickly as possible. Every resource of the Burlington system was brought into play and over two hours were clipped off from the best running time that was thought to be possible. On straight stretches of track the train covered more than sixty miles an hour. The mountain climb from Akron, Colo., to Denver, 118 miles, was made in 124 minutes, the train running an even mile a minute most of the distance. No special train bearing high officials of the nation ever attracted more careful attention from the officers of the railway. Telegrams from all parts of the United States inquired concerning the progress of the train and the possibility of Mr. Mayham reaching the side of his son in time at least to grasp his hand before he was beckoned across the dark river. But in spite of the Burlington's splendid record Mr. Mayham arrived in Denver too late to see his son alive. The young man died shortly after midnight.

Two thousand tanners and curriers, embracing all the employes in the big Chicago leather and hide establishments, were confronted by barred doors when they appeared for work Wednesday morning. All companies united in declaring a reduction of from 10 to 20 per cent in the wages of their employes and likewise raising the hours from eight to ten as an accepted day's labor. The move was precipitated by the strike at W. N. Eisendrath & Co.'s. Following are the principal establishments from which employes were locked out: Grey, Clark & Engle, 500 employes; Walker-Oakley Company, 400 employes; Lambeau Leather Company, two establishments, 600 employes; W. N. Eisendrath & Co., 500 employes. Loescher & Co. also promised the Leather Manufacturers' Association that it would join in the lockout. Other companies which are expected to ally themselves to the movement on the ground of self-protection include Gutman & Co., Eagle Tanning Works, Keck, Mosser & Co. and J. M. Weil. The lockout was premeditated, but if original plans had been adhered to the climax would not have been reached until next spring. Ever since the eight-hour schedule was enforced by the labor unions the big tanners of Chicago have been laboring, they claim, against discrimination in other cities. In Milwaukee, for example, all tanneries work their men ten hours a day and at lower wages than Chicago tanners receive. This has worked a serious injury on the Chicago tanners, it is asserted, and weakened their competitive strength materially. All companies enrolled on the membership book of the Leather Manufacturers' Association were parties to this agreement. The fact that the contemplated move leaked out is the explanation for the fight at present.

SOUTHERN.

The Texas Senate has passed the fellow-servant bill, holding railroads responsible for acts of their employes.

The town of Malvern, Ark., which was almost wiped out by fire last July, was visited by a fire Friday which destroyed the rebuilt business portion. The loss will aggregate $100,000.

Gilbert Brock was killed at Pineville, Ky., by his son Willis. The father objected to Willis' proposed marriage. The son finally brained his father with an ax and then told his mother about the deed.

G. L. Merris, who was shot by Squire Irvin Rigg at Deep Water, W. Va., died. Rigg's wife was visiting a neighbor with others, including Merris, when Rigg entered and fired without warning or provocation.

The tollgate raiders blew up the tollgate on the Lawrenceburg pike, near Frankfort, Ky., with dynamite. The previous night a mob wrecked all of the six tollgates on the Kinney turnpike entering Vanceburg.

Judge J. D. Clark, in the United States Court at Chattanooga, Tenn., in the case of Russell A. Alger vs. the estate of John F. Anderson to recover money paid for property in Franklin County in Tennessee, decided in favor of complainant Alger and ordered defendant to repay to said Alger the entire amount paid by him on said purchase, with interest from date of payment. The amount involved is $103,000, with interest for seven years.

FOREIGN.

Sir Alfred Milner has been appointed Governor of Cape Colony, to succeed Lord Rosemead, better known as Sir Hercules Robinson, who resigned on account of ill health.

The London Daily Telegraph says that an American tourist, Richard Green, while visiting his sister at Leamington, was discovered unconscious in the bedroom which he was occupying Saturday. He died an hour afterward. It is supposed the affair was an accident due to the escape of gas.

The Spanish minister of the colonies, replying to a Catalonian deputy, said that no negotiations are proceeding with a view to establishing a commercial treaty between the United States and Spain, but only to frame a regime applied to Cuba whereby the United States would be placed on the most-favored-nation basis, similar to the concession soon to be accorded to Japan.

The council of Turkish ministers, as a result of its all-day session at the Yildiz Kiosk at Constantinople, has decided to leave the pacification of Crete to the powers. This is regarded as a wise decision in the face of a most complicated situation in Crete, where the flags of Russia, France, Great Britain, Italy and Austria are flying alongside the Turkish standard, while Greece is seemingly defying the powers.

The boundary dispute between Chili and Argentina relating to the line of demarcation over the Andes has reached an important point. For the first time since the discussion of the question began, it looks as if both sides were willing to yield and leave the decision wholly to the arbiter chosen. The arbiter is Queen Victoria. It is hoped that where commissioners and sub-commissioners have failed to agree she will find a basis of amicable settlement.

Major Luis Lorau captured a Spanish convoy train near Artemisa Province, Pinar del Rio, Cuba, and fifty prisoners without the loss of a man. Hearing that the train was on the way he mined the roadbed, and as the train came up exploded the mine, blowing up the engine and the armored car and three passenger cars. As the wrecked train rolled down the embankment his troops poured in a hot fire and the affrighted Spanish soldiers immediately hung out the white flag. Sixteen were killed in the wreck, including the engineer and fireman, and two Spanish officers. The Spanish troops were so demoralized that they did not fire a dozen shots at the Cubans. Among the prisoners was the notorious guerrilla, Capt. Mazaretto, who is accused of murdering more than 100 pacificos in that province. As soon as Lorans' men saw him they seized him, and, despite their officers' commands, literally hacked him to pieces, uttering the most appalling yells at each stroke of their machetes. The other prisoners were released and sent to Artemisa. In the train were needed provisions and some arms.

Advices from Canea, Island of Crete, say: The Christians occupied the heights surrounding the town Sunday morning, and began to bombard Canea. As soon as the firing commenced Prince George Berovitch, governor of Crete, with thirty recently enrolled gendarmes, boarded the Russian man-of-war. The Greek consul embarked on board another vessel. The Turks from the fortress replied to the fire of the Christians. It is reported that the fighting was attended with bloodshed. The military governor has been removed from his post. The foreign consuls embarked on board the various vessels lying off the town of Canea. A Constantinople dispatch says: A Greek warship Saturday fired on a Turkish vessel conveying soldiers from Candia to Canea. As a result of Friday's occurrence the ambassadors decided to recommend to their respective governments that the powers occupy Canea, Retimo and Candia for the purpose of affording protection to the Mussulmans. The London Times in an editorial warns Greece to the effect that that country must not think that it can count on the support of the powers to wage war. With her limited diability, her dependence on the powers makes it necessary for her to follow their advice.

IN GENERAL.

The machine bolt trust is reported to have gone to pieces.

President Cleveland, it is reported, will form a law partnership at New York with Secretary of State Uhl and Edwin F. Uhl, at present minister to Germany.

Captain Harkins of the schooner Una, just arrived at San Francisco from Panama, may find himself in a somewhat serious predicament. His vessel has no papers of any description to present to the custom house. Register, crew list and other documents are all missing, and the Una, in a sense, is outlawed by maritime usages. It appears that the Una loaded cedar logs at Panama. Part cash was paid for the cargo, and the balance, although cabled for to San Francisco, had not arrived when the Una was loaded and ready to sail. The captain of the port at Panama told Captain Harkins that if the money due was not paid immediately the vessel would be seized and he placed in jail. United States Consul General Vifquain was seen by the captain, and, as no clearance from the Colombian customs was in evidence, informed the Una's skipper that he could not deliver up the vessel's papers, and advised him to pay the money due and settle matters. According to Harkins, Consul General Vifquain advised him to "clear out." This counsel he obeyed. Consul General Vifquain has forwarded the Una's register and other documents to Washington, together with his report of the case, so that any decision in the matter will rest with the Federal authorities.

WILL MARK AN EPOCH

LAVISH PLANS CONTEMPLATED FOR THE INAUGURATION.

In Point of Brilliancy and Attractiveness the Festivities Incident to McKinley's Inaugural Will Eclipse Anything of Former Years.

To Cost a Vast Sum.

Washington correspondence:

The arrangements for the inauguration of President-elect McKinley are nearing completion, and the indications are that in point of brilliancy and attractiveness, the ceremonies, the decorations and the festivities incident to inauguration week will be more lavish than those of former years.

In the decorations of the ball room finer results are expected than ever before. All spectacular effects will be avoided and a more artistic and harmonious arrangement of flowers, lights and bunting will be secured. About $13,000 will be spent by the inaugural committee in decorating the main ball room and the private rooms set apart for the use of the presidential and vice-presidential parties.

The great height of the court of the pension building, where the ball will be held, will be overcome by bunting festooned from the center from each of the three divisions of the court at the top of the second gallery. The bare walls everywhere and all of the smaller pillars will be covered with bunting as a background for the flowers and greens which will be prominent features of the decorations. The bunting and thousands of tiny electric fairy lamps will be used principally to bring out in greater relief the floral designs.

The President and Vice-President, with their families, will attend the ball and will be in charge of a reception committee, of which Major General Nelson A. Miles is the chairman. The cost of tickets to the ball has been fixed at $5 for each person and $1 extra if supper is desired. In answer to many inquiries received at headquarters it may be stated that no invitations to the ball are necessary to secure tickets, and none are issued except to foreign ministers. Tickets are now on sale and may be had by anyone at the price named.

The promenade concert will consist of six selections and the dance program contains twenty-three numbers. The ball will be held on Thursday night, and in addition a series of five inaugural grand concerts will be given in the ball room on the following Friday and Saturday. The ball decoration will remain in place.

The first concert will be given at 10:30 o'clock Friday morning in honor of the United States army, represented by Gen. Miles and staff. At this concert the Republican Glee Club of Columbus, Ohio, will sing a number of patriotic airs. At 2 o'clock on Friday afternoon a concert will be given in honor of the United States navy, represented by Rear Admirals Walker and Ramsey, and at night the concert will be given in honor of the States of the Union, represented by the Governors of the States and their staffs. The concert Saturday afternoon will be in honor of Congress, represented by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House. The last concert, Saturday night, will be in honor of the people of the United States and will consist of music by the Twenty-second Regiment Band and a chorus of 500 voices. Admission to each concert will be 50 cents.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Pennsylvania National Guard finds it impossible to attend the inauguration, the probabilities are that the parade will be very large. Gen. Horace Porter of New York, with the members of his staff, is busy with the details of arranging the divisions. The parade will be organized in two grand divisions, one civic and the other military. It is estimated that there will be from 40,000 to 50,000 in the parade, and in order to move so vast an army in the space of time allowed they will be so formed that they can be marched past a given point at the rate of 12,000 an hour.

The decorations of the city promise to be unusually attractive. The reviewing stands for the first time will be decorated by the inaugural committee, and will be in accordance with a general design furnished by the floral exchange of Philadelphia. The President's reviewing stand will be exceptionally fine, the design for it having been selected from a large number received in answer to an offer of a prize for the best. Col. Wright of the public comfort committee reports that the applications for quarters are rapidly increasing, and every indication points to a large crowd. Nevertheless, Col. Wright says there are good accommodations for all who may come, and at reasonable rates.

M'KINLEY'S PRIVATE SECRETARY

Editor John Addison Porter to Have This Important Position.

John Addison Porter, who is to be Mr. McKinley's private secretary, is the editor of the Hartford (Conn.) Post. He is about 40 years of age, and was born in New Haven. He was the candidate of the young Republicans of Connecticut for Governor last fall, but was defeated in the convention. He led the fight for McKinley in the State, and it was owing to his efforts that the Reed men failed to secure the delegation to the national convention.

JOHN A. PORTER.

Telegraphic Brevities.

Dr. Bourgoin, a famous opponent of the theories promulgated by Dr. Pasteur, is dead at Paris. He was a member of the Chamber of Deputies.

John E. Northrope, treasurer of Comstock, Cheney & Co., probably the largest piano key manufacturers in the United States, is dead at Essex, Conn., aged 60 years.

Owing to differences between the McBeth Glass Company and its employes 100 men went on a strike at Elwood, Ind. The men claim that the glass has been so bad for several weeks that they were greatly hampered.

Charles Drinkwater, secretary of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was held up by footpads on Sherbrooke street, the most fashionable street in Montreal, and robbed of his watch and money. He was struck across the head and badly injured by a piece of lead pipe.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Hideous Joke of Etna Green Youths—Banker Evans and His Confederate Convicted of Swindling—Bad Man Meets His Death in Ohio.

Mangle a Man Just for Fun.

A few young men of Etna Green, a small town five miles east of Bourbon, have been amusing themselves lately with toys made by fastening a piece of gas pipe between hinged boards. The pipe is filled with powder, and when the hinge closes the explosive is fired. The other day John and James Elwood and Eli Ames went to the blacksmith shop of Oscar Keller, where Bruce Dean was shoeing a horse. One of the men struck him with one of these toys. It exploded, and Dean's body was mangled so that he will die. Elwood's arm was badly shattered. Several others sustained serious injuries. Dean's relatives will sue for heavy damages.

Firebug Confesses His Crime.

Trustee J. K. Henby, of Greenfield, received rather a remarkable letter. In it a man confesses to having been necessory to burning a school house twenty-four years ago. The letter, however, speaks for itself: "Dear Sir—You will doubtless be surprised to learn of this, but my conscience won't let me keep still any longer. In 1873 I began teaching in an old school house on the road west of Captain Ogg's. The school was very unpleasant to me and I was accessory to its buraing. I now confess it. I think the other party is dead. I am a poor man, but could probably do a little, some time this year, or whatever you say. It must be settled. I cannot stand it. I thought God had forgiven me, but in the last few days learned that confession is necessary to forgiveness. When I can do something I would like it to go for the benefit of that neighborhood; it might benefit some of the children of those I wronged. Please answer this. Yours for the right as God gives me to see it and to whom I must answer at the judgment.—N. D. Knight." The people have built and worn out one or two good school houses since that time, and the district now has a fine brick school house.

Two Prominent Men Sentenced.

After being out twenty-four hours, the jury in the Crum-Evans-Haines case at Marion returned a verdict finding the defendants guilty. John Evans was sentenced to five years in the penitentiary and fined $1,000. Crum was given three years and fined $50. The case has attracted much attention. Evans, a Jonesboro banker, and Crum fleeced Alfred Haines out of $1,000 last September in a green goods game. The case was bitterly contested. The defendants were prominent and had many friends to help them.

Roberts, the Outlaw, Killed.

Relatives of Charles Roberts, of Parke County, probably the most noted outlaw that ever plied his trade in western Indiana and eastern Illinois, have learned that he was killed at Celina, O., by a farmer whom he was trying to rob. Roberts was going under an assumed name. In past years rewards were frequently offered for him, and he had several pitched battles with the officers, being shot two or three times. He was known to have committed one murder and was suspected of others.

All Over the State.

J. D. Tucker, a Blackford County farmer, was found dangling at the end of a rope in a corn crib.

Andrew and George Volke, with two young women, left Wanatah to go to a dance in the country. They were run down by a Fort Wayne train. Both men were instantly killed, the women escaping unhurt.

William Howard, of Indianapolis, filed a $500,000 damage suit against the State of Indiana. The complaint sets out that Howard lost money on the State House, which contract he assumed as bondsman for the contractors, and that losses resulted by changes made by the architect. A detailed list of the losses was filed with the suit. The building was begun in 1879.

Alonzo Nichols, aged 21 years, residing at Northfield, shot and fatally injured himself. For several months Nichols had been paying attention to Miss Elsie Neese of Whitestown. A month ago Miss Neese refused to allow him to continue his visits. Nichols brooded over this and became despondent. Sunday night Nichols went to the church, and at the close of the services asked to escort Miss Neese to her home, but was rejected. He then followed her home, and as she stepped into the door he drew a revolver and shot himself in the abdomen. Miss Neese is prostrated over the affair.

Morgan Chandler, a wealthy banker of Greenfield, executed his will, dividing his large estate among his nearest relations. Among them was his niece, Eliza Burton, a widow, to whom he bequeathed $10,000. But if the testator survived the niece the bequest was to revert to the other legatees named in the will. Mrs. Burton supported her children by taking in washing and sewing, but recently she was taken ill, and at about the same time the wealthy uncle was also sick. Both grew constantly worse. At times Mrs. Burton seemed to be breathing her last, but stimulants were administered, and she revived temporarily—long enough to inquire as to the condition of her rich relative, when she would return to a comatose state. This continued thirty-six hours, and all hopes of prolonging her life longer were virtually abandoned, when a message came that Morgan Chandler was dead. Mrs. Burton had baffled death long enough to secure a fortune for her children. She asked that they be brought to the bedside, and, with a word of blessing, she closed her eyes and passed away. Six weeks ago Olney Scott, Frank Unger, Clarence Cramer and Robert Blair were arrested at Eaton on the charge of robbery. Blair made a confession, taking all the blame upon himself and completely exonerating the other three men. He was given three years in State's prison.

George Hamm, the Greens Fork stock dealer, is still missing from his home. It is the general opinion that he has gone for good. Mrs. Miles, living at Dodridge Chapel, has also disappeared, and is believed to be with him. Some months ago the two disappeared and were arrested together in St. Louis.

Thirty years ago Philip Brough of New Carlisle was hit in the breast by a flying link from a logging chain which had broken close beside him. The link entered his left lung, making a great gash, and the doctors who attended him were unable to extract it. He had been sickly ever since and died Monday.

A man named Von Berg, hailing from Boston, Mass., was arrested at Indianapolis for obtaining goods under false pretenses. By representing that he represented Deboney & Co. of Boston he managed to secure diamonds, clothing, furniture, etc., to a large amount. WORK OF CONGRESS.

THE WEEK'S DOINGS IN SENATE AND HOUSE.

A Comprehensive Digest of the Proceedings in the Legislative Chambers at Washington—Matters that Concern the People.

Lawmakers at Labor.

The feature of Friday's discussion of the Anglo-American arbitration treaty by the Senate was the general effort to reach a basis of agreement whereby the treaty could be disposed of and other business taken up. There were innumerable short speeches during the day, but the principal addresses on the merits of the treaty were made by Senators Daniel, Stewart, Hoar, Lodge and Chandler. The proposition advanced Thursday by Senator Turpie that any negotiation under the treaty would under its terms necessarily be submitted to the Senate just as would any original treaty, formed the basis of Friday's proceedings. It was generally conceded by all those who spoke that if there could be any assurance that this interpretation would be placed on the treaty if accepted there would be no special opposition to its ratification. Senator Turpie contended that no other position was possible in view of the indisputable fact that the Senate was a part of the treatymaking power of the United States. Senator Daniel, however, took an opposite view, as did Senator Chandler and most of the other Senators who spoke. During the debate on the postal appropriation bill, which was passed by the House, Congressman Hugh Belknap, of Chicago, made a speech in favor of retaining the marine postal service at Detroit. Congressman Belknap said that the vesselmen of the great lakes would never consent to such a change. They are greatly benefited by the present service at Detroit. Several other members made speeches in favor of the present arrangements, and it was decided by the House to continue them during the coming year. The perennial fight was made to strike out the appropriation of $196,000 for special mail facilities from Boston to New Orleans, but it was defeated, 46 to 107. The bill as passed carries $95,435,714.

General debate on the sundry civil bill closed Saturday in the House. The bill was used as a basis for an attack by the Democrats on the vast appropriations made by this Congress, which Mr. Sayers and Mr. Dockery estimated would aggregate $1,045,000,000. Once the gate was opened, the debate naturally drifted into politics. The relative merits of the McKinley and Wilson bills as revenue producers were attacked and defended. The income tax decision and Justice Shiras' change of position came in for a share of attention, and Mr. De Armond (Mo.) concluded the day with a brilliant plea for struggling Cuba, which won from the House shouts of approval. The Senate did nothing of importance.

The sundry civil appropriation bill, carrying $50,644,743, was passed by the House Monday just as it came from the committee. The main opposition was directed against the river and harbor item in the bill. Quite a number of other bills were passed of more or less importance, among them the Senate bills appropriating $250,000 for closing the crevasse at Pass a l'Outre on the Mississippi, and to equip the National Guard with uniform Springfield rifles, 45-caliber, and the Senate resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transport the contributions of the Pacific coast States to the famine sufferers of India. The report in the contested election case of Benoit against Boatner from Louisiana, confirming the latter's title to his seat, was unanimously adopted. The conference report on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill was adopted and the agricultural bill was sent to conference. Owing to the brief time of this session yet remaining, extra night sessions were decided upon, for the consideration of private pension bills, of which many hundred still remain on the calendar. The Senate was in executive session most of the day. Some progress was made on the bankruptcy bill.

In the Senate Tuesday Mr. Chandler delivered a carefully prepared speech in advocacy of bimetallism. It was an argument against a single standard of either gold or silver, and a warning against a policy of monometallism. Nothing else of importance was done. For the first time this session the House declined to override a pension veto submitted to it for action. The bill was that to pension Nancy G. Allabach, the widow of Peter H. Allabach, of the One Hundred and Thirty-first Pennsylvania volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month. The House sustained the veto by 115 to 79, the requisite two-thirds not voting for the bill.

The immigration bill is now in the hands of the President, the last legislative step having been taken in the Senate Wednesday by an agreement to the conference report on the bill. Strong opposition was made to the report, but on the final vote the friends of the measure rallied a small majority, the vote being: Yeas, 34; nays, 31. The bill as passed extends the immigration restrictions against "All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who cannot read and write the English language or some other language; but a person not so able to read and write who is over 50 years of age and is the parent or grandparent of a qualified immigrant over 21 years of age and capable of supporting such parent or grandparent may accompany such immigrant or such a parent or grandparent may be sent for and come to join the family of a child or grandchild over 21 years of age, similarly qualified and capable, and a wife or minor child not so able to read and write may accompany or be sent for and come to join the husband or parent similarly qualified and capable."

The Senate adjourned at 6:30 Thursday night, after spending six hours in executive session devoted to the consideration of the nomination of C. F. Amidon to be district judge of North Dakota, and of the Anglo-American arbitration treaty. Mr. Vilas has secured the passage by the Senate of the Senate bill "to extend the use of the mail service." It provides for using a patent postal card and envelope, with coupons attached. The Postmaster General is authorized to suspend the system if it proves unsatisfactory on a test. The House, by a vote of 197 to 91, reversed the finding of a majority of the elections committee and decided the contested election case of N. T. Hopkins vs. J. M. Kendall from the tenth Kentucky district in favor of the Republican contestant. Eleven Republicans and three Populists voted with the Democrats against unseating Kendall.

THE INDIANA SOLONS

No final action was taken Saturday by the House upon any measure. The Jones measure, concerning admission of colored children to public schools, was recommitted after a long debate. The Senate passed the Wood bill to increase the salaries of the commandant and adjutant of the State Soldiers' Home and to increase the maintenance fund from a per capita of $10 per month to $12.50. The Senate Self bill requiring township trustees to file their annual statements with the Auditor, the O'Brien bill providing for certain improvements in the Supreme Court Library, and the Shively bill appropriating $5,000 for a statue of Morton in the Capitol at Washington, were passed. The most important bill acted on was a cigarette bill which had passed the House. It was amended so that the prohibition of sale to minors does not extend to all tobacco and cigars. The State Board of Commerce bill for a commission to revise the laws relating to local government was sent to third reading as it passed the House, with an amendment offered by Senator Houghton striking out the second section, which provides for the payment of the expenses of the commission up to a limit of $1,000 a year.

The lower house of the Legislature spent most of Monday discussing the medical bill. Many amendments, most of them intended to strengthen the bill, were agreed to and it was recommitted. The bill proposes to establish a State board of examiners from which all persons who practice medicine must secure a license. The special object is to drive out traveling specialists. The House refused to pass the bill to allow the Attorney General two more deputies, one at a salary of $1,200 and one at a salary of $1,800, and an additional stenographer at $600 a year. Mr. Nicholson offered a resolution requiring the temperance committee to report his anti-quart-shop bill. The temperance committee has had the bill for more than a month. The Senate spent nearly the entire day on the bill with which the city of Indianapolis proposes to oust the Citizens' Street Railroad Company when its franchise expires in 1901. It is said that the company has already spent $50,000 trying to prevent the passage of the bill. The bill was advanced to engrossment. It will go through the House with ease.

The Senate Tuesday passed the bill to convert the State prison south, at Jeffersonville, into an indeterminate prison. These bills also passed: Requiring each township to care for its own poor; requiring county auditors to name and index the public highways of the county; for the better protection of policy holders in life insurance companies; authorizing county commissioners to establish free gravel and turnpike road; prohibiting railroad companies from locating their tracks upon real estate owned by cemetery associations. The House passed the following: Legalizing sales of real estate by trustees and executors without the State; to make the law in regard to the arrest and extradition of fugitives from justice from other States to conform with the practice of neighboring States; to fix ferry rates at the time of granting licenses; requiring the use of the standard half-bushel measure in testing wheat in less than carload lots; requiring recorders to keep a separate record of real estate leases; enabling the commissioners of Jasper County to sell about $80,000 worth of bonds to complete their court house; to prevent preferences by private corporations; to make a mechanic's lien hold to the improvements in case the land passes out of possession of the person contracting the debt; permitting wives of drunkards and imbeciles to convey the husband's real estate; the three Indianapolis charter bills.

The street railroad question came up in both houses Wednesday. The New bill was called up on third reading in the Senate, but a motion by Senator Sweeney to postpone was carried. Senator Sweeney explained that he had no intention whatever of injuring the prospects of the bill, and later moved a reconsideration. Senator Wood tried to kill this motion by a motion to adjourn, and this was defeated. The action was reconsidered and the question of the final passage of the bill in the Senate was made a special order for 10 o'clock Friday morning. In the House the duplicate bill came up. The bill in the Senate form was recommended to pass. Mr. Shideler introduced a minority report along the lines of that drawn by "Jerry" Collins, and introduced in the Senate by Senator Wood. No vote was taken. The Legislature sent to Gov. Mount the two bills in which the State Board of Charities is especially interested, one providing for the better care of dependent orphan children, and the other converting the State prison south into an intermediate or reformatory prison.

Cycling Apparatus.

It is from Russia this time that there comes a curious cycling apparatus. It is a sort of bicycle for police service which rolls upon the rails of a railway line. In reality, the word "bicycle" is a misnomer of this apparatus, which rests upon three wheels. Through its two principal wheels it rests upon the rail to the right, but is kept in equilibrium by a metallic arm terminating, on the rail to the left, in a small wheel. It is a crude apparatus, moreover, the two heavy main wheels of which are connected by a compact body, the various parts of which are roughly shaped, and which weighs no less than one hundred and ten pounds. The machine is actuated both

THE FAMILY STORY

GETTIN' SHET OF MARY MASON.

IT was in a little house on a little street of a little Nebraska town—the Town of Bubble.

The little woman was crouched up on the carpet sofa in a limp heap. She looked ill, but sanguine—exhausted, but relieved. The remains of the midday meal were on the table. There were traces of ashes about the stove. The baby's gown was begrimed. In spite of these facts the mistress of the modest home smiled sweetly.

"Well," exclaimed her visitor, one comprehensive glance embracing the unwonted neglect of the place, "I heard you were not feeling well, but I did not know you required assistance with your housework. I supposed, of course, your friend Mrs. Mason was with you."

The little woman looked up with a sparkle in her eye.

"O, I'm well' enough. I was sick enough up to last Tuesday. I've been gettin' better ever since. I'll have the table red off an' things straightened before Tom gets home. If I feel like it now I can let things be. There ain't no one to notice. Mrs. Mason, she don't come over. Truth is, we've got shet of Mary Mason. We just," in emphatic repetition, "had to get shet of Mary Mason."

The visitor was sympathetic. The little woman was confidential.

"Me an' Tom," she explained, "have lived on farms all our lives. So when we rented the farm and moved into town, I thought the change was fine. 'My!' I says to Tom, 'ain't it nice to live in a large place. I never before suspicioned how comfortable it was to live reel near to folks, an' have them folks neighborly. Out'n the half section we might be two weeks 'ithout seein' a body to speak to. An' here we've got 300 people in this town, an' two trains a day—not to mention the freights—an' houses all round us. It's awful nice,' I says to Tom, 'but what's nicest is Mrs. Mason. Why, she comes in that often I ain't got a bit of time to be lonesome for the stock. There's only herself an' her husband, so her work don't count. She can't read or write only Bohemy, an' she ain't got no use for that language since she married out'n her folks. Take it altogether, she's willin' to neighbor lots, an' that,' I says to Tom, 'will be mighty perkin' for me!'"

"Yes," assented her visitor, with a rising inflection on the monosyllable.

"Tom, he didn't say much. He's kind of slow-like. He jest said, 'What suits you, Eliza, suits me!' Well, Mrs. Mason she come. She kept comin'. Sometimes, if she got Samyel off early, she come in before our breakfast. She allus come in before I got the dishes done up. An' she stayed. She stayed all mornin'—even wash mornin's. Sometimes she talked. Right along she kept nibblin'. Sometimes 'twas a bit of cheese, or a couple of crackers, or a hunk of spice gingerbread, or the top off a jar of jell. 'I can't hear you when I'm a-rubbin',' I'd say. That never mattered a bit to her. She'd wait till I got through rubbin' an' was a-bilin'. But whether she talked or whether she didn't she allus come, sure as the daylight did, she allus kept a-nibblin', an' she allus stayed."

The narrator treated herself to a teaspoonful of medicine out of a bottle on the window-sill before she proceeded.

"Our girls get home from school at 12," went on the prostrated chatelaine, "an' I allus have lunch for 'em then. Sometimes it's reel good. Sometimes it's only scraps. Anyhow, it's the best me an' Tom can afford. Don't you think she stayed for every one of them lunches? My, yes. She don't have to get dinner for Samyel till 1, an' she 'lowed that she most generally got peckish about noon. So she'd set down with the children reg'lar, an' then go across home to get dinner. Lots of times they'd be just a snag of pork, or a gumption of fried potatoes, or as much jam leavin' as you'd sneeze at. 'There ain't nothin' here, Mrs. Mason, to ask you to have a bite of,' I says to her often. 'O laws,' she answers, 'what's good enough for you is good enough for me!' An' she sets down."

Her visitor sighed softly.

"Then she would stay all afternoon. She was allus here when Tom come home to supper. Her husband took his supper at the hotel, so she used to jine us. Samyel never got back from the store before 11, so she'd stay at our house to pass the time. Tom, he'd go for the mail, an' come back, an' there she was. 'Read the noos!' she'd say. Tom, who is natchilly pelite, 'ud read it. He'd read, an' read, an' read! 'Land's sakes!' Mary Mason 'ud put in, 'go on! I could jest set here all night an' listen.' An' she did—pretty near!"

There was a mournful silence.

"On the farm," continued Mrs. Robinson, "me an' Tom allus went to bed at 8. How was we to go to bed even at 10, with Mary Mason a-sittin' there? 'Land o' the livin'!' she'd say, seein' me a-patchin', 'I'm glad I ain't got enny children to keep a-slavin' fer—they do take such a slew of work!' But when I got through the mendin', an' Tom had read every word in the paper, even the advertisements—there she was! Tom he'd yawn an' yawn. I'd tell as how I was dead beat, not havin' got much sleep the night before with the baby that was croupy. She never pretended to hear. By'm by, Tom, he'd go into our bedroom that's off the settin'-room, an' he'd haul off his shoes, an' sling 'em on the floor real hard. That didn't stir her. It was awful provokin'."

"It must have been!" her visitor acquiesced.

"Then they was the borryin'. Not that Mary Mason called it borryin'. She said she hadn't a bit of use for folks that borryed. She said when she wanted anything from a person she neighbored with that she just went in an' took it, reel friendly like. That's how our groceries kept a-meltin'. 'Tain't worth while me buyin' a package of yeast that costs 5 cents,' she'd say, 'when half a cake will make a bakin' for me and Samyel. I'll take a bit of your'n.' The next time she come 'twoud be flavorin'. 'No use of me gettin' a whole bottle of vanilier,' she'd say, 'when I only make a cake once a week. A teaspoon 'ill do me.' Then there was tea. Samyel drank only coffee, an' 'twould be extravagance for me,' she says, 'to buy half a pound of tea for myself. 'I'll take a pinch of yours.' So she took a pinch—most every day. Pinches make pounds—enough of 'em. 'Pickles,' she often observed, 'I'm most especially fond of, but Samyel says they rust out the linen' of a body's stomach. So I've made up my mind I'll eat mine over here, an' then he won't know if the linin' o' my stomach is rusted out or not.' I wish," feebly concluded Mrs. Robinson, "that you'd look at that row of empty jars on top of the kitchen press!"

A depressing and significant silence followed.

"Me an' Tom," said the protesting voice, "wanted to talk it over, but 'twas only between 12 at night an' 6 in the mornin' we got a chance. 'Tom,' I says to him one night after she'd been in an' borryed our last half-dozen of eggs, sayin' she'd return 'em when they got cheaper, 'Tom, we got to get shet of Mary Mason!' Tom says, 'I don't know how we're goin' to do it unless we move back on the farm.'"

"But you couldn't well do that!"

"Not real easy. So I begun to give her hints. I give her all kind of hints. I said as how I'd never been used to sassiety, an' that much of it made my head ache. I said as how Tom just loved solitood—that there wasn't anything he liked better than spending his evenings alone with me an' the children. I said late hours was fearful wearin' on our constitootions, an' that after this we was going to bed not later'n 9 o'clock. I said I couldn't return her visits because Tom hadn't no use for women that was allus gaddin'—an' besides it wouldn't be no use for me to go over seein' she was never home. Them, an' lots other gentle hints I gave her. She only says, 'O, stuffin'! I ain't one to make a fuss because a body can't keep up with the rules of ettirquette! I don't mind if you never come over. I won't get mad. I ain't that proud sort. Guess I'll take a bit of that roly-poly over for Samyel's dinner—it'll save me makin' sass.' It was that way right along. When she got through eatin' she was sure to want somethin' to take home for Samyel. 'You jest put an extry tablespoon of coffee in the pot,' she'd say, 'an' I'll run over with Samyel's cup. That'll save me makin' some.' Well, when I told Tom that them mild sayin's of mine 'ud no more mix into her mind than you could make sulphur blend with water, Tom says, 'Tell her we're goin' to move back on the farm. Maybe then she'll begin to neighbor with the folks that has just got married across the alley.'"

"That very day—'twas a quarter to 12, a week ago yesterday—she come a-walkin' into the kitchen (she never knocked), a big plate in her hand. Like usual she had a whole big welcome for herself. 'I knowed,' she says, 'you was aimin' to have a biled dinner today, and I thought I'd jest run over and get enough for Samyel an' me out'r the pot while it was hot.' So up she marches to the stove, and takes the lid off'n the kettle, an' begins a-spearin' out the salt pork, the turnips, an' the cabbage. 'Sake's alive!' she says, prodding' round, 'there ain't no carrots. Why ain't yet got some carrots? Me an' Samyel we're reel fond of carrots.'

"'Maybe,' says I, kind of sarcastic like, 'we'll have lots of 'em soon. That is, if we move back on the farm, like we're talkin' of doin'."

"Tom thought that'd be a knockdown blow. So did I. But 'twasn't. We didn't know Mary Mason. She smiled all over.

"'Gracious me!' she says, 'if that ain't luck! I told Samyel this mornin' I was clean beat out housekeepin' an' would like a chance to recooperate. Here it is! I'll go out to the farm with you an' stay for three months!'"

"Then I knew that my last hint had fail'n-flatter'n the breakfast puffs you make from a newspaper prize recipe. I had felt my family peace a-goin', I had suffered my own health a-goin'—an' I seen my dinner a-goin', too. So, I ris in my wrath.

"'No,' I says, 'you ain't comin'—for you ain't goin' to be asked.'

"She bust out a-laffin'.

"'Mercy me!' she says, 'What a one you are for jokin'! I never see the beat of you, Mis' Rob'son. I ain't so awful pertickler that I wait for folks to ask me.'

"Then my temper rises. It come up like milk a-bilin'. You don't know it's near the top till it runs over. 'I ain't jokin',' I says. 'If we move back on the farm 'twill be to get shet of you!'

"'What's that?' she says, an' stands there a-gawpin'.

"'It'll be to get shet of you!' I repeated reel deliberate. 'This is the last hint I'll give ye, Mary Mason!'"

"Did she take it?" the visitor queried.

A faint smile of triumph illumined the face reposing on the patchwork pillow.

"O, yes, she took it—along with the biled dinner. She said, though, that her faith in human natur' was shook. She said she'd never again try to neighbor with a woman who didn't appreciate the friendliness of persons more accustomed to sassiety. She 'lowed she never had much use nohow for folks who couldn't tell findoosickle from sauerkraut."

"So your ordeal is at an end?"

"We believe so," the little woman said hopefully. "It's a week since we had the biled dinner—most of which we didn't have. She ain't come over since. I'm gettin' my health back. Tom an' me is livin' happy an' peaceful again. We go to bed at half past 8. The children gets all their share at meal times. I red up when I feel willin'. Tom says it's too good to last. He says she'll come back one of these days. Do you think she will?"

"O, surely not!"

"I hope not," returned the little woman, smiling brightly. But the next instant she cast toward the door a furtive glance that was dark with dread. "We've got shet of Mary Mason I know, but—will we stay shet?"—Chicago Tribune.

A FREAK AMONG FLOWERS.

Venus' Fly Trap and Its Almost Human Action.

Now and again, in exploring American woods and swamps, botanists have come across floral curiosities that almost bridge over the great gulf that divides the animal and vegetable kingdoms, says the Designer. One of these, to be met with nowhere in the world save in North Carolina, is scientifically classified as dionoea muscipula, but is colloquially known as "Venus' fly trap."

In appearance the extraordinary plant is prettily but unassumingly the leafless flower stem, running from six to eight inches in height and surmounted by a cluster of five petalled blossoms, rising erect like a rosette-like bed of leaves. It is in the edge of the leaves that the death-dealing apparatus is set—for this modest little plant, which is so delicate that it dies of the slightest injury to root or stem, sustains its life by feeding upon the unwary insects that chance to alight upon its leaves, enticing them to their destruction by exuding from the edges of its fatal traps a viscous fluid, somewhat resembling honey.

The traps consist of two soft, velvety leaves, fringed with delicate bristles and hinged together on one side. The unsuspecting fly, lured by the honey, alights on these bristles in anticipation of a feast, but at the first touch of its feet the hinges close, the two leaves come together, the bristles interlock, and the hapless insect is imprisoned in a cell from which escape is impossible.

Under the stimulus of the victim's struggles the tiny glands with which the inner walls of the trap are furnished pour forth a secretion which Darwin analyzed as a vegetable gastric juice, resembling that which insures digestion in animal life. Under the influence of this curious fluid, the fly is actually digested alive, and its juices being extracted the trap doors are reopened and the skeleton is flung out.

The scientists declare that the plant unquestionably lives upon the juices of its victims, but one or two expert florists take exception to this statement. It is worthy of note that, although the habit of the plant is carnivorous, experiments have proved that it lives longer and thrives better when so inclosed that no insects can reach it—a superabundance of its favorite diet apparently rendering it even more delicate than it is by nature. The set of muscles controlling its leaves are said to resemble those of the human eyelids.—New York Herald.

In the Canaries.

A tourist in the Canary Islands says: "I know nothing more cheerful to the vagabond than the readiness of friendship among the common people of the Canary Islands. Go where you will abroad you may shake the hand of the beggar, loafer, peasant and cottager. All have the same free and hearty welcome for you. They seem to delight in outlandish acquaintance, and if you happen to be a woman you instantly appeal to their better selves. Here, as elsewhere, I have kindly memories of people whose names I never knew and who did not know mine. I remember driving by diligence with a brave and heroic-looking young gentleman, beautifully clad. He wore long boots, radiant linen, velvet breeches, a short, smart jacket and a wide-brimmed hat.

"Men of breeding might go as far as his native village to acquire his perfect manners. Wondering who this picturesque and operatic young man might be, I afterward questioned the diligence driver (a rascal I had reason to suspect of stealing my bag, with all my things, and the wonderful bargains in Orotava lace and embroidery I had driven), and learned that he was a village butcher. So with all the trades people here. I wanted to match some stuff sold me by a woman of Orotava down at Santa Cruz, and was informed I could apply to Don Pablo, or Don Pedro, and then to Don Nicholas of the Puerto. Surnames are suppressed—every one is still as well born as they were on the peninsula in the days of Lope de Vega—and the German ambassador, asking for a servant's credentials, was presented with proof of his descent from a Gothic king."—Good Words.

A Curious Wooden Watch.

The most curious timekeeper, perhaps, that has ever been made in this country was the work of one Victor Doriot, who lived at Bristol, Tenn., about twenty years ago. This oddity was nothing more or less than a wooden watch. The case was made of briar root and the inside works, except three of the main wheels and the springs (which were of metal) were made from a piece of an old boxwood rule. The face, which was polished until it looked like a slab of finest ivory, was made from the shoulder blade of an old cow that had been killed by the cars. "Doriot's queer watch," as it was called, was an open-faced affair, with a glass crystal, and was pronounced a fine piece of work by all the watchmakers in East Tennessee.

A Lucky "Spec."

Several days ago the schooner Robert I. Carter struck on Alden's Rock, and to all appearances was a total loss. Nautical experts agreed that she would leave her bones there, and her owners stripped her and sold the hulk to Charles Bartlett, of this city, who bought it for $70 on "spec." Last night's wind and tide floated the schooner off, and, to the amazement of the salts, she came drifting up the harbor. Bartlett had her towed in. She is worth $45,000, and has besides a cargo of 1,200 tons of coal, most of which is salable.—Portland (Me.) special Boston Herald.

WOMEN ARE GAINING.

Increase in Proportion of Women in Working Classes.

The eleventh annual report of the department of labor, transmitted to Congress by Commissioner Wright, relates entirely to the work and wages of men, women, and children. It shows that the proportion of women to the whole working class is increasing, while that of children is decreasing. The report was prepared in pursuance of a joint resolution of Congress. The definite purposes of the investigation were to determine to what extent, if any, women were superseding men; to show the conjugal condition of the women who were employed; to compare the relative efficiency of men and women, and finally to show the relative rates of wages received by each sex in each industry. The agents of the department secured information from 1,067 establishments of various kinds, located in thirty different States and employing 148,367 persons, a number large enough to insure that the data collected was thoroughly representative. The complete data sought for, however, was obtained from only 931 establishments.

These 931 establishments employed 64,560 persons ten years ago and 108,643 in 1895-6. Of this number in the first period 26,479 were males of 18 years of age or over, as against 43,195 in the second; and 4,175 males under 18 years of age, as against 7,540 in the second. In the first period 27,163 were females 18 years of age or over, and 6,743 females under 18 years of age, as against 45,162 and 12,751, respectively, in the present period.

From these figures it is seen that male employes 18 years of age or over increased in the present period over the former period 63.1 per cent, while female employes of the same age increased 66.3 per cent. Male employes under 18 years of age increased 80.6 per cent, while female employes under 18 years of age increased 89.1 per cent.

As collateral information an interesting showing is made of the figures of the last three censuses concerning the employment of women. The proportion of females 10 years of age and over employed in all occupations in the United States rose in its relation to the whole number employed from 14.68 per cent in 1870 to 17.22 per cent in 1890, while males decreased in proportion from 85.32 per cent in 1870 to 82.78 per cent in 1890.

The report throws considerable additional light upon the much-discussed question as to married women in industrial pursuits. For the present period, out of an aggregate of 79,987 women, 70,921, or 88.7 per cent, were single; 6,755, or 8.5 per cent, married; 2,011, or 2.5 per cent, divorced, and 244, or 3-10 of 1 per cent, unknown. The last census figures on this point are also analyzed. Of the 3,914,571 females 10 years of age or over engaged in gainful pursuits in the United States in 1890, 69.84 per cent were single or their conjugal condition unknown, 13.16 per cent were married, 16.16 per cent were widowed and 0.9 per cent were divorced.

RUINOUS WASTE OF MONEY.

Congress Burns It at the Rate of Half a Billion a Year.

A special to the New York World says: "The time is near at hand when the people will have to make the wholesale appropriations of public money a direct issue. They will have to do this for their own protection. When this time comes individuals may not be able to escape."

Representative Dockery of Missouri made this statement with the utmost earnestness. "At this session," he said, "about $515,000,000 will be appropriated. This, added to the appropriations of the last session, will bring the total amount of direct appropriations by this Congress to the enormous aggregate of at least $1,000,000,000."

Mr. Dockery said that this was bad enough in itself, but the people could not realize the whole evil of this riotous expenditure until they began to realize that there seemed to be no way of checking it. "We really need an express provision in the rules that would charge some one with the duty of protecting the taxpayers. That might be done in the House, but it is hopeless to think of correcting this evil in the Senate. Senatorial courtesy would absolutely forbid it. In the House there may be a volunteer who will consent to guard the treasury and drive back the plunderers."

Mr. Dockery when asked to give figures showing the increase in the cost of running the Government, said:

"The average annual actual expenditures for each fiscal year from 1875 to 1888, inclusive, for the ordinary expenses of the Government, not counting payments on the public debt and payments out of postal revenues, were only $257,863,714. The average for the same purposes from 1889 to 1896, inclusive, was $348,437,499. That is, the average annual increase of expenditures in the last eight years has been $90,573,785, or an aggregate increase of the stupendous sum of $724,590,280 in eight years as compared with the preceding fourteen years."

These expenditures, counting in the postal outlays and the requirements of the public debt, call for about half a billion dollars each year—one-third of the whole volume of our money in actual circulation.

MRS. LYMAN J. GAGE.

The Wife of Carlisle's Successor In Domestic and Democratic.

In Mrs. Lyman J. Gage, wife of the coming Secretary of the Treasury, Washington society will find a decided acquisition. Mrs. Gage is tall, distinguished in appearance, and of simple and engaging manners. Her eyes are dark brown, her hair slightly swept with gray, her voice a low-pitched contralto, her skin clear and olive. She may be written a society woman in the finest sense of the term. Her associations have always been with the best set of Chicago women, women who entertain handsomely and are esteemed for their sterling worth as wives, mothers and home makers. The Gage place in North State street, Chicago, is richly and substantially furnished, with nothing pretty or frivolous to mar the general effect of spaciousness as produced by the wide halls and great rooms.

While Mrs. Gage's birth place was Albany, N. Y., she went west in her early childhood and is thoroughly identified with Chicago and its best enterprises. Her maiden name was Cornelia Lansing.

News has been received at Painesville, Ky., of the drowning of Andrew Wilson, Preston Hall and Harry Brown in Pike County. The men had been on a spree for several days and had started across Big Sandy river on the ice on their horses.

GREATER NEW YORK.

Some Statistics Showing How Big a City It Will Be.

Much has been written concerning "Greater New York," but few have any conception how great a city it will be. Only London will exceed it in population, wealth, and business. Its area will be 306 square miles, or 195,840 acres. It will have an estimated population of 3,430,000. Its bonded debt will be $216,471,593. Its annual tax budget will exceed $35,000,000. The assessed value of its real estate (New York, Brooklyn, and Staten Island), will amount to $2,307,091,000. Its parks and park lands will comprise 7,836 acres, not counting several noted roadways, such as Harlem Speedway and the Coney Island boulevard, which are under park control.

It will contain sixty-four monuments and statues, including Grant's tomb to be dedicated next April. It will have forty-eight cemeteries, comprising 3,600 acres and containing a silent population of 4,000,000. Its public schools will contain 326,000 pupils and 7,282 teachers. Its police force will aggregate 6,509 and its firemen 2,125. New York and Brooklyn alone have 2,138 miles of streets and 991 miles of sewers. The capacity of the water works will be 503,700,000 gallons, and the miles of water mains will number 1,378.

Within this mammoth city there will be 1,093 churches, with 720,771 parishioners and 300,000 Sunday school teachers. The sitting capacity of the churches is 469,159. The aggregate value of church property is $68,718,000. There will be sixty-three libraries, containing 1,924,000 volumes, thirty art galleries, fifty-four theaters, with a seating capacity of 88,000, eleven halls for music and oratory, with a seating capacity of 38,000; eighty-one clubs of established social standing, having 48,000 members; two big universities, and ninety-three other educational institutions.

There will be 110 hotels within the city, not to mention several thousand Raines law "hotels." The city will have seven bridges across the Harlem and one across the East River. Another East River bridge has been started, and one across the North River is projected. There are thirty-three different ferries. The forty-five lines of street railway carry 792,000,000 passengers every year over 464 miles of track. There will be upward of sixty exchanges and other commercial organizations. There are 218 banks and banking institutions in New York and Brooklyn alone, and the clearings of the clearing house aggregate $28,000,000,000 a year. The big city will transact considerably more than one-half the foreign commerce of the country.

Has Had a Lucid Interval.

Mrs. Lucelle (Yseult?) Dudley, the English woman who, more than ten years ago, shot at O'Donovan Rossa, the dynamiter, in New York, and who is now confined in Broadmoor criminal asylum, has been out of that place of confinement, and has now been secured there again, under somewhat curious circumstances.

After the attempted assassination the New York jury convicted the woman, but added to their finding an expression of their belief that she was insane at the time. She was confined in Middletown lunatic asylum (she had previously been in the Hayward's health asylum, Sussex), and about five years ago she was consigned from America to Broadmoor. Some time ago she passed under certain home office papers into the safe keeping of the Salvation Army. She was placed in the Rescue home, Mare street, Hackney, and was soon so free from taint of her former lunacy that she was permitted to go out occasionally—sometimes with a Salvation Army collection box, for instance.

Some little time ago she conceived the idea of writing a book of her "reminiscences," which should be published simultaneously in England and America. The more she thought of the idea the greater grew her belief in the importance of such a book of "revelations." She told her friends of her project, and talked enthusiastically about it to the people of the Salvation Army home. Her friends tried to dissuade her from her purpose, but the more they dissuaded the more she persisted in getting out her book.

Then Mrs. Dudley disappeared from the Salvation Army home, and her friends received letters from her dated Broadmoor. Mrs. Dudley asserted to a Daily Mail reporter, who saw her at Broadmoor a day or two since, that the government had sent her back to Broadmoor to prevent her writing her book—which is doubtless true, but the fact may be differently construed by the authorities and by Mrs. Dudley. The official version, if officials could be persuaded ever to be communicative enough to have versions, would doubtless be that the woman has had a relapse, and is not safe out of Broadmoor.—London Mail.

A Baby Hippopotamus.

The baby hippopotamus at the Jardin des Plantes has turned out an enfant terrible. All last summer he made the life of the old hippopotamus, in whose care he was placed and which the Paris children insist upon calling his "aunt," a burden to her. The tricks that he played upon her when he caught her napping were the joy of the youthful spectators, and some others besides. An opportunity that he never failed to seize was when his aunt fell into a pleasant after-dinner sleep, with her head just floating upon the water. While she was dreaming of warm African rivers and luxuriant vegetation, some outrageous liberty on the part of the baby would bring her back to realities. Of late, since he has been suffering from chilblains, his character has become altogether insupportable, and he has been given a place to himself, furnished with a bath that is kept constantly warm. His hide has split into deep crevasses, and his doctors are much puzzled to know how to deal with his case. This precious baby is valued at 30,000 francs.—Paris letter.

Absurd Advice.

Doctor—Yes, I examined your son carefully and I am convinced that his condition is entirely due to climatic influences. You ought to send him to warmer climate.

Parent—Why, doctor, that's absurd. Ever since he's had a bicycle he has done nothing else but scorch.—Boston Courier.

MRS. BRADLEY MARTIN.

The Hostess of the Notorious $500,000 Ball in New York City.

Mrs. Bradley Martin, the hostess of the great New York ball, who has won the distinction of paying out more money for one evening's entertainment than was ever paid out before, was Cornelia Sherman before she married Mr. Martin. Her father was Isaac H. Sherman, who amassed a fortune of something like $10,000 in the manufacture and sale of barrel staves. Most of this money was inherited by the daughter, and the thousands which Mrs. Martin expended on the recent grand affair were earned years and years ago in the big concern of which her father was the head. Miss Sherman met Mr. Martin at the wedding of Elliott F. Shepard twenty-five years ago. Mr. Martin was Mr. Shepard's best man, and Miss Sherman took a fancy to him. Two months later they were married and the great house of Bradley Martin was founded. Her social qualities—hitherto potential only—did not begin to grow until after the death of her father and her inheritance of his millions. Then she took her family to Europe and was received in good society. After her record in Europe, which was brilliant, New York opened its arms to her and she began to be an important part of that peculiarly wrought mosaic called New York society. This grand affair of the ball places her at the head of New York's society life. Mrs. Martin's dress was as fine as anything at the ball. It was made of black velvet over red brocade, after a fashion plate of the time of Queen Mary of Scotland. A gown just like Mrs. Martin's had been once worn by the beautiful, unhappy Mary.

SUGAR MAGNATE SEARLES.

Had a Very Bad Memory When Examined by the Lexow Committee.

John F. Searles, the secretary and treasurer of the sugar combine, who was before the Lexow committee, knows more about the trust's affairs than all of its other officers combined. Mr. Searles' memory in his examination was very bad. "Knowing" as he is about the trust's affairs, he could not remember several very important matters about which the committee sought information, and his protests about his poor memory were most amusing to the committee. Mr. Searles is said to be one of the ablest business men in the world. His power of organization is something to be marveled at. He is the son of a Methodist preacher and was born in Westchester County, New York. His earliest recollections of commercial life date back to when he was employed as a clerk by a Connecticut firm of sugar importers. After his graduation from that house he went into business for himself and succeeded admirably. He became associated with the Havemeyers and his fortune was made. Like many other great American millionaire business men, Mr. Searles is exceedingly simple in his tastes, is a man of exemplary life, loves his church and his country, and is a generous friend of education and a patron of charity. He is an officer in several church societies and is much interested in Christian work. He is also a director in several banks.

Labor.

Labor is a more beneficent ministration than man's ignorance comprehends or his complainings will admit. It is not mere blind drudgery, even when its end is hidden from him. It is all a training; it is all a discipline, a development of energies, a nurse of virtues, a school of improvement.

From the poor boy who gathers a few sticks for his mother's hearth to the strong man who fells the forest oak, and every human toiler, with every weary step and every urgent task, is obeying a wisdom far above his own wisdom, and is fulfilling a design far beyond his own immediate attention.

Ratio of Colored People to Whites.

Georgia is the banner State of the blacks, having a colored population of 858,996 to a white population of 978,357; Mississippi is second, with a colored population of 744,749 and 544,851 whites; South Carolina is third, with 689,141 colored people and 462,001 whites; Alabama, fourth, with a colored population of 679,209 and 993,711 whites, and Virginia fifth, with 635,851 colored people and 1,020,122 whites.

COUNTY MATTERS.

The Courier gives Facts. Only, and not Sensational Inventions.

To our readers who now and then say we ought to write more fully about the criminal conditions now being unearthed at the court house, and who say they can hear so much more, by reading papers outside of Auburn, and even in the Chicago and Ft. Wayne dailies, we wish to say a word or two:

We could tell as big lies as the papers named, if we chose to do so. But we don't. The matter is bad enough without lying about it. But what the COURIER has told is true. No doubt a great deal more is true, but it is not wise to accept all that we hear. This is no time for sensational articles. And if we have to wait a little it is better to wait and get only truth. The facts are, the commissioners, assisted by the county attorney, J. H. Rose, have been for several days going over the pile of orders that have been tampered with and when asked to give out statements for publication, they seem to prefer waiting till court meets, and the matter is taken more fully in hand by the proper authorities. There are facts now in their possession, which if made known would perhaps assist the guilty, and nobody wants this done. We are free to say, however, that a pile of mutilated orders are there, some changed in one way and some in another, making as appears now a stealing of several thousand dollars. It appears that the most of these were "fixed" during the latter part of the four years in which Mr. Coffinberry was auditor and Mr. Borst and Frank Dills were his deputies. And during these four years. Mr. Sawvel was treasurer. It seems probable, that in some way, the thing originated with Coffinberry, that he used some sort of authority or influence to get his deputies to do the work in the way he directed, that then Sawvel was "worked" into it. Just how all this was got into shape, the stories do not make plain, but when the full team was in harness, it was easy pulling. Now that all are exposed it is likely they will return to the county and the defrauded taxpayers, as much of their ill-gotten gains as they can. As to their punishment further than this, that is a matter for the courts. It may be that some of it is "outlawed," as different offenses run from two to five years only, before the time for punishment is out. We presume, however, that they will be called into court. No guilty man should escape, no matter what his standing may be. And the peaple have a right to a full knowledge of all that has been done and no doubt will soon know all. As soon as the matter is brought up, we shall give full details.

Yesterday about four p. m. Frank Dills was arrested and brought before 'Squire Walborn on a charge of forgery and grand larcery. The arrest was made on information and it seems he had forged and passed an order of $42 March 4, 1895. There was no such account on the books and the order is worthless. He gave bond, with his mother, Mrs. Emily Dills as security and was released.

CORRYNA, DeKalb County, Ind., July 21, 1896.

This is to certify that I had the Eczema for 2 years and my suffering was intense. I saw three different doctors and found no relief. I went to A. Y. Rosenbury and in five weeks he dismissed my case. It has been 9 months since he dismissed my case and at present I am feeling well and comfortable. I give this cheerfully and ask others to do as I have done and be satisfied that this is a true statement in my case.

ONE MAN GONE RIGHT

Mike Boland and the School Board Vindicated. Now Stop Talkiig About Them

Amid the crash of reputations and wreck of good names, it is a genuine pleasure to find one instance in which we can defend an official from the aspersions and doubts of public opinion. For several days the public has been regaled with dark hints and rumors, connecting Mike Boland with the other suspected and exposed county officials. It was freely claimed that he was "in the muddle with the rest." And then it was conceded that hough he had not been in the new industry of "raising" a crop of county orders, he had got badly mixed up in handling the school funds. As the writer of this has been familiar with the various school funds, and the manner in which they are often handled, it has been an easy matter to understand, and therefore an easy matter to explain to the public. And the public is the great taxpaying part of the community, and therefore is entitled to a full explanation. We are also familiar with many of the circumstances out of which these charges grew. A few years ago, Auburn was obliged to build a new school house. The town had but little money, and was already in debt. But the school rooms were overflowing into the streets, and those who remained in school had very unsatisfactory chances. So, the school house was erected. It cost to build it, in round numbers, $16,000. But only $10,000 of bonds was issued, and then, by shrewd management, the school board kept the work going, and by using fresh funds that came into the special school fund. they paid the workmen, or contractors nearly all due them. But at the last, the board found themselves out of funds. and as there was quite a large amount of the tuition fund on hand and lying idle, just then, they took out of that fund about $1,600 and used it to finish paying the balances due on the school house. In this last sentence is the germ of all this talk. This $1,600 has all been replaced, every cent of it, and the public has lost nothing. Better still, the public has gained a large sum. Let us explain. If this balance of $1,600 had been settled by the Boards issuing orders to that amount, those orders would have drawn interest. It was abont three yeas when the last of this money was turned back from the special funds to make good the $1,600 of the tuition funds, and at 6 per cent on the orders, had orders been issued there would have accrued about $100 interest each year, or $300 in three years. At all events, not less than $200 was saved to the taxpayers by this "irregularity." No one suffered. Every teacher was paid promptly. But the strict letter of the law would indicate that tuition funds shall be used for no other purpose than in paying teachers' wages. This means. that it shall not be diverted and never return. And every dollar of this money was returned to the tuition fund were it belonged and has every cent of it been used in paying teachers, exactly as the law directs.

We take great pleasure in making this statement. It is in agreeble contrast to what we have been compelled to write so much of late. We almost hate to stop on so agreeable a theme. But it is all there is to say. Mr. Boland has not been guilty of any wrong doing, but he and the other members of that school board deserve golden opinions instead of censure, for the economical way in which they handled the funds and saved expenses to the taxpayers.

Since writing the above, we have called on Mr. Boland, and obtained the correct figures, covering the transactions. The last report as to tuition fund, made by Mr. Boland as treasurer of the school board, when he turned the office over to his successor, H. C. Shull, stands thus:

TUITION FUND.

Amount received	$7351.13
Paid out	4972.34
Balance on hand	2378.79
Turned into special fund	1571.81
Balance on hand	$ 806.98

This $806.98 was the amount to be turned over to his successor. But by mistaking a figure 2, and calling it an 8, the actual amount turned over, was $6 too much. as shown by the following receipt from Mr. Shull.

Auburn, Ind. June 14, 1895.

RECEIVED FROM M. Boland Eight Hundred and Twelve and 98-100 Dollars, Amt of School fund on hand due from him as Treas. School Board.

H. C. SHULL, Treas. School Board.

So instead of not turning over money enough, Mr. Boland turned over $6 too much, which Mr. Shull afterwards paid back.

MISS VINNA FAIR.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Fair Died at the Farm Home near St. Johns this Morning.

The COURIER is pained to announce the death this morning from consumption of Miss Vinna Fair daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Fair, at the farm home near St. John. She was twenty-five years of age. She was well known and highly respected by all who knew her. Her prospects for the future were very bright.

Miss Fair has been a sufferer from consumption for several months past, and during the last months of her residence in Auburn was confined to her home. Since Mr. Fair removed to the farm she has gradually grown worse and at 7 o'clock this morning her spirit passed out to Him who gave it. She passed peacefully away with scarcely a struggle. Miss Fair was a faithful member of the M. E. church and Epworth League in this city and was usually present and willing to work in all meetings, when ever her health would permit. Her funeral will be held Friday forenoon. The friends will meet at the house at 9:30 and the funeral will be held at the Cedar Chapel church. The interment will be in the cemetery near the church.

MRS. Wm. LAHNAM DEAD.

Our people were shocked, this forenoon, by the sudden death of Mrs. Wm. Lahnum, at her home in the north part of town. She had been about the house as usual, and finally sat down to write some letters to her children. She had finished one to her daughter, Nannie Preston, at Grand Junction, Mich., and another to her son, Wesley, at Ontario, Ind.. when she laid down her pen and called for a glass of water. It was brought her, but she was found helpless and dying. She breathed her last in a few minutes in the arms of her son, Frank. It is believed to be the result of heart disease, as she had been troubled more or less with that for some time. The funeral is at the Baptist church Thursday at 2 p. m. and interment in Woodlawn.

LOTS OF FUN

Senator Nusbaum is having "oodles" of fun at the expense of frightened proprietors of patent medicines. Early in the session, Dr. Nusbaum introduced a bill intended to correct some existing wrongs in the practice of medicine, with the intention of giving better protection to physicians with a diploma from a medical college. In the discussions that arose over it, some friend of patent medicine dealers said some cutting things, when the Doctor, in order to get even with him, got up another bill, aimed directly at the patent medicine business. He had no idea he could get it passed, but he wanted to give them a scare. He at once became famous. Now we can hardly pick up an exchange, but it has some hot shot for the Senator Of course, the most of it is inspired by patent medicine houses. When they read this article, as no doubt some of them will, they will have a better idea of "where they are at." And especially that company that wanted to make a contract with the COURIER, which was "to be void in case Wm. J. Bryan is elected president."

A Timely Friend.

With perfect propriety may we call that excellent remedy, Salvation Oil, a timely friend. This liniment rapidly cures rheumatism, neuralgia and paine, when other remedies fail. Mr. Jno. M. Hall, Ashland, Va., writes: "I suffered with rheumatism in the ankle and the muscles connected therewith. Salvation Oil at once relieved the soreness, reduced the swelling, and cured the pain. No other liniment that I ever used did me so much good."

Brown moved to the Jacob Morr farm; Mr. Walker to the Mrs. Sidney Culbertson's farm; Curt Watt to the St. Clair farm; Mr. Fellows to the Barney farm; Ira Cone to the Jones farm; and Dull Shilling and Lewis Howey will move back to their own farms.

Rev. C. M. Evans did not fill his appointment here last Sunday owing to the protracted meetings at Kehobeth.

Mr. and Mrs. I. Cone entertained Mr. and Mrs. Hemmick of St. Johns, Mrs Palmer of Auburn and F. Buchanan and family last week.

BUTLER.

Walter Thompson, living on the old Geo. Treman farm west of Butler, sold his personal property last Tuesday and will leave the farm for some other avocation.

Mrs. Hannah Moughler, living 1½ miles south of Butler has sold her farm to N. G. Gengnagle, and will move to Butler.

George Barnhart has taken the old farm formerly his father's, as his share of the estate, and will occupy it in the near future.

Drs. Shumaker and Campbell performed a delicate surgical operation on Adam Tombow living 4½ miles south west of town last Monday.

E. V. Campbell visited home over last Sunday from the Toledo Medical College. He will graduate this spring

Mrs. William Harding is dangerously ill.

Amasa Blanchard is about to purchase the William Miller dwelling on the south side.

Mrs. Sarah Wilson and her son Ovlatt, and his wife are visiting friends in Van Wert, Ohio.

Our streets have had a little of the appearance of water ways for the past few days—good for mud boats.

The Bicycle Co. are running about eighty hands at present. They say sales are fairly good.

Our M E friends have closed their revival effort with only meager fruitage. The U. B. friends have taken up the work we hope with better success.

It makes one almost weep (?) to go down and see one of the saloon doors cosed tight without even an accommodating back door to fall upon.

W. A. Mason and wife and a few others of our citizens will visit Washington to attend the Inaugural ceremonies of the coming President.

FEES AND SALARIES.

A Calm Discussion of the Law, the Duty of the Officer and the Rights of the People.

There is a suspicious air of uniformity in the combined attacks which we fine this week, of the republican papers of the county, on the COURIER in regard to its comments on Sheriff Stroh. It looks as if some one had inspired them all at the same time. We had stated that the sheriff's fees should all be turned over to the county, and that he had retained some of them. The statement we made is true, and we do not find any denial of it in any of the papers named. True, the Dispatch says our statement is "false" but does not say in what respect it is false. It does not attempt to deny the truth of what we said, that "fees which should be turned over to the county, have been retained by the sheriff." That is the substance of all that was said. We alluded especially to the $2 a day allowed to sheriffs for attending court. A sheriff has no right to claim this, any more than he has any other fees. All his pay comes from fees like this, but they must all be turned into the county. Then at the end of each quarter, the commissioners will allow him so much of his salary as he has collected and turned in. But of what value would the salary law be if an officer can draw his $2200 salary, and then get a lot of fees besides? And if he can take the $2 a day allowed for court services, what is to hinder him from taking the fees allowed for milege and serving writs, as well as the fees for making sheriff's sales, etc, etc? As far as the correctness of our statement is concerned, we got it from the board of commissioners, two of whom are republicans. That does away with the charge of "partisan attack."

The article in the Press is more reasonable for it admits, that "the sheriff is not to have his pay when it is earned, but after he has collected the fees and turned them in." And it also quotes the law to the same effect, and adds: "Mr. Stroh's case is different from the others in that he has earned his salary, but it has not been collected and when collected the fees go to the county treasury and not to the sheriff." This is the fact, and is exactly what we claimed, as far as collecting and turning over fees is concerned. But, the statement that the "sheriff's case is different from the others' will not do. The facts are all officers who have by law been put on a salary, are in the same boat. All collect fees, all turn these fees over to the county, all get their salary allowed by the commissioners, but only so much of it as has been collected. They must wait for the rest. If the sheriff can claim extra fees or the privilege of failing to turn over fees, so can all the rest. The best way for any officer is to live up to the law, even if he don't get all his salary for some after he earns it. We have no personal or partisan feeling in this matter, and would have dropped it, but for the combined attack of the several papers all evidently influenced to do so. We feel it is high time for the press and the people to insist on strict observanch of the laws by those they have given office, no matter what party it hits.

In conclusion we cannot agree with the Press, that this part of the salary law should be changed, and the officers paid their full salary each quarter whether they have collected fees enough or not. Such a course would compel the county to advance a thousand or two dollars each quarter and then wait for its pay till the fees came in. In what way is an officer better than his county, that the county should be made to bear all the hardships?

Obituary.

Lucian Provines was born in Wayne Co. Ohio Feb. 19, 1851 and died Feb. 21, 1897, aged 46 years and 2 days. In April 1853 his parents settled on the farm on which he died, in Jackson township, Ind. He was married to Sarah A. Moore April 4, 1886. To this union was born six children, two sons and four daughters His faithful wife six children, father, mother, four brothers and two sisters survive him. For nearly twenty-five years he was a sufferer from that dreadful disease cancer, for the last eighteen months he was unable to perform any hard labor and for three months was closely confined to his room yet with all this suffering he bore it patiently and without complaint. The funeral was at the Grove Bethel church Tuesday Feb 23, and interment at Woodlawn. Services were by Rev. J. H. Elson of Fairfield.

Gone and who misses him?
Raise the latch lightly,
Enter the darkened room
Where he slept nightly.

Awhile we have our loved ones,
And then we have them not,
Only as memory keeps their forms
They cannot be forgot.

Our loved ones never die to us
They live and love forever.
And he though in the grave-yard laid
Shall be forgotten never.

A NEW Botanical Discovery

THE WONDERFUL KAVA-KAVA SHRUB.

This valuable new botanical discovery, that of the Kava-Kava Shrub, or as botanists call it, piper methysticum, found on the banks of the Ganges River in East India. From a medical stand point this is perhaps the most important discovery of the century. The use of the Kava-Kava Shrub, like other valuable medical substances, opium and quinine, was first observed by Christian missionaries among the natives as a sovereign remedy for Kidney diseases.

Alkavis, which is the medical compound of the Kava-Kava Shrub, is endorsed by the Hospitals and Physicians of Europe as a Sure Specific Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases. Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Brick-Dust deposits, Rheumatism, Liver Disease, Female Complaints, pain in the back, and all diseases caused by impurities of the blood, due to defective action of the Kidneys.

In the New York World of February 8, 1893, the discovery of ALKAVIS is described as the latest important advance in Medical Science. The Medical Gazette Dec. 15, 1892 records the wonderful effects of the new curative, upon patients both in hospitals and private practice. The London (England) Medical Recorder in August and September, 1892, publishes records showing that cures of Kidney and Urinary disorders increased over ninety per cent. in the [illegible] use of ALKAVIS, in every hospital ward, the number of patients being 350 to 370 each week. The Paris (France) Review of Medical Progress, for Sept. 1892, publishes a list of 67 patients cured by ALKAVIS, previously considered incurable. The Prussian Military Hospital Reports, Nos. XXIV XXV. give marvelous accounts of the cures wrought by ALKAVIS in chronic and severe cases, including advanced Bright's Disease and Jaundice, and the endorsements are equally strong from every other source.

The Church Kidney Cure Company, New York City, so far are the only importers of Alkavis, and they have appointed S. E. Hoisington, of Auburn, Ind., cor. 12th and Van Buren Sts., as their sole distributing agent for this section. Those desiring Alkavis will call on or address the above agent. Send to our agent for book of one thousand cures, with guarantee of cure when three bottles of Alkavis are taken.

ELKHART, IND., May 8, 1894.

This is to certify that my child had the Eczema all over his face, so bad that the yellow water was seeping out all over his face. I tried some of the best doctors and could not get it checked. Then being acquainted with A. Y. Rosenbury, of Waterloo, Ind., and knowing of some of his wonderful cures I took my babe to him and he took it through a course of treatment and I could see a change in a few days, and it kept getting better right along and is still well of the disease. This is given voluntarily.

—There was a rumor in town this morning that Trustee Dancer had been ousted from his office, and Ben Moffit put in his place. As ridiculous as such a story was it had some believers. We are free to say that Mr. Dancer is one of the best trustees we have and it would take a more serious charge than is likely to come up, to induce the Commissioners to remove him.

—Chicora, Pa., "Herald:" Richard Vensel reports One Minute Cough Cure the greatest success of medical science. He told us that it cured his family of terrible coughs and colds, after all other so called cures had failed entirely. Mr. Vensel said it assisted his children through a very bad siege of measels. One Minute Cough Cure makes expectoration very easy and rapid. Davenport the Druggist.

—Our old-time and present-time friend Mike Kiplinger, was here this forenoon, and gave us a short visit. He and Theodore Imhoff are still in the planing mill business at Waterloo and are doing a good deal of work as contractors and builders. We spoke a few days ago of their fine joiner work on the new J. D. Campbell room in the new block at Waterloo.

—It has been abundantly demonstrated that pig iron can be and is made cheaper in Alabama than in any other place in the world and large orders from England and other parts of Europe are constantly being filled by the Birmingham furnaces. Thousands of tons have lately been shipped to India, and orders for 30,000 tons are pending for the continent. The demand for ocean vessels for shipments of grain and cotton is said to make it difficult for the iron factories to get favorable freight rates.

—A. Y. Rosenberry of Waterloo, was here this forenoon and made arrangements for coming here on Tuesday of each week to meet his patients. He will be found at the residence of A. B. Richards on west Seventh street, where all who desire treatment can meet him. We know personally about half of those whose names are on Mr. Rosenberry's sheet of testimonials and while we are utterly ignorant of the method of cure, it would seem as if there is something in it, as these people can easily be found, mostly in this county.

—Uncle Joseph Truit is again on the sick list. He has been in poor health for several years, but we hope it will not prove serious.

Saturday's Daily.

—It may be of interest to say that Mr. Moody to-day turned over to his bondsmen, in order to help get matters right, his extensive and valuable library of over 500 volumes. We have not met the bondsmen to get the details of the matter, but we presume this includes his law library and all. If so, it will go quite a ways to reduce that deficiency.

—The freight room at the Wabash depot contains a very dilapidated black casket and rough box. It was sent here from Detroit to C. C. Shaffer & Son and was unloaded from the west bound local yesterday morning. The door on the freight car next to the depot could not be opened, and it was taken out on the south side. The freight crew left it sitting on the side track, and went on with their work. Shortly they began to do some switching and the engin came down on the side track and struck the box.

—Frank Davenport is down from Chicago, for a visit with his people here. His wife has been here a week or so.

—Baltzer Koontz of Spencerville, remembered the printer to-day, as he always does about this time of the year.

—S. B. Mottinger writes us from Orientel, North Carolina, that he has moved to that point from New Berne, where he had been for some time Milling business, he says, is improving, but nothing else. We are pleased to learn that his folks are all well.

We are informed that T. H. Sprott will soon move his real estate and insurance office into the Gandy room, and that the express office will also go there, as there is ample room for both. We do not know who occupies the vacated rooms, but as they are desirable locations we presume they will not be idle long.

—There will be no more "devil's lane" in Indiana. Goddard's "devil's lane" bill passed the house. This bill does away with two adjoining land owners at the outs, keeping up two fences for a line fence. The penalty for refusing to join fences is from $10 to $15.

—Gov. Matthews and family are now at Los Angeles, California. He writes back as follows: "I arrived here yesterday and am enjoying the beautiful and warm weather. It is like May, but not prettier or more delightful than the springtime back in Indiana. The truth is, Indiana can't be beat."

—Mrs. Wash Askew was taken to Fort Wayne this morning where an operation will be performed. She was taken from her home to the depot in the bus under the care of Dr. Hines, and was accompanied by Mr. Askew to Ft. Wayne. It is hoped that she may be benefited by the treatment she receives from the doctors at that place.

—The McKinley clubs of Chicago will go to the inaugration with a long illuminated train, lighted by electricity and expensively decorated. Its engine will be named "Prosperity." We have been told that prosperty would appear about the 4th of March. Let the people rejoice. And as so many workman in Chicago have had their wages cut ten per cent, their employers will no doubt save enough to help defray this great expense.

—The burden of labor is constantly being lightened by new inventions, but nothing new has yet been discovered to brighten the hours of labor and make life worth living like Simmons Liver Regulator does. It's the King of Liver Medicines. A sluggish liver depresses one's spirits and causes languor, besides upsetting the whole system. But Simmons Liver Regulator tones up and strengthens the body.

—Hanna will be senator, Gov. Bushnell of Ohio, says he will appoint him when Sherman resigns, March 4. The bosses are now nearly all supplied. We know of no other qualification Hanna has to be Senator than his ability to raise and use funds in a compaign. And this sort of senator will represent Indiana after March 4, for the first time.

—Grandma Feagler, who has been in poor health for some time was given a dose of Ammonia Liniment through a mistake yesterday which came near resulting fatally. Dr. Baxter was called and administered proper antidotes, giving her relief, which otherwise would have resulted fatally, as she is 84 years of age.

—W. W. Humes passed through Auburn a few days ago. He will be remembered by our older people, as he was in business here about twenty years ago, but left suddenly and has not been back since.

Waterloo, Ind., June 22, 1896.

This is to certify that I was taken down with LaGrippe and Rheumatism and lay five months and a half. At that time I did not know my own family and could get nothing to benefit me in the least, then my wife managed to take me to Toledo, Ohio, to one of the best doctors and he told her to take me home on the first train as I might die before I got home. She brought home and called A. Y. Rosenbury in and I received treatment of him. My limbs were swollen very much and I suffered much pain and after the second treatment the swelling and pain went down and I haven't had any pain since and feel comfortable and well and give the praise to A. Y. Rosenbury. This I give voluntarily for the good of others.

MR. and MRS. DAVID WALLACE,

—Ex-President Harrison says he is glad he is out of politics. We should think so. It must be hard on a man to have to tell such falsehoods as he did in his speech at Auburn. He said if Bryan was elected every man who owed a debt at the bank, or a mortgage would have to pay it the next day. And this was no worse than what he said about silver dollars made under free coinage, the falsity of which we showed at the time.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way open to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

—Rev. E. Tatman of Clare, Mich., preached an able discourse at the Church of God on last Sunday evening to a very attentive congregation and he will preach there next Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock immediately after Endeavor meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to all to come and hear him.

WATERLOO, IND., Jan. 20, 1896.

I was taken with lameness in my hip joint and had all done for myself that could be done and still grew worse, till I got so bad that I could not rest in any position and could not bend my hip joint a bit. Then I was advised to call on A. Y. Rosenbury and he told me if I would stop everything else, he could cure me and I did so and in about two months after, I was well and comfortable and this has been ten months since and I am as well to-day as I ever was. This is a true statement in my case.

Respectfully,
THOMAS KELLEY.

—The lecture we advertised at Corunna, was well attended and gave excellent satisfaction to all. A similar one will be given there next Monday evening, March 1, by the same lecturer, Rev. Geo. Uinier, of Evanston, Ill. It is for men over sixteen, only. No admission fee, but a collection will be taken up.

—J. W. Dills and Chris. Curie, of St. Joe, were in town yesterday on some business matter, we suppose.

—Will Less, of Waterloo, was over here yesterday on some matters connected with court, we presume.

Anecdote and Incident

Tennyson used to tell the story of a farmer who, after hearing a red-hot sermon of never-ending fire and brimstone, consoled his wife quite sincerely with the naive remark: "Never mind, Sally; that must be wrong; no constitutooshun could stand it."

Voltaire and Piron were enemies. To their embarrassment they met one day at the country house of a friend. Piron got up early, went to Voltaire's door, and wrote upon it the word "Rogue." At breakfast, Voltaire smilingly said to him: "I thank you for showing your interest in my welfare by leaving your card at my door this morning."

Chinese cheap labor may yet ruin New Zealand. In Otago, where there are a good many Scotchmen, a contract for road-mending was awarded to the lowest bid, which was signed MacPherson. When the bidder appeared to sign the contract, he was yellow and had a pigtail. "But," said the official who met him, "your name cannot be MacPherson." "All lightee," answered the Chinaman, "nobody catchee contlact in Otago unless he named Mac," and the contract was signed.

Dr. Howley, Archbishop of Canterbury, who died in 1848, one day drove up to the door of the House of Lords in a coach-and-four, with liveried coachman and two footmen. A Quaker, who knew him, addressed him: "Friend Howley, what would the Apostle Paul have said if he had seen these four horses, and the purple liveries, and all the rest?" The archbishop, who was seldom flustered, replied with a benignant smile, "Doubtless the apostle would have remarked that things were very much changed for the better since his time."

An ancient resident of Willowby, whose conduct in one of the battles of the civil war had brought him under suspicion of cowardice, used to declare, "I didn't run away and stay till 'twas all over, no such a thing; I retreated in good order, that was all." One day a military man heard the oft-repeated explanation. "Well, my friend," he said, looking steadily at the hero of the retreat, "you say you retreated in good order, but I should like to ask one thing: About how fast did you go?" "Well," said the other man, surprised into telling the unadorned truth, "if I'd been at home and going after the doctor, I reckon folks would have thought somebody was pretty sick!"

Professor Blackie was once staying at Tynemouth. Before retiring to rest he informed his host that he had two requests to make: First, that they would allow his bedroom door to stand wide open; and, second, that they were not to be alarmed should they hear him singing in the middle of the night, for when he could not fall asleep, he wooed Somnus with a song. Accordingly, at 2 o'clock in the morning the old professor was heard singing in strong, cheery tones, "Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled," like a veritable Highlander on the warpath. And again, in the stillness of the night, he sung out: "Green grow the rushes, O." The last lines were sung in more subdued tones, and sleep came to him ere he finished his song.

Pacing Without a Driver.

Pacing horses are said to be coming into fashion again, and the New York Herald recently printed an account of one which really deserves to be famous. She belongs in Oshkosh, Wis., and has been trained by her owner—though little training was necessary—to pace against time without a driver. This, as the Herald observes, is a new departure in racing methods.

There is no pace-maker, no guiding, no whipping, no urging, no interference or prompting of the mare in any way. She knows her lines and goes through them without faltering, and with every sign of full confidence in her own knowledge and ability.

She is led to a point about a hundred yards from the wire, and is in perfect action when she receives the word "go" from the starter in the judges' stand. On getting the word the handsome animal quickens her speed, and around the track she goes as though running away. She keeps close to the inner rail, seemingly through instinct, though she never leaves the track, whether it be inclosed or not.

Every mile is paced without a break, and as evenly as though she were steadied by a skillful driver. The novelty of the performance and the dashing beauty of the intelligent animal win admiration wherever she appears, and the finish is always attended with enthusiastic cheering.

A notable feature of the performance is that the last quarter is always the fastest, and no demonstration from the crowd ever makes her lose her stride, or even slow up. After passing the wire, Marion seems to know that her task is completed, and her bright eyes search the track for the groom, who stands ready with cooling blankets a short distance up the stretch. When blanketed she is returned to the starter for recognition, and views the applauding crowds with an air of conscious pride and satisfaction.

Buttons.

Cloth buttons are machine made, a very intricate piece of mechanism stamping the metal, then cutting the cloth, placing it in position, drawing it over the button and putting the cap in place, leaving a projecting portion of cloth in the center for the thread. Rice buttons are made of the white earth used in chinaware. There is a variety of button manufactured, from the starch of rice, which is almost as hard and quite as durable as the china button. Horn buttons are cut from the material by machinery. Metal buttons are also machine made, a die stamping the metal into proper shape. Pearl buttons are turned by machinery from the oyster or mussel shell and afterward pierced by steam drills. The cheapest grades of collar buttons are made of the material used in chinaware, a better quality is turned out of bone; the metal collar buttons are manufactured by machinery from brass plates and afterward gilded by the electro-plating process. The brass buttons used on uniforms are made by machinery, a special die stamping the required initial or device on the face. The campaign buttons are made by photographing a portrait or device upon a plate of metal, a very intricate machine afterward stamping the face of the button into shape and fitting on the back and shank. The fancy and expensive buttons used on ladies' costumes are usually imported from France or Germany, where the best grades are hand-made.

BABY GETS THE LETTER.

North Shore Matron Made Miserable Because of Her Child's Prank.

Over on Bellevue place there is a young woman who is giving thanks that she is not in the penitentiary. One whole day recently she spent in dread of imprisonment at Joliet or at least as an inmate of the county jail, and every time she heard the rattle of a coming carette on Rush street she grew faint, for she thought the patrol wagon was surely after her.

The unhappy young woman is a great favorite in the exclusive circles of the north shore and is the wife of a prominent young business man. She is the proud mother of a little girl, who is never denied anything that she wants, and if she sees anything she generally takes it. One morning recently the letter carrier called as usual at the house and left a large package of notes, invitations and letters. Among them was one that belonged to the same number in another street. The young woman sent it to the hall tree, to be given to the postman at his next call. When the carrier came the maid reported the mistake, but could not find the letter. The carrier made complaint about it, and said he must have it when he called again.

The poor young matron by this time was thoroughly frightened. With her house maid she renewed the search, but it proved fruitless. In her misery her beautiful 3-year-old baby came in from her walk, accompanied by her nurse. The mother took her little one upon her lap to recover her composure, and asked the nursery maid if she had seen anything of the lost letter. The nurse thought a moment and then exclaimed:

"I think the baby took it!"

One of the amusements of the little one was to always carry something in her hand when going out for a walk. Upon thinking a moment she remembered that the child had something white in her hand when they started for a walk, but the nurse did not remember seeing it after the first few moments. Then the young mother's misery began all over again. She knew now that the penitentiary was her doom, and she sat down and waited for the letter carrier to come to seal her fate. She met the postman on the front step as he made the rounds for the third time that day and told him that she was ready to take her punishment; that her baby had carried the letter off and lost it.

"Yes, I know," returned Uncle Sam's messenger. "I just delivered it. Some one found it on the street this noon and dropped it in the mail box, and I just took it to his house."—Chicago Chronicle.

Quaint Headgear.

Some of the fancy dress balls that are so essential a part of the observance of the holiday season have revealed in the metropolis a headgear that seems decidedly novel, but which is in reality a revival of a favorite style of the period of Louis Quatorze. It is hardly so suggestive of French fashions, however, as of those of Egypt or some equally remote place, and its appearance in New York at this holiday season has awakened a vast deal of comment and surprise.

Perhaps the most surprising thing about this massive headdress is that when it has been worn this season its outlines and colors have been managed with such skill that it has been not grotesque, as would be supposed, but effective and becoming. One form of the headdress which was designed to be worn with a gown of French blue satin, cut in very old-fashioned style, was also of satin in a very delicate shade of French blue.

For the most part it greatly resembled a hood, the back of the headdress being very loose and baggy, and the sides made to seem like huge circular earpieces, but being really rosettes of the satin, with a center of gold embroidery. The fluted projection in front was held in place by a band of gold which extended across the upper part of the forehead. This band was one of the most effective parts of the headdress, and was studded with a variety of brilliant jewels.

The object of this hood-like head-covering seems to be to conceal every vestige of the hair, and the stiff tabs which form the back of the headdress accomplish this aim very effectually. Not a trace of hair, not a single escaping curl, emerges from this very comprehensive head cover. And the young women look like maidens of some extraordinarily demure and exceedingly old-fashioned period.

Japanese Fans.

There are many curious uses for fans in Japan. The umpire at wrestling and fencing matches uses a heavy one shaped like a huge butterfly, the handle being the body, and rendered imposing by heavy cords of silk. The various motions of the fan constitute a language which the wrestlers fully understand and appreciate. Formerly, in the time of war, the Japanese commander used a large fan having a frame of iron covered with thick paper. In case of a charge, it could be shut, and a blow from its iron bones was no slight affair. One notable variety of fan is made of waterproof paper, which can be dipped in water and creates great coolness by evaporation without wetting the clothes. The flat fan, made of rough paper, is often used as a grain-winnow, to blow the charcoal fires, and as a dust pan.

The Ladies of the White House.

MRS. M'KINLEY will be the nineteenth wife of a President to occupy the proud position of mistress of the White House during the administration at Washington. The establishment over which the nation's first Chief Executive presided was in Market street, Philadelphia, and it was not till near the end of President Adams' first term that the executive mansion was ready for occupancy. Mrs. Adams was a woman of great energy and strong will, and to these her husband owed much of his success in life. They were tenants of the White House only four months, and as the succeeding tenant, Jefferson, was a widower and a bohemian at heart, little formality and pomp attended his receptions. All his daughters were married, and he loved to have actors, artists and singers throng his house. Mrs. Madison, the next mistress of the White House, was noted for her beauty, and, like Mrs. Cleveland, she had a remarkable memory for faces and names, which added largely to her popularity. While Mr. Madison was President the executive mansion was burned by the British, and he was obliged to rent a house to take its place. Here pretty Dolly Madison held her receptions for the thirteen remaining months of her husband's administration. The house is said to be haunted now, and nobody will live in it.

Mrs. Monroe was tall and graceful, with winning manners. The great act of her life was performed before she entered the White House as its mistress. When Mr. Monroe was minister to France she personally interceded for a respite of the government sentence of death against Madame Lafayette, and secured the release of that lady.

Mrs. John Quincy Adams was an extremely delicate woman, and could not undergo the fatigue of a public reception. She was possessed of great refinement and literary tastes, and wrote very pretty poetry. She used to serve cake and wine at her receptions. Mrs. Andrew Jackson did not live to become the nation's hostess, dying before her husband was inaugurated, and Mrs. Harrison lived just one month after her husband took the oath of office. She was very beautiful in youth, and fond of quietness. John Tyler had two wives while in the White House. His first spouse was very beautiful, but as she was partially paralyzed her daughters did the honors of the time. His second wife was the first bride ever brought to the executive mansion. Although his term lasted only eight months after her marriage, she made a brilliant reputation as a hostess. Mrs. James K. Polk, as a strict Presbyterian, did not approve of dancing, and this has ever since been discontinued at White House entertainments. Mrs. Zachary Taylor and Mrs. Fillmore were both admirable hostesses, and Mrs. Pierce made many warm friends during her husband's incumbency. During the Buchanan administration Miss Harriet Lang, a niece, did the honors for the bachelor President.

Mrs. Lincoln was fond of display, restless and eccentric, and was little understood. Mrs. Andrew Johnson was an invalid at the time of her husband's election. Mrs. Grant was a typical woman of the age, and created a happy atmosphere about the executive mansion. Mrs. Hayes dispensed with wine, and dressed in a plain silk robe at the time of her husband's inauguration. Mrs. Garfield was destined to rule the executive mansion for only six months before her husband died. President Arthur was a widower, and gave some magnificent banquets. Mrs. Harrison was a practical, thoroughly good woman, who brought many real home ideas to the White House.

Mrs. Cleveland is probably the most popular Chief Executive's wife this country has ever known. The great secret of her success lies in her charming manners and wonderful memory of faces. If Mrs. McKinley, with all her goodness and gentleness, can take the place in the hearts of the people now occupied by Mrs. Cleveland, she will indeed be fortunate. The merry prattle of the three little Cleveland children will be sadly missed during the next administration, as the McKinleys are childless. Mrs. McKinley is a very sweet-looking woman, with large, handsome eyes and soft gray hair. She has a passion for flowers, and will find a great source of pleasure in the large conservatories belonging to the executive mansion.

Mrs. McKinley is an invalid, and so it is feared that she will not be able to endure the strain incident to the receptions usually held at the White House. It is hoped she will set the fashion for future President's wives of sitting at her receptions, and giving up the custom of handshaking. She has a most illustrious example to follow if she chooses to do so, in Martha Washington, who received all her guests seated.

LADIES OF THE WHITE HOUSE.

City of Pekin.

The city of Pekin is one of the oldest in the world, but it was not made a capital until Kublai Khan, somewhere about 1282, fixed his court there. Under the Mongols the name of Pekin was Khanpalik, or City of the Khan, and this title was easily converted into Cambaluc, by which name it is known in the accounts of those times. Pekin is now divided into two parts; the northern portion is the Tartar City, and contains about twelve square miles; in this are the palaces, government buildings, troops, and military barracks. The southern part is the Chinese city, and is more populous than the Tartar, less of its space being taken up by gardens and public buildings. The population is estimated at different figures, but 2,000,000 appears to be a fair estimate.

A wall separates the Tartar from the Chinese city, and a wall of varying height surrounds the whole, that of the Tartar section being about fifty feet high, and that around the Chinese section some thirty feet high. These walls are of brick and stone filled in with earth and paved on the top with slabs of stone, affording a promenade twelve feet wide. There are sixteen gates in all, and each gateway is fortified with towers of stone, and other towers are fixed at intervals of about sixty yards all around the walls. These towers project fifty feet from the outer side of the walls, and those at the gateways have in front of them a fortification of semi-circular shape, so that the gate must be entered from the side and not from the front.

The Tartar city is divided into three enclosures, each being surrounded with its own wall, and each inside of another. The innermost of these is the Prohibited City and contains the imperial palaces and offices. Its circumference is nearly two miles; the wall is covered with imperial yellow tiles, which look brilliant when seen from a distance. The enclosure next outside of this is occupied by the government offices and by the army appointed to keep guard over the Emperor and his family. The next outside of this is the outermost of all, and consists of dwelling houses and shops.

A WASHINGTON DEBUTANTE.

Miss Mary Wilson, Daughter of the Postmaster General.

Miss Mary Wilson is the eldest daughter of Postmaster General Wilson and is one of this season's Washington debutantes.

Miss Wilson was born in Washington about eighteen years ago at the home of her maternal grandfather, Prof. Huntington, of Columbian University, but spent the first few years of her life at the old family home in West Virginia. She was educated at the Hollins Institute in Virginia, from which she was graduated last June. She is devoted to her music and books quite as much as the gayeties of society life, and her sweet voice charms all who hear her sing.

Like all other Washington girls, she declares allegiance to the wheel, and in a very fetching bicycle suit she is often seen spinning over the smooth asphaltum pavings of the Capital City. She has her mother's cordiality of manner, and her merry, blithesome disposition makes her popular with all who know her. Miss Wilson is a decided blonde, with nut-brown hair which the sun glints with just a trifle of his own rich red.

MISS MARY WILSON.

Big Trade.

The doctor up in a Kennebec town recommended sea-water for an old farmer's wife who was suffering from some ailment, and the farmer started for the seashore with a jug.

The farmer had never seen the ocean and must have had an idea that it was private property. Else he decided that doctors never prescribe anything that's free. At any rate, he walked into a store on the beach and asked for a jugful of sea-water. The proprietor looked him over and told him to go down and help himself. When the farmer asked him how much the price was, the trader nearly tumbled over, but he recovered and charged a quarter.

About a month afterward the farmer showed up again with his jug and was told to go out as before and help himself.

But the tide was out his trip and the old man was obliged to walk about a quarter of a mile across the flats. As he was paying a quarter on his return he pointed over his shoulder with his thumb at the distant water line and remarked: "By Jim Hill, what a gosh-darnation of a trade you've been havin' sence I was here last!"—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

A Pin in the Heart.

The old-time idea that the slightest touch of a foreign substance on the heart means certain death was shattered years ago. One of the most remarkable cases ever heard of, however, was that described in a paper read before the Association of American Physicians some years ago by Dr. Peabody. It was of a case where a pin was found in a human heart after having been there for an indefinite period. The point of the pin was distant about five millimeters from the external surface of the heart. The pin seemed eroded, and was broken by the scissors in dissection, without becoming displaced. There was no evidence of recent local inflammation, but that part of the heart in the neighborhood of the protruding head of the pin was greatly thickened and snow-white, and firmly adherent to the edge of the head.

Strange They Should Quarrel.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

"Now is the accepted time," and those who throw away present opportunities do so at their peril. Trust to-morrow, and you may do it to your own destruction.—Rev. F. A. Horton, Presbyterian, Philadelphia, Pa.

The treaty between Great Britain and the United States is one of the greatest events in modern history, and closely connected with the advancement of the kingdom of Christ among men.—Rev. R. Thomas, Congregationalist, Brookline, Mass.

Right is ever on the scaffold; wrong is ever on the throne. And so it is that man must believe in a future state, wherein all falsity shall be revealed and justly punished, and all truth shall be made known.—Rev. J. W. Chapman, Presbyterian, Philadelphia, Pa.

Sometimes I am asked to go and hear from a departed spirit. Fancy going to hear from the dead! Well, this spirit business is about run out. For what does a child of God want to go where they turn out the gas?—Rev. D. L. Moody, evangelist, at Boston, Mass.

There is only one thing absolutely invincible in this world—a true Christian conscience. The most sublime spectacle in all creation is a true Christian conscience, defying the powers of darkness, the powers of evil, laughing to scorn all passion.—Archbishop Ireland, Roman Catholic, St. Paul, Minn.

The world has always moved in cycles of 500 years each. One of these cycles closes with this century. We are at a critical epoch. The century is going out amid great changes, the result of which no man can foretell. The old world is coming to an end, and a new world is being born.—Rev. R. H. Newton, Episcopalian, New York City.

The Lord takes care of our reputations. It is perfectly safe for a woman to wrap about her the perfect mantle of her womanhood, and wherever she may go she is just as safe as she is here to-night. I have mixed with the lowest of the fallen, and have for the first time to be offered an insult by the most hardened of men.—Miss Jessie Ackerman, Baptist, Chicago, Ill.

Without the admission of man's eternity of life, man's immortality in this great scheme of being, man would be but a brute, with no excuse for existence, no reason for thought, entirely apart from the mighty plan of the universe, which in infinite numbers of ways speaks unmistakably of life after death, and points to that great consummation for man.—Rev. J. W. Chapman, Presbyterian, Philadelphia, Pa.

The restlessness of society in our day is not a sign of death, but of life. In it we have an essential element in the science of society that betokens the approach of the coming kingdom. The forces arrayed against truth and righteousness are to-day many and various. Old implements of warfare will not answer any more than the old wooden ships and plows of fifty years ago.—Rev. Dr. Harcourt, Methodist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Repentance is merely the starting point toward a good life, but there is a repentance with a mental reservation. There is a kind of repentance which is only half repentance, but no matter how thoroughgoing repentance may be, the work of grace does not end there. Education, discipline, prayer must follow. The thoroughness of the conversion will depend much upon all these.—Rev. George L. Perin, Universalist, Boston, Mass.

WORE HIS GRIZZLY COAT.

Jas. L. Kernochan Astonished and Amused Schoolboys.

It was this uniform that astonished and amused the school boys of Hempstead, L. I., and caused the wearer to seek refuge in a store to escape their taunts. Mr. Kernochan is an eminent New York society luminary, and is proud of his bear-skin coat. It cost him $800.—New York Journal.

IN A GRIZZLY COAT.

Gypsum for Roofing.

Gypsum has been discovered in large quantities in Big Horn County, Wyo., and is being used by the settlers for roofing their houses. Mixed into a thin mortar and spread upon the roof, it soon becomes as hard as adamant, and makes a most excellent protection against the elements.

OLD SOLDIER AND YOUNG MATRON.

Both Bear Testimony to the Curative Powers of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

From the Palladium, Richmond, Ind.

John S. Seaman, of No. 13 South 16th street, Richmond, Ind., was a soldier of the civil war, having served in the 69th Indiana Volunteers. During his army service he contracted rheumatism and a complication of malaria, diarrhoea and other troubles, from which he could not free himself after returning to civil life, until four years ago. The following is the story of how he got rid of his troubles:

"I had never been well since service, rheumatics, liver out of order, and occasional diarrhoea was my usual condition until four years ago, when I was persuaded to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My health at once began to improve, the rheumatism has left me, my bowels do not trouble me and I am nearly as well as before service. I am still taking the pills, and I expect to until I am entirely well."

Mrs. Hannah Genn, of Richmond, Ind., was another person willing to bear cheerful testimony to the virtues of Pink Pills. She said in substance:

"I was a fearful sufferer from rheumatism, and was entirely disabled from it. I was weak and nervous from pain and at last confined to my bed. Nothing that I could find gave me relief, until I was induced by a friend to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I had not long to wait for improvement, which was steady and sure, my appetite came to me, pain disappeared, and by the time I had taken three boxes the rheumatics and nervous affections had disappeared."

Mrs. Genn is a young woman of but 27, and lives with her husband at 522 North 16th street, Richmond, Ind.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

THE YEARS ARE PASSING BY.

We watch, as from an open door
Their passage through time's corridor;
Each shadow, in its falling, slopes
Across the graves of buried hopes;
The pulse of being slower beats
Through winter snows, through summer heats,
As faith and hope and love grow cold
As we grow old, as we grow old!
The years are passing by!

The years are passing by!
Time's record hath such pages blurred,
With hasty deed, with bitter word,
Such sad mistakes mark all life's years
We scarce can read, because of tears.
We see dead faces on the walls,
We hear dead voices in the halls,
We touch some hands on bended knee,
We kiss some lips we cannot see—
The years are passing by!

The years are passing by!
They carry with them as they go
The rain, the sunshine and the snow;
They leave behind the drift of days
Wherein each soul some penance pays;
Some hopes we have, but not our own!
Some loves we cherish, not alone;
And there are leaves and faded flowers
That tell sad tales in memory's hours.
The years are passing by!

The years are passing by!
The seal of silence on our lips
We closer press. Time's umbra dips
To deeper darkness down the lane
Through which we walk to hide our pain.
We smile and smile, as one who bears
A life untouched by grief or cares,
But, when in solitude we wait,
We bow our head at sorrow's gate.
The years are passing by!

The years are passing by!
Another joins the passing band!
Oh, is there not some other land
Where compensation for all ills
The measure of life's being fills?
We wait the answer, but in vain;
The shadow falls; a sense of pain
Rests on us wheresoe'er we go,
And whispers of the sod and snow.
The years are passing by!

My Last Card.

People tell me that I am very successful, and I suppose I ought to consider myself fortunate. To-day I am counted among the leading singers, and few concert programmes lack my name. But it was not ever thus, and I may frankly say that I owe my success to one of the most lucky accidents that ever occurred in this world.

I had come to the end of my resources. When most people say those words, they simply mean that they will have to retrench expenses a little, give up their carriage, postpone their winter visit to Nice until another year, and so on. But in my case it meant that I was very near that point at which the workhouse seems the only way of sustenance.

I was a baritone, trying vainly to secure some sort of a livelihood by my vocal efforts. But influence is perhaps more useful in the professional world than anywhere else, and influence I lacked.

I could not turn to my relations in my hour of need, for not one of them would have acknowledged me. My family were all of that class which a Scotch poet has called the "Uuco' guid," and they were so bigoted that the very fact of my singing for my living put me beyond the pale of their sympathy. No use, therefore, applying to my own flesh and blood.

To whom, then? Friends? Yes, I had a few friends, but those who had money wouldn't lend it, and those who would lend it hadn't any.

Foolishly enough, I thought that if I gave up singing and tried to find work in less ambitious directions, I should be successful. Alas, how soon I discovered my mistake. The lower one goes, the harder the struggle becomes—if there is little room at the top, there is absolutely no room at all at the bottom. I found this out when I had tried in vain to obtain a position first of all as clerk, then shopman, then dock laborer. Everywhere the cry was "Full up," and there seemed no variation in this disheartening message.

It sounded in my ears like a death knell, and every day my position grew worse and worse. One by one my few belongings left me, until at length there remained only the suit in which I stood, threadbare and patched, and my dress suit, to which I still clung—for without it, how were engagements, if ever engagements came, to be filled? Yes. The evening clothes must remain, come what might.

I now lived in a garret in Bloomsbury, where I owed four weeks for rent. My landlady, good-natured woman as she was, was now becoming impatient, and I knew that in a few nights, unless something were done, I should be roofless and without food. An awful situation truly.

One foggy Thursday evening I climbed the stairs to my wretched room, and saw a letter thrust under the door. Opening it, I found that it contained a concert ticket for a performance to be given that evening at a great hall in the West End. Tickets were often sent to me in virtue of my professional position, though heaven knows a loaf of bread would have been more welcome.

The church clock struck 6. There was still time to dress and go to the concert if I so desired, and after all, it would be better to spend the evening in a warm, well-lighted hall than in the gloom of a London garret. I decided, therefore, to go the concert.

I made a hasty toilet, and just as I was completing it, there came a tap at my door.

"Come in," I said quickly.

In answer to my invitation, Mrs. Huxtable, the landlady, presented herself.

"Mr. Lennox," she said, speaking hastily and nervously, "I've just looked in to ask you when you think you'll be able to pay me somethin' to go on with. I'm not a 'ard woman, as you know, but I've got a bedridden husband and plenty of little ones as well, and I must think o' them as well as o' other people. When can you settle?"

I tried to speak calmly, as I replied: "Very soon, I hope. At any rate, I will do my best. More than that, Mrs. Huxtable, I can't say."

She mumbled something, and was about to retire, when she drew out from her pocket a small visiting card.

"This must be yours, Mr. Lennox," she said, giving it to me. "I picked it up in the room this mornin' after makin' your bed. Good night."

I looked at the piece of pasteboard. Yes. It was one of my visiting cards, and it reminded me of the days when my worldly affairs had been very different, and when people were glad to have me at their houses. Long since I had been without such a luxury as a card, and it came upon me now as a messenger from a far-off and well-nigh forgotten period. Mechanically I put it in my pocket, and then extinguishing the candle, I went slowly down stairs.

A thick fog was making all things pestiferous, and it seemed to overwhelm my entire being with disgust of life and living. I cursed my hard fate a thousand times, and in my heart there rose a despairing prayer—a prayer for death. This world was unendurable—let the other begin when it would, for surely no after existence could be more awful than this.

My way to the concert hall led me through the Strand, and near the Temple an irresistible impulse led me down one of the narrow streets touching the Embankment. Then I went and leaned on the stone parapet, and looked down into the fog-covered stream.

As I looked, there rose in my heart a sudden and overwhelming desire to end my life then and there, and I climbed upon the parapet, about to fling myself down into the dark depths below. I hesitated. The old, old thoughts, which Hamlet has put into words of wondrous beauty—words which surely must represent the thoughts of all them that have contemplated self-destruction since the world began—were with me now, and I said to myself: "Suppose the hereafter should be more bitter than the present—how then? how then?"

I drew back. A better hope sprang up in my heart. I would live on and fight life's battle to the end. Let them who had committed deeds of shame seek such an end as this—for me, whose only desire for extinction was born of misfortune, a worthier end. And so, the better decision won the battle.

It was a great relief to pass from the gloomy London street into the cheerful and brilliantly lighted concert hall. Already a great crowd had assembled, for the programme held some of the world's most famous names in the musical world, among others that of Signor Luigi.

Although his name was Italian, he was as much an Englishman as myself; but, like many singers he had adopted the foreign title for professional reasons. I had always been specially interested in listening to Luigi, for many persons had told me that my voice resembled his—in fact, some had gone so far to say that if he and I were placed in competition, I should do better work than he. But Luigi was flattered and courted, and obtained his hundred guineas per song, while I—well, those who have read the preceding lines will know the difference between us.

Luigi received a tremendous reception on this occasion, and sang two songs. He was rather late on the programme, and when his performance was ended, the bulk of the audience, including myself, rose to go. As I passed out into the street I ran up against a man walking rapidly. He apologized brusquely, and catching sight of him under a lamp, I recognized the singer whom I had just heard, Luigi.

A curious impulse took hold of me. I would ask Luigi to help me. Perhaps in the hour of his own triumph, he would hold out a helping hand to the stumbler on the way. I ran after him and soon came up with him. Touching him lightly on the arm, I said:

"Excuse me, but may I have a word with you?"

He turned round very abruptly, and said:

"Who on earth are you? What do you want?"

His tone was rough in the extreme, and all hope died within me as the harsh tones fell on my ear. But I put my pride in my pocket, and said hastily:

"My apology for thus troubling you must be that I am absolutely penniless. Ah, no, I don't ask for charity," I said quickly as I saw his hand moving in the direction of his pocket. I ask for aid of another kind. I am a singer. I believe I have some measure of ability, but I can't find an engagement, though heaven knows I've done my best. Will you help me to find one?"

He looked very unamiable as he replied: "Really, your behavior is unconventional in the extreme, sir. To waylay a man in the street and ask for assistance in this manner is something quite new to me. However, give me your card, and if I hear of anything suitable, I will let you know."

I drew out my last card, which my landlady had fortunately handed me that evening, and gave it to him. Without deigning to glance at it, he thrust it in his waistcoat pocket, and gave me a brusque "Good night," passed on.

A moment later, however, I saw him stopped again by a passer-by, evidently an American. I heard the latter congratulating him in hearty terms, and I did not doubt that already I was forgotten by the successful singer as completely as though I had never crossed his path.

On my way home that evening I had a slight stroke of luck. I fell in with Charlie East, an old schoolfellow, and he hearing of my critical condition, insisted on lending me a sovereign. Out of this I gave Mrs. Huxtable something on account, and went to bed in a happier frame of mind than I had for weeks.

Next Monday there came a letter which took my breath away. It ran thus:

"United States Concert Bureau,
9 George Street, W.,
Nov. 2, 188—.

"Dear Sir—Mr. Kent one of our directors has handed us your card with a view to our engaging you for a series of concerts promoted by this agency, to be held between now and the ensuing spring. Unfortunately, Mr. Kent has been called away to New York since he had the pleasure of meeting you, so that he will be unable to go into matters with you personally, but if you will call here at your earliest convenience we will endeavor to meet your views as far as possible. Very respectfully yours,

"United States Concert Bureau,
(per) G. Willis, Secretary."

Two feelings struggled for the mastery in my heart, as I read these lines—amazement and joy. Amazement that such a letter should have been addressed to me—joy that it had come at all.

My first impulse would have been to go straight to George Street, but further reflection showed me that such a course would be impolitic. Evidently the letter had been written under the impression that I was a leading light in the musical world, and too much haste on my part in interviewing the Bureau would probably destroy that impression. I decided, therefore, to write a plain acknowledgement, and I did, adding that I would call as soon as my engagements permitted. I could not help smiling ironically as I wrote the last phrase.

On the following Wednesday I went to the office. There I was ushered into a small room, littered with papers, where a young man sat writing. He rose to receive me with much deference.

"Good morning, sir," he said, as he placed a chair for me. "Sit down. I'm very sorry that Mr. Kent isn't here to arrange matters with you; but as I told you in my letter, he has been summoned away. He heard you sing last Thursday night at the big concert at Adelaide Hall, and he decided at once that you should be among our baritones for our winter and spring shows. That's, of course," he added quickly, "if we can come to terms."

As he said these words, the solution of the mystery flashed across my mind. Luigi had handed my card to the American to whom I had seen him talking after I left him, believing in the hurry of the moment that the card was his own. The American had then left the card with his people, telling them doubtless (in the off-hand manner in which our trans-Atlantic cousins manage these affairs) to engage the singer named on that card. Yes. That was the secret of the mystery. My last card had turned up trumps indeed.

What followed at the interview I need only touch upon in the briefest possible manner. The terms offered me were such as made me feel inclined to jump from my seat with joy, but naturally I did nothing of the sort, and behaved as much like a sane person as my delight would allow me. Before I left the room I had signed the contract for the whole series of concerts.

The first concert came off three weeks later. How I lived through the excitement preceding it I hardly know. My excitement was simply overwhelming, for I knew now that the great chance of my career, eagerly waited for, longed for and prayed for, had come at last. Monday night, the night of the first concert, would decide my fate for me.

It came at length. I trembled violently until the moment arrived for my appearance, and then all my fears left me, and I faced the brilliant and mighty audience with steadfast heart. I sang my first song.

When I look back upon that night, I look back upon the happiest night of my life. After my first song, the enthusiasm was intense, and after my second, it was recalled five times. My triumph was complete.

Little remains to tell. My progress from that night on was a triumphal march—engagements poured in, the newspapers chronicled my successes day after day. By one lucky stroke, I had achieved fame and fortune.

Later on, of course, the whole truth came out; but Luigi, strangely enough, instead of being furious, seemed rather amused. He met me one day in Piccadilly long afterward, and holding out his hand, said:

"Congratulate you with all my heart, Mr. Lennox. Funny thing that I should have given your card in mistake for my own, wasn't it? The fact is, I couldn't have accepted the engagement in any case, for I was full up. Glad you're doing so well. Have a cigar?"

I accepted his invitation, and as I did so I could not help contrasting the manner in which people treat you when you're down on your luck, and when you're making a fortune. Funny, isn't it? But I owed it all to that little piece of pasteboard found by my landlady in a corner of a London garret.—Tid-Bits.

The German Soldier's Rations.

The German soldier does not get enough to eat, so the Berlin officials have discovered, due, it is represented, to the avarice of the army butchers, who are not only reaping a big profit on the contract price, but harvesting a second one also by skimping the volume and weight of meat in delivery. The German soldier gets a meat allowance of two and a half ounces for his noonday meal, and after that he is given very little substantial food during the rest of the day. The Berlin officials have suggested as a remedy a revision of the army supplies contracts, to cut down the profits of the butchers and devote the savings re paying for an increase in the per capita rations of the soldier.

He Hates Bismarck.

It is well known that Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria, hailed with satisfaction the downfall of Bismarck whom the former has never forgiven for his part in the events which led up to the Austro-German war. It is related that the Austrian ruler recently declined to receive a member of the Bismarck family, saying curtly: "I am not only an emperor, but a man of honor, and I associate only with men of honor."

Thunder and Lightning.

The sound of thunder may be heard for twenty or twenty-five miles; with the ear to the ground much farther. Lightning is reflected for 100 to 200 miles.

In Old Egypt.

An explorer recently found in Egypt a bronze bowl and a series of iron tools of forms quite unlike any known in Egypt, and they are thought to belong to an Assyrian armorer about 670 B. C. These tools, comprising three saws made for pulling, not pushing, one rasp, one file, several chisels and ferrules, a scoop-edged drill, two center bits, and others, are of the greatest value in the history of tools, as showing several forms of an earlier date than was thought possible. They are probably of Assyrian origin.

The Spartan Virtue, Fortitude,

Is severely taxed by dyspepsia. But "good digestion will wait on appetite, and health on both," when Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is resorted to by the victim of indigestion. Heartburn, flatulence, biliousness, will cease tormenting the gastric region and liver if this genial family corrective meets with the fair trial that a sterling remedy deserves. Use it regularly, not spasmodically—now and then. It conquers malarial, kidney, nervous and rheumatic ailments.

Strict Justice.

Two Arabs sat down to dinner; one had five loaves, the other three. A stranger passing by desired permission to eat with them, which they agreed to. The stranger dined, laid down eight pieces of money, and departed. The proprietor of the five loaves took up five pieces, and left three for the other, who objected and insisted on receiving half. The cause came before Ali, who gave the following judgment: "Let the owner of the five loaves have seven pieces of money, and the owner of the three loaves, one; for, if we divide the eight loaves by three, they make twenty-four parts, of which he who laid down the five loaves had fifteen; whilst he who laid down three had only nine. As all fared alike, and eight shares was each man's proportion, the stranger ate seven parts of the first man's property, and only one belonging to the other; the money in justice must be divided accordingly."

Rapid Telegraphy.

Machine telegraphy has been so perfected that now 8,000 words per minute have been transmitted with one instrument. This astonishing rate requires that the armature register 2,600 impulses per second, the tape moving 27 feet per second.

HOUSE BILL 295.

(Introduced by Hon. C. M. Brown)

A BILL FOR AN ACT TO REQUIRE THE LISTING OF BONDS, NOTES AND OTHER EVIDENCES OF DEBT OR PROMISES TO PAY MONEY, FOR PURPOSES OF TAXATION, PRESCRIBING THE DUTIES OF CERTAIN OFFICERS IN CONNECTION THEREWITH, AND FIXING PENALTIES FOR THE VIOLATION THEREOF.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, that all persons, companies and corporations owning or holding bonds, notes or other evidences of debt, or obligations or promises to pay money, within the State of Indiana, shall, between the first day of April and the first day of May, of each year present the same to the Township Assessor of the township and county where the person owning or holding the same resides, to be by said Assessor listed for taxation; and it shall be the duty of said Assessor, at the time, to place a stamp upon said note, bond or other obligation, bearing the words "Listed for Taxation," and the date when the same was so listed, and the name of the Assessor shall be subscribed thereto in his own handwriting.

SEC. 2. Should any persons, company or corporation, holding or owning any bond, note of other evidence of debt or promise or obligation to pay money, fail, for any reason, to present the same to the Township Assessor, at the time and for the purpose prescribed in the foregoing section, the said person or persons, company or corporation, shall present the same to the Board of Equalization of the said county, at their next session, to be by said Board listed for taxation. Upon presentation to said Board, the same shall be stamped in the manner provided in the preceding section, except that that the name of the President of said Board shall be subscribed to said stamp, instead of the Township Assessor.

SEC. 3. Should any person or persons, company or corportion, who may be the holder or owner of any of the several obligations described in sections 1 and 2 3 of this act, fail, for any reason, to comply with the provisions of either of said sections, the said person or persons company or corporation, shall thereby forfeit the right to collect any interest thereon, and shall be entitled to collect recover thereon the principal sum, and no more. The debtor, or person or corporation upon whom rests the duty or obligation of paying the said debt, or any one in his or its behalf, may, at any time within three days after the maturity thereof, tender the amount of the principal sum due thereon to the holder or owner thereof, and if such tender be not accepted and such obligation dischargd, said holder or owner shall not, in any action thereon recover more than said principal sum, and shall not recover any attorney's fees or costs in any suit brought to enforce the payment of the same; and said debtor shall recover, in such suit reasonable attorney's fees as will compensate his attorney for making a defense thereon. It shall be the duty of any court rendering a judgment on any of said obligations not listed for taxation, to state in its finding and judgment that the same had not been listed for taxation, and it shall thereupon be the duty of the Clerk of said court, within forty-eight hours thereafter, to certify said fact, in writing, to the Auditor of the county where the same should have been listed for taxation. It shall be the duty of such County Auditor, within ten days thereafter, to list the same for taxation, extend the same upon the tax duplicate, and to enter upon the margin of the Order Book, opposite the entry of said judgment, a notice of a lien by said county upon said judgment, for the amount of tax which should have been justly due to said county thereon, had the same been listed for taxation. And it shall be the further duty of the Clerk of said court, when said judgment is paid, to withhold from the owner of said judgment the amount of such tax, and to pay the same over to the Treasurer of the proper county. Should any County Clerk, County Auditor or County Treasurer fail or neglect to discharge the duty imposed upon him by this section, he shall thereby become personally liable, and liable upon his official bond, for the payment of said tax to the county to which it belongs.

SEC. 4. All bonds, notes and other obligations described and referred to in the preceding sections shall be valued for the purpose of taxation at their face value, with accumulated interest added, except where the owner or the agent of the owner shows by his or her affidavit that the value of said note or obligation is less than its face value, and upon the making and filing of such an affidavit, with the proper officer or officers, the said notes or other obligations shall be listed for taxation at the amount stated in such affidavit.

SEC. 5. None of the provisions of this act shall apply to a non resident of the State of Indiana if said non resident or his agent shows by his affidavit that said note bond or other obligation has been duly listed for taxation and taxed in a State other than the State of Indiana, or in any Territory, or in the District of Columbia; but in all cases where such facts are not shown by affidavit, as herein provided, and said non resident holds as security for the payment of said obligation any mortgage upon real estate in the State of Indiana, all of the foregoing provisions shall apply: Provided, The holder of said mortgage shall be required to list the said obligation in the county where such mortgage is recorded.

SEC. 6. All affidavits made pursuant to the requirements of this act shall be deemed to have been made in the county where the same shall be filed, presented or used, and the maker thereof may be prosecuted for any perjury committed thereby in such county.

MR. SPEAKER:

Your committee on Judiciary, to which was referred House Bill No. 295, introduced by Mr. Brown, has had the same under consideration, and begs leave to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that said bill do pass.

Coughs are cured as they were 50 years ago.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has no equal as a remedy for coughs, colds, and lung diseases. Where other soothing elixirs palliate, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral heals. It is not a cheap cough syrup, which soothes but does not strengthen; it is a physician's cough remedy, and it cures. It is put up in large bottles, only, for household use. It was awarded the medal at the World's Fair of ninety-three. It has a record of

BACK FROM KANSAS

Mrs. Edward Barker, formerly Miss Callie Shull, reached here Saturday evening, from her home in Pratt county, Kansas. She was called here by the serious illness of her mother, Mrs. Shull whose home is with Mr. and Mrs. Fremont Smith below the Junction, Mrs. Smith being another daughter of Mrs. Shull. Mrs. Shull has been in poor health for some time, and her condition is considered serious. Mrs. Barker brings word that times are very bad in that part of Kansas as they have lost their wheat crop for several years, and have not raised enough to pay taxes, many being several years behind in taxes. Many are losing their farms to the loan associations. And in turn, the loan associations will lose heavily, many of them be ruined, by having to take so much undesirable land. The outlook there is very bad. Mrs. Barker has not been back to see her people for about eighteen years. She will probably visit the old home neighborhood in Smithfield before returning to Kansas.

THE GREEK TROUBLES

Dailies are filled with the Greek war news. A short history of the trouble will assist those who do not understand it.

Though Greece was one of the most famous and worthy of the ancient nations, she had fallen into misfortune, and one trouble after another reduced her to be the football of the newer nations of Eastern Europe and Western Asia. In 1821, she raised the standard of revolt against Turkey, which had ruled the country for several centuries. A devastating war followed, in which the Greeks were assisted by sympathizers from various European nations, including Lord Byron the English poet, and a few from America. The war was brought to a favorable close by the destruction of the Turkish fleet at Navarino, by the several fleets of England, France and Russia. This fight was an accidental matter. The Turkish fleet was at anchor in the bay, when a storm drove the other fleets to the same shelter. There was no war between them but the Turks seeing them sailing hastily that way, thought a combined attack was to be made, and opened fire. But the others not knowing what else to do, opened fire also. Not a Turkish ship escaped, and the three nations after that gave the Greeks encouragement. This was in 1827. A government was formed and a president for seven years chosen, but in 1831 he was assassinated. No trace of the ancient Kings of Greece existed, so in 1832, a king was chosen in the person of Otho, son of king of Bavaria, and his throne was backed up by the powers above named, who having got mixed up in the matter took an active interest in the new kingdom. Otho never was popular and in 1862 was forced to resign. Then a vote was taken among the people, and nearly all favored Prince Alfred of England. But the three friendly powers had a promise out that no one connected with either of their royal families should have the place. But on request, England named one, Prince William, of Schleswig-Holstein, became George I, of Greece, the present king. But when Greece became independent she only got back her central states. Crete, a large island to the south remained the property of the Turks. This has always been a source of dissatisfaction to the people of Greece and of Crete, for nearly all of the latter were Greeks and Christians. Troubles have arisen every few years owing to Turkish misrule. Recently it became unbearable and the Cretans revolted. The Greeks saw a good excuse, and they have landed troops on the island, but are careful to avoid its chief cities from which the powers have told them to keep away. A new power, Italy, is added to the interested powers, but those who accidentally got entangled in the Greek cause at the sea fight of Navarino in 1827, seem still to have a friendly feeling for the Greeks and would like to see her get Crete back once more. Whether they will help her to do this at the risk of a war with Turkey, remains to be seen. It may be they are using Greece to bring on a war that will end the Turkish empire

Gibson's New English Girl.

Charles Dana Gibson, in illustrating a short story that narrates the romance of a Princess, for the March Ladies Home Journal, has created what he regards as his typical English girl. She is said to be as distinctive and striking as his famous American girl, and while essentially different she is quite interesting. The drawing will illustrate Robert C V Meyers' story, "The Morning After the Servis Got In."

SOUTH SIDE BUSY

Workmen are Repairing and Erecting New Buildings at the Hoop Factory.

A visit to the south side of town will convince one that all needed to keep the unemployed of the town busy is good, hustling men at the head of our manufacturing industries. We need a few more men like A. C. Robbins and Chas. McClellan who are spending a large sum of money in establishing the new hoop factory. They have a dozen or more of men at work there now. Some are reroofing the large brick building and others are erecting the new building for the saw mill and still others are hauling the machinery and getting it in place. Every available inch of space about the mill is covered with logs. They have in all about 300,000 feet in the yards, 100,000 feet cut in the woods ready to haul and about 300,000 feet bought which has not yet been cut. They have enough logs in the yard to last them till August.

At DeWitt and son's band saw mill there is also a large lot of logs and the mill is running every day now.

The foundry is not out of work and it has been a long time since the employes have lost much time owing to the scarcity of orders.

The Auburn Mills under the management of Mr. Bishop, is also crowded to its utmost capacity. Mr. Bishop is making many friends in the county, by the excellent flour he turns out.

CHICAGO DISPATCH.

It will be remembered that about a year ago Joseph Dunlop, publisher of the Chicago Dispatch was arrested by the U. S. postal authorities on charge of improperly using the mails to send out a paper containing obscene matter. He was convicted in court but appealed. Now the U. S. supreme confirms the verdict of the lower court and the original sentence of two years in prison will have to be carried out. But Mr. Dunlop this week, comes out with a republication of an article he gave to the public at the time the first verdict was rendered against him. But it should be noted that he slides smoothly over the real offense for which he is to be punished. He speaks mainly of his career as a newspaper man——with the late Wilbur F. Storey of the "Times" and other noted journalists. He speaks of his success and his business ideas etc, but fails to hint at the especial charge which sends him to prison and which the columns of his paper unerringly prove against him. This charge is, for publishing obscene and immoral advertisements and is shown by copies of the paper containing advertisements in which women solicit men to visit them for the purpose of "baths and massage treatment." The best thing Mr. Dunlop can do is to take his medicine. If a man cannot publish a clean newspaper, the best place for him is to accompany Mr. Dunlop into his enforced exile from decent society.

FOUND A ROBBERS' ROOST.

South Bend Times

Baz Rupel, Thursday afternoon saw man issue in a mysterious manner from a pile of manure on the Oliver farm southwest of the city. He notified the police and Officer Stickley was sent out to make an investigation. He caught the man and later Officer Stickley and Mihalski with C. B. Penfield, J. Penrod and Mr. Rupel made an investigation. They could find nothing, however, and finally got the man who had been arrested in the afternoon and who gave his name as Frank Seroski to show them how things were located. In the manure pile was found a trench ten feet long and two feet wide. At the end was a boxed in compartment closed with a car door. This room was three feet high and five by eight feet in length and width. The other cave was similarly built, but not quite so large. A search revealed nothing more than an old pair of pants, a pair of boots and some ladies' stockings which showed evidence of having been worn and looked as though they came from some clothes line.

The caves make an excellent place for concealment and there is no sign to indicate their presence. The smaller cave was boarded up with pickets.

A Life Saved.

Marvelous cures of throat and lung affections are made daily by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Miss Annie Swan, Petersburg, Va., writes: "My brother was attacked by a bad cough and cold, and it was thought he had consumption. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup was used, and to our great surprise it made him well and hearty. There is no better cure in the world than this Syrup." Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is sold everywhere for 25 cents.

STRANGE CASE

Stealing is not so strange a matter, nor is stealing an overcoat, not even the stealing of a $25 overcoat. But the strange thing is the stealing of a $25 overcoat from a country editor. We bet it couldn't be done in Auburn. Read the following from the Avilla News of Feb. 18:

On Monday evening a tramp entered the office of the Ligonier Leader and stole Editor Thompson's $25 overcoat. He pawned the garment for $1.50 and jumped out of town, but was arrested at Cromwell. In default of $300 bail the tramp is now in hoc at Albion awaiting an investigation by the grand jury.

It is Thought by Many

when the Creator said to woman "in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children," that a curse was pronounced, but the joy felt by every Mother when she first presses to her heart her babe, proves the contrary.

Danger and suffering lurk in the pathway of the Expectant Mother, and should be avoided, that she may reach the hour when the hope of her heart is to be realized, in full vigor and strength.

"Mother's Friend"

so relaxes the system that the natural and necessary.....change takes place without Nausea.....Headache, Nervous or Gloomy.....Foreboding and at the trying hour makes Child-birth easy, as so many happy mothers have experienced. Nothing but "Mother's Friend" does this. Don't be deceived.

"Mother's Friend" is the greatest remedy ever put on the market, and all my customers praise it highly."—W. H. King & Co., Whitewright, Tex.

COUNTY MATTERS.

Friday's Daily.

In our telegraphic news in Tuesday's Daily, we find an item sent to Chicago by the wild eyed correspondent at Waterloo. The remarks about Mr. Sawvel are in part correct, but it is not true that the county has given up all the papers in evidence against him, as we understand it. And the arrangenent made to turn over property was not with the commissioners, but with his bondsmen. We are sorry this item appeared in the DAILY as we have endeavored to give only the news we knew to be correct. But as this was in the part of the paper printed in Chicago, we had no control over it.

To-day, Thursday, the Board of Commissioneas is still in session and working mainly on these matters Mr. Ernest is back again and at work examining the bundles of orders and in this is assisted by Bert Robbins, who is known to be an expert accountant. Just what lead they are following now, we cannot say.

In this connection, we wish to put in an earnest protest against the apparently thoughtles remarks in the Dispatch this week. It says among other things:

"Somehow the doings around the court house are a little shy. The Dispatch heretofore conservative is getting tired of the conundrum business. It looks as if whitewashing was going on. If the law permits the arrest of Frank Dills, it will permit the arrest of his accomplices."

Of course it will. And unjust criticisms like the above do not make the job of securing justice to all, any easier The commissioners and prosecutor as well, as the county attorney, are having a hard job, anunpleasant job, and need for their success, not unfriendly criticism, but sympathy and assistance. And it would not be of advantage to the ends of justice, if these officials would get out on top of the court house and call aloud "We have done so and so," or "We are going to do so and so, to-morrow." No success was ever won in this way. No doubt the people are impatient. They have a right to be. It is one of the good signs that they are. But the people are also sensible and they know this trouble cannot be cleaned up by getting out and beating tom-toms on the streets. And all know, that as soon as can be consistently done, the whole matter will be given to the public. Let us rely on the judgment of the officers and be guided by their course. We have faith enough in them to believe they will do their duty properly, and that there will be no "whitewashing."

Saturday's Daily.

It is a matter of regret, that our contemporaries cannot use more judgment and patience in their remarks about the investigations now going on. Yesterday we called attention to the Dispatch. To-day, it is the Butler Herald. We find this in its items, gathered here in a recent visit:

"It is given out that all shortages will promptly be made good and the matter kept as quiet as possible."

We have no idea who gave authority for such a statement. Certainly not the commissioners nor the county attorney, Mr. Rose. For even if they were disposed to hush up matters, they could uot control it. Any citizen can come in and start the ball rolling And the grand jury, and the prosecutor are still to be heard from. Suppose the commissioners should feel like dropping the matter, and then the grand jury should bring an indictment against a guilty party? Who would then hush it up? What would the prosecutor do? Would the judge ignore an indictment? We fancy not. And we do not believe the commissioners have a thought of hushing anything. At all events we shall not try to prejudice the public against them, till we see what course they carry out. We believe the officers now at work on these disgraceful affairs, are of the same opinion with the COURIER, that wrongdoing should be punished, no matter who it hits. We do not believe in the too frequent course, of punishing severely, the boy who steals a dollar and the man who steals a coat, and then make it light on the more accomplished crook who defrauds or steals by the thousand. And we believe the men now accused should have a speedy trial, and we believe and hope that our authorities take the same view and will carry it out. If they do not go to the bottom of this business, there will arise against them, a cry they will find it hard to resist. But as we have said, we believe they will prove equal to the emergency. If the acused are guilty, punish them. If not guilty, let it be known, and release them from bonds and from suspicion.

The Butler Record don't like what we said of Sheriff Stroh, and says "the COURIER ought to be prosecuted for what it said about Sheriff Stroh." We feel sorry that Mr. Stroh's friends keep stirring this matter up, for each one winds up by admitting the truth of what we had said. The Waterloo Press last week, in its defense of Stroh said almost the same words we used. And now the Record in finding fault because we said the sheriff's court fees of $2 a day, had not been turned over to the county, does not deny the truth of it. It simply says, "The matter of $2 per day is now before the supreme court, and it will depend upon their decision whether the sheriff's who have taken them will have to return them or not." In this connection it should be noted that Coop Ralston did not wait for a decision, but turned these fees in at once. And now if the supreme court decides that a sheriff can take asalary andtake fees also, Mr. Ralston will get his money back.

The Record adds: "We have never learned when the COURIER became an authorized interpreter of the law." Well, we never heard of such an official before, but it is high time that every honest and intelligent taxpayer should begin to interpret the law for himself. And it was the understanding of every man in the state of Indiana, when that salary law was passed, that every officer would have not one penny more nor one less than the salary plainly stated in that law. It was for the purpose of cutting off extra fees, that the salary law was made. And we submit it to any taxpayer if those salaries are not fixed as high as they ought to be. There has already been too much trifling with fees and salaries.

The latest new feature of the trouble seems to be about Ex-Commissioner J. W. Platter. It seems that the last order he got for his salary was $42, and it now turns up as $92. This order must have been drawn at the December term, 1890, as he retired from office at that session and was succeeded by Mr. Henderson. He sold the order to someone, but how, when or by whom it was changed does not appear plain. Platter says he never got an order as large as that, which is no doubt true.

Horrible! Horrible!

Innocent children by the thousand are constantly dying of diarrhoea whose life might be saved. How quickly the lemon works! Flesh speedily wastes away as though subjected to fire. You try change of water, and change of food and change of air. The handiest and quickest and safest thing you can do is to procure at once a bottle of Dr. Hand's Diarrhoea Mixture, at any drug store, for 25c. It's wonderful how quickly it brings good results. Fischler & Son.

Our Sentiments, too.

We are always glad to agree with a contemporary on public questions. Hence we clip with pleasure the following found in the dispatch:

We are indebted to Prof. C. M. Merica, county school superintendent, for a bound volume of the tabulated report of educational statistics by Prof. D. M. Geeting, superintendent of public instruction. This volume is a very complete and comprehensive exhibit of the work done in our public schools throughout the State during the past two years. The work reflects great credit on Mr. Geeting and the county superintendents who furnished him with the data of this volume. Indiana can be proud of her public school system. There is no better in the union. The public schools in DeKalb county under the supervision of Prof. C. M. Merica were never in better condition than at present. His successor will have to be diligent in order to keep up the high standard now existing.

You don't know where you got that cold. Do you know where you can get the cure for it? Every drug store keeps Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It cures coughs and colds.

Thirsty Warriors.

The way the Spanish authorities and soldiers in Cubamanage to get rich out of the war reminds one of some of the tricks of our own people in the rebellion. Curtis, the able correspondent of the Chicago Record is in Havana, and writes home in a way to throw new light on the way the Spanish army is managing to put down the rebellion. It will be remembered that soon after Weyler took chief command, he issued a general order, stopping the sale of tobacco to parties outside the island and especially to the United States. He claimed the profits of most of the Cuban cigar business in the United States, went to support the rebels. This was probably true. And his order seemed so patriotic from a Spanish standpoint, that Weyler got a considerable cheap fame. Now it turns out that it put about $80,000 into his pocket. The Spanish dealers in tobacco in Cuba were so deeply interested in the order that they divided up handsomely with Weyler. And the order was so framed that it allowed dealers in tobacco to fill all contracts dated before Weyler's order was issued. At once American dealers began to arrange to have their orders dated back, and paid well for it. This gave Weyler and his Cuban friends another divide. It also appears that subordinate officers are playing corrupt practices. At certain seaports, supplies for the army come in, and the officer receipts for the whole cargo. The goods are then supposed to be consumed by the troops. But as a matter of fact about a quarter of them the officer in charge sends to Havana or some other city, where a friend of his, another officer, receives them as private goods, sells them to merchants and other dealers, and divides the money with the general or other officer who sent them to him. So both get rich off the war. Even the common soldier, who is thus cheated out of a part of his food and clothes by his superior officers sets to work to sell something to get more or better supplies. The only thing he can turn into cash without being caught, is ammunition and cartridges. These he sells to anyone, even to those he knows to be favorable to the rebels, and who he knows will give the cartridges to armed rebels. But he needs the money, and so takes a risk of being shot in the first battle, by one of his own bullets. And so on, in every department of the service. No wonder Spain finds the war a costly one, and that she is rapidly becoming bankrupt.

Something to Know.

It may be worth something to know that the very best medicine for restoring the tired out nervous system to a healthy vigor is Electric Bitters. This medicine is purely vegetable, acts by giving tone to the nerve centers in the stomach, gently stimulates the Liver and Kidneys and aids these organs in throwing off impurities in the blood. Electric Bitters improves the appetite, aids digestion, and is pronounced by those who have tried it as the very be t blood purifier and nerve tonic. Try it. Sold for 50c and $1.00 per bottle at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 2

Bids Were Too High.

The bids for the erection of the new court house building at Fort Wayne, the Sentinel claims, are all too high. The lowest one submitted to the county commissioners was that of an Indianapolis firm, it being $559,850, for the court house proper, and $591,283 including power station, etc. It is thought by many citizens that the bids submitted ought to come under the half million mark before the contract is let. The county commissioners are considering the matter carefully and thoroughly. It would seem that the best interests of tax-payers require an advertisement for new bids. If this is done it is thought the bids will be much lower than those already submitted and thousands of dollars may be saved to the county.

My Baby.

CANTON, O., 2-23-'96—Hand Medicine Co.—"My baby had been having wind colic since her birth and she was two months old when I procured a bottle of Dr. Hand's Colic Cure. In less than two weeks' time she was cured of having colic and has never had it since. We had tried several other medicines, but they did no good. I can cheerfully recommend your colic cure to be the best. MRS. P. H. BECK." Sold by Fischler & Son, 25c. 2

It May Seem a Little Early to Talk

Spring Clothing,

But we don't think so. We are preparing for a very large Clothing Business the this Coming Season. Already the new suits are beginning to arrive. To say they are pretty doesn't express it. DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, and Commerce, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

THE MESSAGE

That Consul General Lee Sent to Secretary Olney.

The New York Herald publishes what it asserts is a copy of the famous dispatch cabled by Consul General Lee to Secretary of State Olney. The dispatch is as follows:

"Olney, Washington:—Have demanded release of Scott, American citizen, who has been kept in prison and incommunicat without due process of law eleven days.

"Trust you appreciate the gravity of the situation and are prepared to sustain me. Must have war ship immediately. How many ships have you at Tampa, Key West and southern waters, and are you prepared to send them here, should it become necessary?

"I cannot and will not stand another Ruiz murder.

(Signed.) "LEE."

MASSING TROOPS.

Turkish Soldiers Being Rushed to the Frontier.

Salonica special: The massing of Turkish troops and munitions of war on the frontier is proceeding with feverish haste. All the soldiers on furlough have been recalled and eleven batteries of artillery, a regiment of cavalry and two batalions of infantry have gone from here, Monastier and elsewhere to Elassona. Two additional batallions of infantry have reached Katenra. The reliefs from Smyrna, Brusa, Trebizonde and elsewhere in Anatolia are on their way here and to the frontier, where a total of six divisions will be formed, with headquarters at Elassona.

A Bad Collision.

An electric car on 103rd street line was caught between two trains going in opposite directions on the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad at Chicago. The car carried four passengers, besides a motorman and conductor, and three out of the six were killed outright. The other three were severely injured and one or more of them may also succumb. The accident is said to have been due to the recklessness of the motorman, as the gates were down. He made no effort to stop, and the car crashed through the gates and was struck by the trains.

Scott Jackson's Confession.

Cincinnati special: Scott Jackson, who with Alonzo Walling, will be hanged March 20 for murdering Pearl Bryan, is writing a confession which, it is reported will be forthcoming in two weeks. He will sell it to the highest bidder and expects to get $10,000 for it. A Cincinnati newspaper, it is said, has already offered $5,000 for Jackson's confession, telling where Pearl Bryan's head is, and how and where she met death. It is stated that Jackson has someone on the outside who has power to make a deal.

Sanguilly Free.

Senor De Lome, the Spanish Minister residing in Washington, states that he has received an official telegram from Madrid, Spain, that the crowd regent has signed the pardon of Julio Sanguilly. The further statement is made that this action was taken by the Spanish Cabinet last week and will be published officially in the Madrid newspapers. The telegram conveying this information to Senor De Lome is signed by Tetuan, the Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Mother and Child Die of Starvation.

Clarksville (Tenn.) special: Two persons, mother and child, are reported to have died from want of food and attention in what is known as Gallows Hollow. A woman named Belle Fontroy was taken sick, and her child and herself lay without attention until the child ate the flesh from its hands. The condition of the woman and child was discovered by the man collecting their rent, but too late to save their lives.

Blown to Atoms.

Nitroglycerine explosion occurred in the Gould oil field, near Steubenville, Ohio. Two men were blown to atoms. Houses were knocked down and trees were torn up by the roots. The report of the explosion was heard ten miles away. The names of the killed and injured cannot be ascertained for some time.

Nansen Coming to America.

A Boston dispatch says Dr. Fridtjof Nansen will visit the United States in the fall, having been engaged for a lecture tour by the Redpath Lyceum Bureau and Mr. Heard. Dr. Nansen speaks perfect English.

Against Theater Hats.

Both branches of the City Council at Louisville, Ky., have passed an ordinance prohibiting the wearing of hats by women in the theaters and public halls.

Fire at Piqua.

Fire at Piqua, O., destroyed the National Linseed Oil plant known as the "W. P. Orr mill No. 2." Loss on building and machinery, $40,000. Fifty thousand bushels of barley were also burned. Insurance, $42,000. Origin of the fire unknown.

Dashed Out His Brains.

Benjamin Bayer, a schoolboy, while scorching on his bicycle at Indianapolis, plunged headlong into an express wagon, dashing out his brains. Death was instantaneous.

EASTERN.

The German-American Bank of Tonawanda, N. Y., was closed by order of Superintendent of Banks Milburn, on the ground of insolvency.

While workmen were digging a trench on the property of Henry C. Dreer, near the Delaware river front, in Riverton, N. J., they unearthed five human skeletons. A physician said that one gave evidence of comparatively recent burial. The latter was apparently the bones of a white man of mature years. The skull was fractured and seemed to have been crushed in by a blow. No definite theory can be advanced as to how the skeletons came there. The spot where they were found is back of the Faunces' fish cabin, which is used by shad fishermen in the spring.

The great flood has done its worst in the vicinity of Pittsburg, Pa. A cold wave broke the back of the flood and reports from all points between Pittsburg and the head waters indicate that all danger has passed. The rivers in that vicinity reached a higher stage than at any time since 1884. Hardly a point in the Monongahela valley, from Fairmont to Pittsburg, escaped damage. Mills built supposedly out of harm's way were submerged. Works along the river were shut down and workmen forced to flee from the rising tide. The damage can only be approximated, but it is not less than $1,500,000 in the Monongahela valley. From the headwaters of the Youghiogheny also came a torrent that brought with it destruction to valuable property. Railroads were unable to move trains. Private houses built in the low lands in the suburbs have been flooded. The poorer classes who lived in small houses and shanties along the river's bank are homeless, while the truck gardeners having hotbeds in the bottom lands, with early vegetables almost ready for the market, have been ruined. In McKeesport the damage will exceed $500,000.

Captain William Howard Merrill, U. S. A., retired, died of cirrhosis of the liver after an illness of a month at his home in New York. He was born in Utica, N. Y., March 21, 1833, and was educated at West Point. At the outbreak of the war he offered his services to President Lincoln and enlisted in the Twenty-seventh New York Infantry. For his services at Bull Run he was made captain of volunteers. At the battle of Antietam he was captured and sent to Libby prison, from which place, after four months' confinement, he escaped. While in the prison he wrote a book reciting the terrors of life led by the unfortunates confined there. Upon reaching the Union lines again he rejoined his command and served throughout the war. He was mustered out of service Oct. 23, 1866, but immediately received his appointment as brevet captain of the regular army, which was bestowed for his courage at the battle of Bull Run. Sept. 10, 1868, he was made a full captain and sent to Governor's Island. He retired from active service Dec. 31, 1870. Captain Merrill was a friend of President Lincoln and for several months was attached to his staff in the capacity of aide-de-camp.

WESTERN.

George Frank, proprietor of a candy factory at Chicago, was killed almost instantly. He was caught in the flywheel of the engine.

The grand jury at Duluth, Minn., has just made a sensational report of rottenness in public affairs, and thirty-eight indictments are turned in.

Mark A. Hanna is to succeed John Sherman as United States Senator from Ohio. Gov. Bushnell Sunday gave out a statement to the press to that effect.

The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway elevator "A," at Toledo, Ohio, burned. There was 325,000 bushels of wheat in the elevator. The loss on elevator and grain will aggregate $355,000. Both insured.

The Secretary of State notified Mayor Carlson of San Diego, Cal., that permission was granted to land sailors and marines from the British war ship Comus at that port, to take part in the celebration of Washington's birthday, in conjunction with the forces of the United States war ships in the harbor, and to participate in the parade carrying their arms.

Twice within a month burglars have attempted to break into the house of Justice Hennessey at Chicago, but in each instance his servant girl was awakened and the thieves were frightened away. Recently the magistrate discharged the servant girl and bought a burglar alarm. The contrivance did not work, and Sunday morning, when he awoke, the justice discovered his trousers on the rear porch, with their pockets turned inside out, while the proceeds of his court docket the day before were missing.

Mrs. Louise Pitt Yokum, Dolores County, Colo., superintendent of schools, has refused a teacher's certificate to Prof. Victor C. McGirr, principal of the Rico public school, because he smokes. Mrs. Yokum takes the ground that a person who smokes is disqualified to teach in the public schools because teachers in that State are required by law to instruct the children against the use of tobacco. An appeal will probably be taken to the State Board of Education by Prof. McGirr, who is graduate of the Toronto University and is very popular in Rico.

Jack Davis, J. W. Flynn, Charles Reynolds, Charles Stewart, J. C. Hames and Frank Pierson have been arrested in Denver and at Colorado Springs on charges of conspiracy and grand larceny. The complainant is George E. Hannan, a well-known bicycle dealer of Denver. He bet $10,000 with Pierson that Bertie banks could defeat Paul Richie in a five-mile bicycle race. Hames was stakeholder and Davis, Flynn and Reynolds assisted in arranging the match. Just before the hour for the race Banks was arrested on a trumped-up charge. Richie rode over the course alone and Hames turned over $20,000 stakes to Pierson.

Mrs. Alice E. Crabtree, of Portsmouth, Ohio, was granted a divorce on the ground of neglect. Her husband is entitled to pre-eminence among the meanest men of the community if her sworn testimony is true. She says that in four years all the money he gave her was but $10; that she spent $5 of this to buy her sister a parasol to replace one he had lost, and that he borrowed back the other $5 to get his trunk out of pawn. The only money he ever spent for her, in any way, form or manner, was 5 cents, paid for a sack of peanuts he shared with her. She clothed herself and paid her own board. Both are young and come of prominent families.

At 2:30 Wednesday morning flames were discovered breaking forth from the roof of the Merchants' Exchange building at St. Louis. The fire started in the elevator shaft, presumably from defective light wires, and spread to the offices on the top floor. The damage was confined principally to the eastern, or office, portion of the building and was mostly caused by water, with which the roof was flooded. The offices on the fifth floor were damaged considerably, and those on the floors below suffered somewhat from water. The narrow streets and the mass of overhead wires hampered the work of the firemen, and had not the building been almost fireproof the fire would undoubtedly have destroyed it. The loss is $60,000; fully covered by insurance.

The Chesapeake and Ohio west-bound passenger train encountered a washout opposite Portsmouth, Ohio, Monday morning, and the engine, baggage and express car, mail car and one coach were derailed. A. G. Stout, supervisor of the Chesapeake and Ohio, was killed. The engineer, fireman, mail clerks and express messenger were all injured, but not seriously. The casualties are: A. G. Stout, roadmaster, riding on engine, skull fractured, died in half an hour; Engineer J. E. Fairhead of Cincinnati, cut on head, bruised leg and elbow; Fireman H. Myers of Covington, hip and leg bruised; Richard Maddock of Portsmouth, leg bruised; William Wolf, Portsmouth, leg crushed; R. J. Fite, express messenger, bruised about chest; M. A. Faulkner, baggage master, nose broken, face bruised, serious; F. A. Bradley, right shoulder and face bruised; L. C. Turner, Boonville, Va., leg sprained; John Artim Porter, Covington, cut in face; J. L. Gale, mail clerk, cut in knee and head.

FOREIGN.

Six persons were killed and several injured by an explosion of nitro-glycerine at Nobel's dynamite works, Ayrshire, Scotland. The explosion was heard fifteen miles from the works, and the concussion extinguished the gas lamps at Kilwinning, three miles away.

A London Daily News special from a place in Hungary called Hodmegae Vasarhely tells of the arrest of six men and two women accused of wholesale slaughter of relatives for the sake of securing about 100 florins apiece life insurance money. The murderers formed a society for getting rid of relatives. One man poisoned his father, mother, wife, wife's father, and others not related to him, and so gained several thousand florins. One woman murdered her mother, sister, and a neighbor. All the other murderers are charged with one crime apiece. A midwife planned the society, and, like several of her accomplices, is fairly well-to-do and intelligent. Seventeen bodies have been exhumed. The midwife confesses that she has been at the trade for many years, and always called in doctors when using poison to prevent suspicion. In every case now being investigated poison was administered and then a doctor was sent for, and in no case did any doctor suspect foul play.

Canea dispatch: A fusillade having continued since morning, despite the warnings of the foreign admirals, the united squadrons bombarded the insurgent camp outside of Canea. At 4:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon H. M. S. Dryad, H. M. S. Harrier and H. M. S. Revenge, together with one Italian, one German and one Russian ship, opened fire on the Cretan position where the Greek flag was hoisted some days ago, and ruined the house held by the Cretans. The flag was soon lowered and the order "cease fire" sounded after ten minutes. Thereupon the flag was rehoisted. The rocks around were crowded with Cretans. The Turks, encouraged by the fleet, opened a lively fusillade while the Cretans were removing the wounded. The Cretans had not replied during the whole performance. It was a somewhat melancholy and degrading spectacle. The foreign admirals have warned Col. Vassos, the commander of the Greek forces on the Island of Crete, of their intention to attack his troops with four men of war anchored off his camp, Aghioi Theodoroi, should he attempt to advance to the interior of the island.

IN GENERAL.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: "A large increase in the iron and steel business on account of sales covering eight to twelve months' production of the largest works, a better demand for woolen goods and slightly better for cottons, a gain which may prove lasting in boots and shoes, slightly better prices for wheat, cotton, wool and iron, and a money market well adapted to encourage purchases against future improvement in business, have rendered the last week more hopeful than any other since early in November."

Washington's birthday was generally observed. Pupils of our public schools—those who will bear the burden and responsibility of citizenship before the passing of many years—listened to words of wisdom and counsel from men of ripened experience, and hearts full of youth, hope and ambition swelled with nobler patriotic impulses. For the day the example of a man who has come to embody all that is desirable in American citizenship was placed before the youth of our land and they are asked to emulate him and, encouraged by his achievements and sterling worth, to strive for an equal measure of true greatness. Because he made possible "The parliament of man, the federation of the world." Business generally was suspended, and numerous gatherings of civic societies, where were delivered addresses telling of the honor, manliness and patriotism of our first President, testified to the spirit of reverence which now marks the day.

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company has placed an order with the Carnegie company for 65,000 tons of steel rails. At the lowest rate since the break in prices this involves an expenditure of considerably over $1,000,000. At the rate now quoted in the open market—$20 per ton—the purchase would amount to $1,300,000. Special importance attaches to this sale from the fact that the Canadian Pacific road has always sustained such close relationship to the Dominion Government as to be almost considered a government road. Indeed, there have been times in the brief history of the road when that Government has exercised proprietary control of the property. Owing to the relationships which they sustained toward it, two Governments have been wrecked by it—that of Sir John A. Macdonald in 1874 and that of Alex. Mackenzie in 1879. It is believed that this is the first purchase of American rails or, at least, the first of any importance that has been made in the American market by the Canadian Pacific company. The road was built in the first place with English rails, the Dominion Government permitting their entry free of duty to secure their purchase in Great Britain. It was the large purchases of English steel rails made by the Mackenzie Government that constituted the chief element in its overthrow.

SHIPS THROW SHELLS

CRETAN INSURGENTS IN HALEPA ARE BOMBARDED.

Crisis Affecting All Europe Now Believed to Be Near—Eyes of Diplomats Turned Toward Russia as the Powerful Ally of Greece.

Grecian Leader Warned.

War in grim earnest raged Sunday in Crete. Just a week previous the fleets of the powers landed blue jackets at Canea to maintain the peace, and ostensibly to prevent Greek troops landing at that port. Sunday these same squadrons trained their big guns on the strongholds of the Cretan insurgents and shelled them from their position. It was a day of the most intense excitement in Halepa. From early morning the insurgents had kept up a galling fire on the Turkish forts. The latter returned the leaden compliments with vigor, and what with the roaring of cannon and the whizzing of bullets the peaceably inclined people in the town had a frightful experience.

It became evident in the forenoon that the admirals on the cruisers were becoming uneasy over the condition of affairs. Dispatch boats flitted from war ship to warship and flag signals were exchanged, indicating that concerted action was being arranged. Meanwhile the decks of the cruisers were being prepared for action. Guns were unmasked and marines were lined up to meet all emergencies. The so-called rebels had been warned by couriers bearing white flags that if their firing did not cease the battle ships would take a hand in the desperate melee. These warnings were scoffingly disregarded, for upon their receipt the fusillade from rebel rifles only increased.

The time for action had come, and the tremendous roar of a discharged shell shook Halepa as if an earthquake had occurred beneath it. The first shot had come from Italian boats, and speedily all the other war ships joined in the bombardment.

CANEA, THE CAPITAL OF CRETE, SHOWING THE HARBOR AND NEIGHBORING BUILDINGS.

The fire was generally accurate, and the effect withering. The Cretan insurgents were driven pell mell from behind their breastworks, and, throwing away arms and accouterments, they hastily sought places of refuge from the hissing missiles of the fleet. The deadly ping of their bullets across the empty streets ceased, and as the firing of the big war ships stopped the cloud of gunpowder smoke floated lazily northward over the calm sea.

As Vassos has but about 400 men, and as the forces on board the four men-of-war anchored off his camp are probably six times that number, it is inferred that he will make no move until he hears from the Delyannis government. This new action of the powers is taken here as an indication that the Grecian scheme may yet miscarry.

The admirals issued a statement directed to Cal. Vassos, encamped at Aghioi-Theodori, not far from Platania. The document warns Vassos that it is the intention of the admirals to attack his troops should he attempt to advance to the interior of the island.

King George, it is said, spoke at the meeting, and intensified the patriotism of his people. But the odds are against him if the powers enforce their threats. The time is near at hand when the secret and scheming backer of Greece in its onslaught on Turkey must make his presence felt. Eyes turn Russiaward. Perhaps the Czar will soon relieve the terrible suspense from which Europe suffers.

None of the diplomats will talk, but it is evident the attitude of England is perplexing the cabinet. While Salisbury has refused to join the proposed blockade of Piraeus, British war ships, if reports from Athens are to be credited, are helping the Turks. Meanwhile all Greece is rejoicing over their alleged control of the Island of Crete. A huge mass meeting was held at Athens, at which an address to the king was adopted pledging blood and treasure to maintain Grecian supremacy in the island.

HOBART'S NEW HOME.

It Will Be One of the Handsomest in Washington.

Vice-President Hobart will occupy one of the most beautiful homes in Washington and one which will enable him to keep up the dignity of his position to the fullest extent. The inmates of the White House, even, might look with envy upon the inmates of the "Belmont," as the Vice-President will call his new home. "Fancy the beauty of the place," says a Washington correspondent.

A whole block of rolling ground, with lawns in good condition. It looks down upon Washington most haughtily, upon the monument, the Capitol, the new Library building, the tower of the postoffice building and all the beauty of the tree-lined avenues and streets. Belmont itself is a compromise between the formidableness of architecture that is rigidly old English and what is distinctly modern. The yellowish stone walls are so thick and take up so much room that the interior of the house is smaller than one thinks it ought to be after looking at the outside. The roof is red and the effect is good, especially when the stately trees that surround the house are in leaf.

From the housekeeper's point of view the arrangement of the house is satisfactory. Such details as butler's pantry, kitchen, servants' dining room and laundry will insure Mrs. Hobart an exemption from the trials of the servant question, and when the finishing touches are added to the house by the ornaments, rugs and hangings that Mrs. Hobart intends to bring with her the place will be ideal as a home and an excellent center of official hospitalities.

SPAIN MUST ANSWER.

Reparation Demanded for the Murder of an American in His Cuban Cell.

Spain will have to make full reparation and give ample apology for the death of the American citizen, Dr. Ricardo Ruiz, who was last week found dead in a prison at Guanabacon. The administration is determined to have a full investigation of all the circumstances without delay, and the Spanish authorities have already been given to understand that this Government will suffer no red tape to interfere with a prompt ascertainment of all the facts.

Secretary Olney cabled Minister Taylor at Madrid that Dr. Ruiz died under suspicious circumstances in the Guanabacoa jail, and directing the minister to impress upon the Spanish Government the urgent wish of the United States that all the facts be made known with the least possible delay. The Spanish are adepts at making promises of this sort, but as a rule much difficulty is experienced in securing their fulfillment. In this instance, however, Secretary Olney proposes to insist that every opportunity be given Consul General Lee to learn precisely how and under what circumstances Dr. Ruiz met his fate. If he was murdered the Spanish Government will have to make prompt reparation.

The only information thus far received by this Government from Consul General Lee is contained in two dispatches, one informing the department of Ruiz's arrest, and the second announcing his death in the Guanabacoa jail under suspicious circumstances. This cablegram called for a reply from the department, in which Consul General Lee was instructed to make a prompt and full investigation. Instructions were also cabled to Minister Taylor at Madrid, as already stated.

It is not true that Consul General Lee asked to have war ships sent to Havana. An official statement to this effect was made at the White House. The administration has no intention of sending a fleet to Cuban waters.

HANNA TO BE SENATOR.

Republican National Chairman Will Get Sherman's Shoes.

Mark A. Hanna is to succeed John Sherman as United States Senator from Ohio. Gov. Bushnell has given out the following statement to the press:

"It had been my intention to make no announcement in relation to the action I would take in the matter of an appointment to fill the prospective vacancy in the Ohio representation in the United States Senate until the vacancy actually existed. But, on account of the manifest interest of the people and their desire to know what will be done, I deem it best now to make the following announcement:

"When Senator Sherman resigns to enter the cabinet of President McKinley, I will appoint to succeed him Hon. Marcus A. Hanna, of Cuyahoga County, to serve until his successor is chosen by the Seventy-third General Assembly of the State. I trust this action will meet with the approval of the people.

"ASA S. BUSHNELL."

HOW UNCLE SAM SUFFERS.

The Cuban War Has a Bad Effect on Exports and Imports.

The present Cuban revolution dates from Feb. 24, 1895. In the preceding year, 1894, the exports of all American ports to Cuba amounted collectively to more than $20,000,000. In the same year the imports into the United States from Cuba amounted to $75,670,000, making a total commerce between the two countries of about $95,000,000 in one year. The figures of the fiscal year of 1896 show the extent to which commerce between the two countries has fallen off. The total exports from American ports to Cuba were $7,500,000, or about 30 per cent of the former volume of business. From Cuba into the United States were imported during the same period goods to the value of $40,015,000, or about 55 per cent of the former volume of business.

The chief item of American commerce with Cuba, the chief item of importation from Cuba into the United States, is, of course, sugar, and this item has fallen off about one-half. From 1895 to 1896 the importation of sugar into the United States fell off from 1,800,000,000 to 980,000,000 pounds, from $40,000,000 to $21,000,000. The other important items of import into the United States from Cuba are tobacco, bananas, drugs, wood and ore. The American exports to Cuba include in an ordinary year flour to the amount of 600,000 barrels (it has now fallen to about 300,000), coal to the amount of 400,000 tons, petroleum to the amount of 200,000 gallons (it is now 60,000), hams, tallow, lard, cotton goods and machinery. The devastation of Cuban plantations has not only reduced the number of exportable products of Cuba, but it has, moreover, decreased the market in Cuba for American products, for the planters, having no longer any valuable crops for export, are unable to pay for the articles heretofore sent to them from the United States.

It is estimated, on Cuban authority, that apart from the actual expenses incident to the prosecution of the war, the continuance of hostilities is costing fully $75,000,000 a year. Of this sum, $50,000,000 is figured as the loss from the burned or abandoned plantations, $500,000 from the horses taken for use by the soldiers of either army, and $500,000 as the value of the cattle taken for the commissariat. The destruction of towns, railroads, bridges, stores and farms, goes to make up the balance of the loss. Cuba's chief business is with the United States among foreign countries.

NEW BABY AT HARRISON'S.

Little Daughter Arrives at the Home of the Ex-President.

The anxiously awaited advent of an heir at the residence of ex-President Harrison in Indianapolis took place at 5:30 o'clock Sunday morning, when Mrs. Harrison presented her distinguished husband with a daughter, weighing eight and three-quarter pounds. When the announcement was made to the ex-President that the infant was a girl it was thought that a shade of disappointment passed over his face, but it passed away as quickly as it came, and he appeared to take much pleasure in the new addition to his household. Telegrams to friends throughout the country were sent announcing the event, and many congratulatory replies were received, some of them from the most distinguished men and women of the country.

It will be a year the 10th of April since the ex-President was married to Mrs. Mary Lord Dimmick of New York City, niece of his first wife. He is 64 years old and she is 42. The union has been most pleasant, although it was objected to by the two children of the general, neither of whom attended the marriage. During the last few months the children, it is said, have become more reconciled, and the daughter is said to have visited her father's house during a recent trip to the city. The friends of the family have been expressing the hope that the advent of a little Harrison might make complete the reconciliation.

News of Minor Note.

Katherine, Lady Grantley, wife of Baron Grantley, and daughter of William H. McVicker of New York, is dead at London.

Frank Frink and George Peyton were overcome by gas at Centerville, Ind., while repairing a crude oil tank belonging to the gas works. Their recovery is doubtful.

John D. Hart, owner of the steamship Laurada, has been placed on trial in the United States District Court at Philadelphia to answer the charge of violating the neutrality laws.

The State Supreme Court has decided that the city ordinance granting to the Illinois Central the New Orleans property on which the big Stuyvesant docks are located is null and void. The suit was one of the wharf lessees against the Illinois Central road and others.

NATIONAL SOLONS.

REVIEW OF THEIR WORK AT WASHINGTON.

Detailed Proceedings of Senate and House—Bills Passed or Introduced in Either Branch—Questions of Moment to the Country at Large.

The Legislative Grind.

The Senate adjourned at 8:15 o'clock Friday night, after having spent almost eight hours in continuous executive session on the arbitration treaty. No result was accomplished beyond voting down the motion made by Senator Nelson to postpone further consideration of the treaty. A very spirited debate on the general subject of the payment of claims found to be due against the United States was indulged in by the House during the consideration of the general deficiency appropriation bill. Mr. Richardson (Tenn.) had called attention to the apparent inconsistency of an item to pay the costs of defending suits, and the fact that the bill contained no item to pay the judgments. Mr. Mahon (Pa.), chairman of the War Claims Committee, made the statement that the House had been frightened by a "bogie man," and the just claims against the Government, instead of aggregating hundreds of millions, as was frequently stated, could be discharged with $10,000,000. The consideration of the bill was not completed. The bill carries $8,411,027.

Both houses worked hard Saturday, getting measures in shape for final action. Appropriation bills and conference reports were before the House for action. There is evident an intention to pare appropriations down to the last notch, and consternation reigns among members who have pet measures, affecting their particular districts, which they hoped to put through. Senator Sherman announced his purpose not to again bring up the arbitration treaty for debate so long as the appropriation bills are pressing for consideration, but if there should be a lull in this work he may renew his efforts to secure ratification. The Senate joint resolution for an international monetary conference looking to the adoption of international bimetallism was unanimously reported to the House.

The Senate spent its first hours Monday in listening to Washington's farewell address, read by Mr. Daniel (Va.), and then resumed consideration of the Indian appropriation bill for a time. The Loud 1-cent postal bill came in for some sharp criticism from Mr. Butler, Mr. Stewart, and others. The House passed the general deficiency appropriation bill and began the consideration of the last of the money bills, that providing for the naval establishment. A long debate occurred over the propriety of the appropriation of $1,310,000 for the Southern Pacific Railroad under the judgment of the Court of Claims, but the House by a vote of 102 to 138, refused to strike it out. The members who favored the appropriation for the repayment to members of the last Congress of salary withheld from them on account of absence carried the fight into the House, but were beaten, 92 to 122. Sixteen of the forty-eight pages of the naval bill were completed.

The House sent the naval bill, the last of the appropriation bills, to the Senate Tuesday. It was passed practically without amendment. The feature of the day was a political debate which occurred late in the afternoon on the subject of civil service reform. It developed during the consideration of a bill, which was finally passed, to permit the Governors of the territories to appoint certain officers of the territories in case of vacancies without the consent of the legislative councils, which is now required by law. The Senate made slow progress on the appropriation bills, disposing of only one item of the Indian bill, it being that directing the opening of the Uncompahgre Indian reservation in Utah. It involved a conflict with the executive branch, which has steadily resisted opening these lands, on the ground that they contained valuable mineral deposits. Mr. Vilas endeavored to have a royalty reserved to the Government, but was defeated in this and the clause was agreed to after an all-day debate. During the day a resolution by Mr. Mills, of Texas, was adopted, asking the President for information as to the death of Dr. Ruiz at Guanabacoa, Cuba.

Most of Wednesday was devoted to District of Columbia business. The conference report on the bill to define the rights of the purchasers of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad under the foreclosure sale was adopted. Attention was recalled to the Cuban question in the Senate by the presentation of three resolutions on that subject. One of these came by unanimous vote from the Committee on Foreign Relations and called for the immediate and unconditional release of Julio Sanguily, held at Havana. Another resolution by Mr. Allen, of Nebraska, calls on the President to effectively protect American citizens in Cuba, and for that purpose to send battleships to Cuban waters. A third resolution, by Mr. Hill, of New York, was agreed to, requesting the Secretary of State for the correspondence with Consul General Lee relative to Americans imprisoned in Cuba. A sensational episode occurred late in the day during the consideration of the Indian bill. Several of the New England Senators had criticised various items. This aroused Mr. Pettigrew, in charge of the bill, to some caustic recitals of barbarities practiced against Indians in Massachusetts in the early days. Mr. Hoar defended his State, and amid impressive silence arraigned Mr. Pettigrew, a New Englander by birth, for "befouling the nest in which he was born." Little progress was made on the Indian bill, and Mr. Allison warned the Senate that the status of appropriation bills was most dangerous.

Representative Sulzer, of New York, Thursday introduced a bill in the House declaring war between Spain and her colonies and the United States. A resolution calling on the President for all information concerning the treatment of American prisoners in Cuba was adopted. The Senate was storm-swept by such passionate debate, such extraordinary demonstrations in the crowded galleries and such frantic personal exchanges between the conspicuous figures of the Senate as to make the day one of the most memorable in the annals of the upper branch of Congress. Cuba was the theme and it seemed to call forth all the pent-up emotions of months. It brought about the complete displacement of appropriation bills, threatening their failure, and the advancement of the Cuban question to the very front of Senate business.

Notes of Current Events.

Mrs. Booth-Tucker, wife of Commander Booth-Tucker of the Salvation Army, became so ill in Brooklyn that she had to give up her work there, and was taken to her home in New York.

The business of the year just closed was the most remunerative experienced by the Suez canal, according to United States Consul General Penfield at Cairo, and the traffic aggregated almost $16,000,000 in value.

Joseph Murdock, of Scott County, Va., who was supposed to have been murdered twenty-five years ago, and for which crime "Bud" Lindsay served twenty-one years in the Virginia penitentiary, has returned to his former home. Lindsay died recently.

AN OLD TIME CANDY PULL.

When the wintry stars are winkin'
Winkin' at the brink o' night,
An' the pale cold moon is sinkin',
Sinkin' slowly out o' sight;
Then a blinkin' thro' my glasses,
My heart gets swellin' full,
An' I mind the lads an' lassies
At an old time candy pull.

Thar was Mandy Jones, the Parson's gal,
Land sakes! how my heart jumps!
An' Tommy Brown, as stout a pal
As ever took life's thumps;
An' Betsy Smith an' Jimmony Hill,
An' Sam an' Mary Dowd,
Whose daddy owned the ol' grist mill—
An' lots more of the crowd!

I mind we met at old Dowd's place—
His kitchen was the best—
An' the music o' the ol' mill race
Kept time to quip an' jest;
Then when the 'lasses was biled down,
I tell you it was fun
To pull it to a golden brown
Till it was proper done!

Then how we danced the 'Giny' Reel,
Chock full o' snap an' spunk—
All hands around now—toe an' heel!
Each lassie with a hunk
O' yellow 'lasses candy
Betwixt her laughin' lips—
Es? bedtime! Dear me, Mandy!
Don't it beat all how time slips?

TWO WIVES.

"It's grown chilly, hasn't it?"

"Oh, yes," said Agnes Lawton, with a sarcastic laugh. She was huddling in her dapper street gear before the pennon of crackling flame on her friend's hearth. "It's blown horribly chilly, Marion—for me!"

"Another quarrel, I suppose, with your husband?"

"A quarrel this time that ends everything. I'm going to my mother in Boston."

"Don't, my dear."

Marion Kingsland spoke thus in tones tranquil and low. She was swaying herself softly in a rocking chair, and she had folded her arms in a leisurely way. She was a large, blonde woman—not handsome, but with a beautiful figure and a face full of sweet gravity.

"Oh, you've always said that," replied young Mrs. Lawton, frowning at the fire. "But now I mean to disobey your counsel."

"Very well, Agnes; as you please. Remember I've always said one thing. Your husband loves you devotedly—"

"Ah, that's the very point, Marion! He loves me, but not devotedly. He"—and here Mrs. Lawton lowered her face and drew out the next words in a dogged, dragging undertone—"he is not faithful."

The oscillations of Mrs. Kingsland's rocking chair quickened the least little bit. "What husband is?"

"Yours."

"Oh, Trent—yes! I wasn't thinking of him." She colored, biting her lips. "What is the present trouble, Agnes? Tell me."

"It's very simple. I found a note in Fred's—I mean Mr. Lawton's—overcoat pocket."

"My dear Agnes, what were you doing there?"

"Doing there?"

"You were spying—jealously spying," said Marion, with her usual calm. "Admit it."

"You're crueler than usual, Marion. I was a fool to come here. Mamma will sympathize, however. I shall take the 3 o'clock train for Boston."

"Was the note very dreadful?"

"Oh, it told its own story. And, as you're aware, this is not the first time—"

"That you've gone through your husband's pockets? I know. And the signature?"

"Initials."

"I see. And a very violent quarrel followed."

"The most violent we have ever had. And the last we shall ever have."

Marion Kingsland stopped rocking. "Agnes," she said, breaking a pause, "I don't know a husband who in public is more respectful, more attentive, more positively gallant to his wife than yours."

"In public!" bristled the other. "What does that mean?"

"It means a great deal more than many a wife gets—many a wife of our acquaintance whom I've heard you openly pity in my hearing. Now answer me frankly. Might not that letter which you found and read have implied a flirtation, a passing sentiment, rather than the very lurid and scandalous interpretation you put upon it. I say, might it not? Think for a moment before you answer."

Agnes tossed her head, decked in a tiny bonnet of tangled pansies.

"Well, perhaps," she presently conceded, with distinct reluctance.

"Perhaps," repeated Marion. "Now that is at least an admission. It puts Frederick in a more pardonable light. But it does not excuse you from being most rashly indiscreet."

"Oh," fumed Agnes, "I do so detest that kind of philosophy!"

"We women can cultivate none that is sounder." "We women, Marion! How would you feel, pray, if your Trent—"

"Never mind my Trent, dear. Let us talk generalities for a few minutes. There's hardly a household that hasn't its Bluebeard's chamber."

"Except yours. And so you can afford—"

"Generalities, please, Agnes, just for a little while. There are Fatimas who do pry, and there are Fatimas who don't. The latter have by far the best time of it—that is, when their Bluebeards treat them fondly and courteously. Discretion is a wonderful safeguard to conjugal contentment. The moral obligation with men should be as strong as it is with women. I freely grant you that. But society does not grant it and in the lives of our great-great-great-grandchildren it will not practically employ any such system of ethics unless I miserably err. It is a system talked about, written about, and, if at some day it will be actively exploited, on that day everybody who now lives will lie, as I firmly believe, in graves whose deepest cut headstones have grown undecipherable blurs. The new woman may dream her dreams and even realize a few of them. But, after all, it is still a man's world, and a man's world for many centuries it must remain. Fatima will reap nothing by her curiosity except unhappiness. So many of them live and die in blissful ignorance. And it is so much better that they should. Men are men, and the leopard does not change his spots. Why not let well enough alone? A wife can tend and water her jealousy and her suspicion precisely as if they were two different specimens of fern in a favorite jardiniere. Of course marital neglect, ill treatment, rudeness, are all autre chose. But I have often taken a thoughtful survey, Agnes, of my surroundings. They are very much the same as yours, my dear. We often meet at the same teas, dinners, dances. We know the same set—the smart set, I suppose one would call it—and most of our men friends are married, like ourselves. And I've repeatedly asked myself, judging as much by what they don't say as by what they do say, if a vast amount of family torture may not be avoided by the simple process of Fatima refraining from all interference with Bluebeard's key bunch."

Here Agnes sprang from her seat by the fire and looked tearfully, impetuously round the tasteful sitting-room of her friend.

"Oh, Marion," she cried, "you tell me you are talking generalities, but to me they are the most piercing personalities! And why? Because I'm not only jealous of him—I'm jealous of you! From your serene heights of perfect married happiness, the wife of a man who worships you, as all the world knows, who is a model of every virtue under the sun and who probably never looks at a woman without thinking how far she falls below you, his ideal, it is easy enough to preach discretion and circumspection. You have the key to all your apartments. You're a Fatima with a Bluebeard who doesn't know the meaning of a locked door." Here Agnes laughed in a sort of hysteric way and pointed to a near chair. "That's one of his overcoats now." While speaking she slipped across the room and lifted a mass of dark broadcloth, holding it aloft.

"Why, yes," said Marion, raising her quiet brows in surprise. "He came back this morning after leaving for downtown and ordered a thicker one of Strayne because of the changed weather. Strayne must have left it there. He's a good servant enough, but he has his careless moods."

Agnes, with another odd laugh, thrust her hand into one of the pockets. "You've no fear of finding anything, you irritatingly happy Marion. You are—"

Suddenly she paused. She had drawn forth a lilac tinted envelope which had been raggedly torn open at one of its sides.

"A woman's hand, Marion," she exclaimed, "or I've never seen one! And the date of arrival four days back. It smells of violets too. Well, really!"

"Agnes!"

Marion went forward and took the note from her friend's grasp with uncharacteristic speed. She was pale already, but she grew paler as she scanned the superscription and then raised the envelope to her nostrils.

She loved her husband intensely and knew that he returned her love. Not the slightest incident of her life had she ever kept concealed from him, and she had always felt confident that on his own side there was a like absolution of confidence and candor. It stabbed her to the soul as she thought now that no forgetfulness had prevented him from telling her of this note. They led fashionable lives, but they led them together. For all that they might sometimes pass hours apart, their constant intimacy and comradery were beyond dispute.

For a few seconds she stood perfectly still, holding the letter. Then she went to the overcoat which Agnes had just replaced upon the chair and slipped the letter back into one of its side pockets.

She was a woman who had always been held to possess no common share of self-command. She justified this belief now.

"Bluebeard's chamber," she said, with a smile, but it was a smile quite dim and joyless. And then she raised one finger and put it against her lips in a gesure that not only symboled silence, but enjoined it.

Agnes watched her in astonishment. She knew that there was never any pose about her friend; that what Marion seriously did and said were done and said from a sincerity at daggers drawn with sham.

"And you'll never even ask him whom it's from?" Agnes exclaimed.

"Never."

"But you suspect—"

"No matter what I suspect—"

"And you'll never let him know you saw it and didn't open it?"

"Never."

"But this thing, Marion, will come between you and him. It may ruin your future happiness."

"That can't be helped. If it's what I think it is"—here her placid voice broke a little—"then letting him know would do more harm than good."

"But perhaps it is the merest trifle after all," said Agnes, she herself now generously turning consoler despite her own sorrows; "some request for financial aid or a loan of money from some woman whom we both know."

"Perhaps," returned Marion musingly. And then it passed through her mind: "He would have told me if it had been that. He tells me everything—or so till now I've believed."

"Ah, good morning, Agnes," a voice suddenly said in the half-open doorway. "Having a gossipy powwow with my wife, eh? You didn't expect to see me here at this hour, did you? You thought I was too much of a poor, hard-working Wall street drudge, didn't you? And you were quite right. I am."

"Trent," faltered Marion.

She had instantly seen that her husband was a trifle paler than usual, and that some agitation, which he struggled to hide, controlled him. His eyes, wandering quickly yet covertly about the room, lit on the overcoat.

"Ah," he said, "it's here." And then he caught the garment up and thrust a hand into one of its pockets. Meanwhile he was talking with speed and now addressed his wife without looking at her.

"The fact is, Marion, I remembered when half way down town in the elevated that I'd left an important business letter in this coat. Strayne has just told me that he forgot to take the coat upstairs—stupid fellow—so I hurried downstairs again to get it—Ah, here's the letter I want!"

Marion saw, if her friend did not see, the gleam of a lilac tinted envelope as it was swept into a breast pocket of the overcoat which adorned the person of Mr. Trent Kingsland.

And this gentleman, a little flushed after his late pallor, said a few words of genial farewell to Agnes, made a few buoyant waves of the hand toward his wife and gracefully disappeared.

The two women looked at one another in silence.

"Marion," said Agnes, in a voice vibrant with feeling, "he came back to get that letter. And he was very concerned about it, was he not?"

"Very."

Agnes hastened to her friend's side. "Marion, do you mean that you'll never say a word to him, even now?"

"No, I shall never say a word to him, even now."

Agnes looked steadily at the floor, as if in deep meditation. Then she caught one of Marion's hands in both of her own.

"But will suffer."

"Yes, I shall—suffer."

"And—give—no—sign?"

"And give no sign."

Agnes stooped and kissed the hand she was holding. After a slight interval she said somewhat brokenly: "Marion, I—I don't think I'll take the 3 o'clock train to Boston after all."—Collier's Weekly.

Close Shooting.

An Englishman who lived many years in Africa says that it is now several years since he ventured to take one of the most daring shots that ever was hazarded. His wife was sitting in the house near the open door, the children were playing about her, and he was without not far away, busy with a wagon.

Suddenly, he says, though it was midday, an enormous lion appeared at a short distance, slowly advanced, and laid himself quietly down in the shade upon the very threshold of the door.

My wife, frozen with fear, remained motionless in her place. The children took refuge in her lap, and the cry they uttered attracting my attention, I hastened toward the door. My astonishment and horror may be imagined when I found the entrance barred in such a manner.

The lion had not seen me, and I glided gently, scarcely knowing what I meant to do, to the side of the house, and to the window of my chamber, in which I knew my loaded gun was standing.

By a happy chance I had set it in a corner close by the window, so that I could reach it from the outside, and, still more fortunately, the door of the room was open so that I could see the whole danger of the scene.

There was no time to think, for the lion was beginning to move, perhaps with the intention of making a spring. I called softly to the mother not to be afraid, and then fired. The ball passed directly over my boy's head and lodged in the forehead of the lion immediately above the eyes, and stretched him on the ground.

There was an instant of fearful suspense. Then I fired again; but the second bullet was thrown away, for his majesty never stirred after the first shot, and I leaped over his prostrate body to clasp my wife and children in my arms.

Candle Manufactories.

When people had to rely principally on candles for light they got much worse candles than are to be had to-day at much less cost. Notwithstanding the introduction of gas even into small towns and of electric lighting by general and isolated plants, and of the decline of the price of kerosene oil to a figure not dreamt of twenty years ago, the trade in candles is still very large. Indeed, the industry is big enough to support ten big manufactories, with millions of dollars invested, all of which do business in Greater New York. In the manufacture of candles from tallow three important by-products are obtained. These are stearic acid, red oil and glycerine. The first is used in manufacturing, the second in soap making and woolen weaving, and the third is sold to refiners, who in turn dispose of it to druggists for use in many ways, as well as medicinally, and to manufacturers of nitro-glycerine. These by-products are obtained by decomposing the tallow with a treatment of sulphuric acid and lime in a copper cylinder or digester. The residue is the substance from which the candles are made. It is first solidified by hydraulic pressure, then remelted and cast into moulds. It is impossible to get at the actual figures of the annual sales in Greater New York, but they run up into the millions. Besides the sales for home consumption there is a considerable export trade in candles with South American countries.—New York Tribune.

For Gold.

A new amalgam has been discovered which is a wonderful substitute for gold. It consists of ninety-four parts of copper to six parts of antimony. The copper is melted, and the antimony is then added. Once the two metals are sufficiently fused together a little magnesium and carbonate of lime are added to increase the density of the material. The product can be drawn, wrought, and soldered just like gold, which it almost exactly resembles on being polished. Even when exposed to the action of ammoniacal salts or nitrous vapors it preserves its color. The cost of making it is about 25 cents a pound avoirdupois.

How It Works.

Mrs. Smarte—It vexed me so to have my husband spend his evenings at home reading the newspapers that I just made up my mind I'd stop it, so I hid every paper that came into the house.

Mrs. Lambe—And how does it work?

Mrs. Smarte—Well, I don't know exactly. You see, he spends his evenings at the club now.—Boston Transcript.

Tommy's Sentence.

"Now, Thomas," said the teacher, "write me a sentence in which the words pine and butternut are used."

And Thomas wrote: "The fellow felt almighty tough when him his best girl cut; first he thought he'd pine away, and then he thought he'd butternut."—Detroit Journal.

Amelia's Age.

Ada—I notice Amelia has dated her letter 1896.

Amy—Yes; she won't admit that she's reached 1897 yet.—Yonkers Statesman.

There are a great many cases where a woman gives her dignity credit for protecting her, when it is really her age.

THE "Himno Cubanos" is the national anthem of the Cubans; the war song that inspires the patriot with the resolution "to do or die"; that urges him on to glorious victory or to, in his own eyes and those of his people, a more glorious death. Its stirring notes and words, voiced by many a freeman's throat, have been the prelude to the onsweep for freedom that struck terror into the souls of the hated Spaniards. Like other songs that have been the companion and the inspiration of freedom's childhood days, the origin of this is yet in obscurity. The tune dates back many years, to the time when the spirit of liberty—newly awakened, and yet half-smothered in the patriotic Cuban breast—first began to voice itself in wordless but meaning melody. Furtively breathed at first by some venturesome liberty lover, its notes awakened responsive echoes in many a breath which cherished like feelings and linked in everlasting fraternal bonds hearts that before hardly dared to think aloud the thoughts suggested by the melody. Soon words were fitted and sung to the music. They could have no spirit other than that of the melody. The tune was carried from place to place throughout eastern Cuba, and though the words often varied the theme never. "To arms! Not for glory, but to break the chains of tyranny!" was ever the burden, whether sung in the hills of Santiago or the plains of Puerto Principe.

The exact time of the origin of the tune, or who was the author, is not known. A grateful and free posterity may find him out and link his name to the song as a fitting monument to his genius. Long before the declaration for freedom at Yara in 1868 by Cespedes and his bold Bayamese compatriots the tune, with the words substantially as given above, were familiar to every lover of freedom about Bayamo and the neighboring towns. It was taken up by the army and sung throughout the "ten years' war." Wherever they went they carried it with them. It signalized triumph or solaced defeat. It led the triumphal march into the towns and villages wrested from the oppressors, and it infused new life into the drooping spirits defeated by the outnumbering foe. Never put in print, but soon all Cuba knew it and sung it. It was then the "Himno Bayamés"—the "Bayamese Hymn"; now it is the "Himno Cubanos." The song, brought from the cradle-side of Cuban freedom—Bayamo—by the band of brave men who first drew for the cause, found an echo in every free Cuban heart, and has been adopted by the Nation.

From Cape Maisi to Cape San Antonio it may be heard, not only timing the martial movements of the patriot army as they fly at the foe, but from the herder on the hill, the plowman on the plain, the belle at the ball and the housewife at the daily drudge. Its full-voiced notes discover every Cuban gathering, and its whistled strains cheer the lonely way of the solitary traveler, though to be heard by the Spaniard is to be accused as a traitor and doomed to death.

MRS. RUSSELL A. ALGER.

A Leader in Society and in Philanthropic Work.

Mrs. Russell A. Alger, wife of the new Secretary of War in the McKinley Cabinet, is well known in Detroit for her amiability and goodness of heart. She is a hostess of charming manner, wide hospitality and innate grace that makes every one of her guests feel perfectly at home while under her roof. In the ball-room or in her own home Mrs. Alger always makes her presence felt. The Algers have been foremost in Detroit society and the functions at the Alger house have been pronounced the best and most elaborate in Detroit. Mrs. Alger will find a congenial field for her social proclivities in Washington, where, as wife of the Minister of War, she will find ample expansion for her social nature. Mrs. Alger, while duly appreciating the value of society and its pleasures, is anything but ostentatious. She enjoys pleasant associations, and makes no secret of her pleasure in that respect. At the same time she is not unconscious of the fact that there is suffering in the world, and she is charitable to a fault. Mrs. Alger's face is familiar to the suffering poor, and she is a well-known figure in certain sections of the city where the fortunate in life's struggle are seldom seen.

LEAGUE'S NEW PRESIDENT.

Isaac B. Potter Recently Elected Head of American Wheelmen.

Isaac B. Potter, who was elected President of the League of American Wheelmen, has been prominent in the cycling world for many years. His accession to the highest office of the wheeling organization is, in the estimation of most cyclists, a fitting tribute to his efforts to procure for bicyclists what they most desire—good roads. So hard has he struggled for improved highways that he became universally known as "Good Roads" Potter. Five years ago he established an office in New York for the purpose of spreading the gospel of better roads. Through his efforts tons of literature have been circulated in every quarter of the United States. They fairly shrieked good roads. Thousands of draft horses in New York had their bodies ornamented with protective shields and theirs eyes canopied with canvas hoods. On the shields and hoods the device, "We want good roads" appeared. Three years ago Mr. Potter started the Good Roads Magazine. He expended a large part of his private fortune in the book, and only ceased its publication when directed to do so by the body of which he is now the chief executive. The book died, but its death served to increase Mr. Potter's energy toward a more active campaign for the consummation of his pet desire. He has accomplished much good, and it was largely through his efforts that the American League of Good Roads was formed. He is an officer of that organization, and in its councils is highly regarded. For two years Mr. Potter has been chief consul of the New York division. Under his aggressive direction the division has experienced a wonderful growth, and by his efforts principally, aided by his associates, the Armstrong law, proproviding for the transportation of bicycles as baggage, was enacted in New York a year ago. Mr. Potter is an orator of ability, a parliamentarian of great force, an excellent financier and an adept politician. He resides in Brooklyn in a palatial home, which he recently constructed to harbor a pleasant little woman, who six months ago beguiled him from the ranks of bachelorhood. If Mr. Potter's previous energetic record is a criterion the league, under his guidance, may be expected to thrive during his reign as its President.

WAS AN ELEVATOR BOY.

Within Three Years This Negro Has Achieved Literary Fame.

Paul Lawrence Dunbar is one of the outposts of culture among the negroes of America. He is a poet, a strong writer and a philosopher who has just gone to Europe on a lecturing tour.

Perhaps Dunbar is the most interesting and picturesque figure in the field of literature to-day. He was born twenty-five years ago in Dayton, Ohio, and was educated in the public schools of that town. Until four years ago he was an elevator boy in a big building in Dayton, and, like most of his race, he seemed to be marked for a life of uneventful toil. Yet, since that time he has published three books, has contributed to the best magazines and newspapers, has established a solid reputation and has recited his verses to many audiences of the highest culture. And now, at 25, with the encouraging plaudits of his first success ringing in his ears, he goes abroad for new conquests. In England Mr. Dunbar will be received by the most highly cultured and aristocratic people in the land, because he has genius. In his stories he tells something of his own people, but he does not limit his art to the treatment of negro life.

PAUL LAWRENCE DUNBAR.

"Hail Columbia's" First Rendition.

"Hail Columbia" was written in 1798 by Joseph Hopkinson, when Congress, in session at Philadelphia, was debating what attitude to assume in the struggle between France and England. Party feeling ran high, and the air was surcharged with patriotic enthusiasm. A young actor in the city, who was about to have a benefit, came to Hopkinson in despair and said that twenty boxes remained unsold, and it looked as if the proposed benefit would prove a failure. If Hopkinson would write him a patriotic song, adapted to the tune of "The President's March," then popular, it would save the day. The following afternoon the song was ready; it was duly advertised, the house was packed, and, in wild enthusiasm, the song was encored and re-encored.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Belfast's Growth.

In 1843 the ratable value of Belfast was $675,000; now it is $4,675,000—a remarkable growth, and largely due to the shipbuilding industry.

THE INDIANA SOLONS

The three-cent street car fare bill was put on passage under a suspension of the rules Monday. There was only one vote against the bill. The legislative apportionment bill passed the Senate. The Senate also passed Senator New's bill repealing the apportionment act of 1885, the unconstitutional gerrymander under which the last election was held. The object in repealing this act is to force a special session of the Legislature to pass a new apportionment act should the Democratic Supreme Court throw out the new apportionment. In the House the Temperance Committee reported on Nicholson's anti-quart shop bill and offered a substitute in the shape of a bill that destroys much of the original Nicholson law and modifies a great portion of the remainder. It provides for a 12 o'clock closing law for the larger cities in the State to replace the 11 o'clock law.

The House spent the most of Tuesday considering a mass of insurance bills in committee of the whole. A blanket bill governing foreign companies and not differing very materially from the present law was slightly amended. The House killed two others—a blanket bill for the organization of home mutual companies and a bill for the organization of home stock companies—and one governing life and accident assessment companies only escaped death by being recommitted. The bill fixing a standard form of policy escaped with amendments. A bill exempting farms within the limits of towns or cities from corporation taxes, and the Remington dog bill, which permits any person to kill a dog that is known to have ever chased or worried sheep or any live stock or fowl, was passed. The Senate, after passing a couple of minor bills, took up the McCord building and loan bill, practically the Peckenpaugh bill, as it passed the House, and spent the whole day discussing it.

The House Wednesday killed the local option bill, and by a narrow margin passed a bill providing for a revision of the statutes. The first of the insurance measures to reach final enactment got there when the House passed a Senate bill repealing the law and fixing a 10 per cent penalty upon home companies for failure to adjust and pay losses within sixty days. Mr. Thomas' bill for a revision of the statutes passed. Senator Shively's bill appropriating $5,000 for a statue to Morton in the Capitol at Washington came up on third reading, and finally passed by almost a party vote. The Senate, after adding a few more amendments, recommitted the building and loan bill, in order that the numerous changes might be incorporated. Two caucus measures, the bill providing for non-partisan boards for the benevolent institutions and the Fort Wayne charter bill, were passed. A bill permitting the commissioners of Starke County to issue bonds for a new court house and one to provide for janitors for country schools at 10 cents per day, were passed.

X-Rays and Lacing.

Queen Amelie of Portugal, who, as every one knows, is a qualified doctor, has perceived that X rays might be utilized to demonstrate the evils of tight lacing. She has taken photographs of some of the ladies of her court, and has been holding forth energetically concerning the contrast between the feminine form divine and the form as it appears when "improved" by the modern corset. One is sorry to hear that her majesty's well meant efforts have not met with much encouragement from her entourage. Some of the fair rebels have even gone so far as to flatly refuse to be photographed. If the queen perseveres, however, she will doubtless be able to regulate the size of waists, just as the Princess of Wales has killed many an injudicious mode by refusing to adopt it. To make a thing "bad form" is far more effectual than to seek to crush it by decrees or discredit by arguments. In England the custom of "squeezing" received its death blow when the Duchess of York was married, and the curious world was informed that the waist of her wedding-gown measured twenty-six inches. Her figure is beautifully proportioned, a fact which no one can look at her and deny.—New York Recorder.

Samuel Lover and His Mother.

Samuel Lover was born in Dublin, February 24, 1797. His father was a man of business, and, as the eldest son, Samuel was able, at 16 years of age, to fulfill the duties of head clerk (for he was as clever at correspondence and figures as he was at everything else), and so save much expense to the firm. It was natural to wish that he should remain in it. My father, however, possessed such strong artistic talents that business was distasteful to him, and he longed to follow another path in life. He had had the misfortune to lose his mother when he was a boy of 12. She would probably have understood and forwarded his aspirations; for the tenderest affection had existed between them, and throughout life he revered the memory of his mother as the sweetest and best of women. His talents he probably inherited in part from her, as well as his amiable and lovable character.—Century.

A Friendly Whale.

Capt. Beal, of the schooner Charlotte M. Beal, at this port, reports that he was becalmed for forty-eight hours, during about twenty-four of which time a whale made things very lively for them. Suddenly the whale, at least sixty feet long, and a fine specimen generally, rose up out of the ocean and manifested a decided disposition to cultivate their acquaintance. During several hours it remained alongside, frequently rubbing its sides against the schooner. Capt. Beal tried to take soundings, but his fourteen-pound lead was taken inside by the whale at once. At last, to the great relief of all on board, the whale went down, and when it came to the surface started off rapidly. Capt. Beal is an old sailor, but that was his first experience of the kind.—Portland (Me.) Press.

How Far Blood Travels.

The mileage of the blood circulation reveals astounding facts. Says the Chicago News:

It has been calculated that, assuming the heart to beat sixty-nine times a minute at ordinary heart pressure, the blood goes at the rate of 207 yards in a minute, or seven miles an hour, 168 miles a day, and 61,320 miles a year.

If a man 84 years of age could have had one single blood corpuscle floating in his blood all his life it would have traveled in that time 5,150,000 miles.

Steers a Ship Automatically.

It is stated that Lieut. Bersler, of the French navy, has invented a compass which steers the vessel automatically in a course set by the navigator.

Court House News

The Mill of Justice Continues to Grind.

Work began as usual on the first day There are besides the county cases number of others of importance. Among, are those against the Garrett Water Works company to enforce mechanics' liens. It appears that when the Garrett water works were completed, they settled in full with the contractors who were Howe Pump and Engine Co. of Indianapolis. But it seems this company failed soon after, and had not paid four concerns that had furnished a large part of the material and machinery. Now, these companies bring suits on mechanics' liens to collect from the Garrett company what the Indianapolis company should have paid them for their material, and they will probably collect it, thus compelling the Garrett company to pay twice for a part of their plant. The four companies are: The Arbrickle, Ryan & Co. who sue for about $900; the Ft. Wayne Electric Supply Co. whose claim is about $400; the Knight & Jellison Co. $400, and the James B. Clough & Sons, Co. for $1,600. This makes a total of $3,300, which with costs, attorney's fees, etc, is likely to make an expensive thing for Garrett. Judge McClellan represents the plaintiff companies, while Roby & Gengler represents the Garrett Company. It will be hard fought case.

Nearly every case was responded to by the attorney on one side or the other, and answers or demurrers were filed in many cases.

The case against Ex-Treasurer Fair, the first one of the county cases brought up, is set for hearing before Judge Watkins, as Judge Penfield is one of Fair's bondsmen. It is likely some other judge will have to try the most of the county cases, as they seem to be more or less connected. The case brought by Fair against Coffinberry, to set aside deed, etc. will go before either Judge Adair or Judge Watkins.

At 1 p m. the the grand jury were called and all were present, as in the list published last week. The judge asked each if he was a resident householder, and if anyone had said anything to influence them, and as all answered satisfactorily they were sworn by Clerk Long. Mr Mason was a little hard of hearing, and was allowed to sit near the Judge while the charge was given. Must select one of their number for clerk who shall keep minutes of everthing except the individual votes. This record is to be kept secret and remain with the prosecuting attorney. All are sworn to keep matters secret and divulge nothing except what is shown in indictments found. The foreman can administer oaths to the witnesses called. At least five must agree on an indictment. The names of chief witnesses must be on the indictment. They must inquire into the case of all who are in jail on any criminal charge. They are allowed to inspect jail or poor house, etc, etc

Then followed the regular charge. spoke especially of the charges against Fair and the suspicians that arose against other officers. The law is no respecter of persons. It knows no politics or religion. It recognizes only the good of society and government. He instructed them to go thoroughly into everything brought before them. Frauds of a startling character have been brought out. A part of these losses has been replaced. And if these investigations have entailed some expense, no citizen should object, in view of the large sums recovered and the good that will result. The judge of this court will do all in his power to help. Some may be outlawed. Grand larceny, may begun within five years, other crimes, for two years. But such amount of time as the crime has been covered up or concealed, will be taken from the entire time, so that it may be that a crime done more than two or five years ago, may still be within the law. The jury were urged to be thorough. There is a great deal of work to be done. But it must be done well. The last grand jury was held up to them as a good example He spoke highly of the work of the prosecutor and urged all now in the work, to do as well. They must not be swayed by friendship, nor by enmity, only by evidence, not by hearsay. Let the ends you aim at be the ends of truth and justice. The charge was very able and eloquent, and often full of much feeling. Much of the charge was read and it showed careful preparation and study. There was an abundance of favorable comment and a feeling of satisfaction The court room was filled with interested spectators, and about every attorney in the county was present. All of them watched each word of the charge as it fell from the judge's lips and a murmur of satisfaction arose as he closed. The jury were put in charge of the bailiff and went into their room, and the second most important grand jury the county ever had was at work.

Then the usual routine business went on. Note. He says that grand larceny includes taking $25 or upwards, and this has a run of five years.

Tuesday's Daily.

—The case of Sarah vs Benj. McKinley, is passed over for the present.

Gengnagel vs Moughler will likely be settled.

St. Clair, admr. vs Fulks, Atty Hartman reported no sale as yet.

Hartman entered a demurrer in Sheets vs Rader.

Pomeroy reported the Luttman vs Luttman case not ready.

Kuhn vs Weaver has been settled.

Phillips appeared in Walborn vs Shull and Eberly vs Somerlott, and Shuman was on the other side in the latter.

Roby appeared for Baltz in Rowe vs Baltz. Rose anwered for defense in the Coffinberry case.

Leas appeared for several cases that are not ready to be tried yet.

McClellan and Garwood appeared for plaintiffs in the Garrett Water Works cases. and Roby and Gengler for Garrett.

Emanuel represents a number of cases to come up. Weisheimer is helping the prosecution in several state cases.

The case between Elijah Sherwood and his wife and cases connected with it were called up in the afternoon. It will be remembered that she got a divorce, the custody of the child and such rights as they had in the farm on which they lived. But as the farm was heavily encumbered it was not considered a very valuable allowance. It was discussed again this time by W. H. Leas for the wife, and Judge McClellan for the husband, and an agreement reached by which she received a deed of the land; and we suppose she must assume the debts

Nearly every case on the docket received a brief notice. Such attorneys as were ready, made answers, demurrers, or such other entries as their judgement the case demanded. At four o'clock the court was discharged till 9 a. m. to-day.

The grand jury got at work at once after entering their room, and all afternoon, one witness after another could be seen going and coming. It is a pretty good jury and bids fair to equal in point of efficiency, the last one. They are: Hiram Mason, Frank Fisk, Milton Eckert, Geo. Rowe, Jacob Cook and Peter Coyle.

The court room bailiff, is Charlie Crew as before, and Rob McDougall has the grand jury again in charge.

Two cases came up in what were detailed discussions of the rights of married women. In Haines vs Mrs. G. E. Jones. Sharpless, the attorney for the plaintiff argued that an obligation such as a note, given by Mrs. Jones would be good and she should be made to pay it. He cited the facts and some decisions that married women could make contracts in general, and only were debarred from this in the special cases enumerated in the statutes. And from this, did not believe a note given by Mrs. Jones would be void in the case in question. Rose took an opposite view. The Judge took time for further study of the question, though he seemed to it would all turn on the more recent decisions. The other case was Homerick and wife vs Rideubaugh. Here the rights of both husbund and wife seem at issue. Mountz took the view that Homerick could make a deed or other contract that would bind his wife, though she did not consent to it. Judge McClellan for the other side contended that a married man could not give a good deed to property, or in any way dispose of the interest of both husband and wife, unless the consent of both were obtained. If this is not true, he said, the husband could without the wife's consent, get the whole of their just property, or at least the control of it. In this way, he could leave her in helpless poverty, while he was in enjoyment of plenty. The arguments on both sides were quite valuable, and will go far to decide the first steps in both cases. Both are subject to further discussion.

In the forenoon came C. M Phillips, Shuman and Mr. McDonald from Waterloo and Mr. Croxton and Mr. Yotter, attorneys from Angola.

The case of Sarah Emerick vs Peter Emerick was called, but nothing done.

Attorney Coats of Butler called up the John Blaker estate and made a report showing the condition of the estate. In view of all the facts he asked that the estate be settled as insolvent and this will be done.

The case of Blucher vs Zonker came up and C. M. Phillips, for Zonker, made a statement in which he alluded to a point personal to himself. It will be remembered that Mr. Zonker had Mr. Blucher arrested for trespass, the facts being that Blucher cut logs for Gandy, on Zonkers farm. It was tried before a justice and Zonker won. It was brought to court and Zonker was beaten. Now Blucher brings suit against Zonker for malicious prosecution. Phillips, as Zonker's attorney demurred to this, and during his speech, made an objection to the working of the complaint, in which it was stated that at the former trials, Phillips while ostensibly acting for the state, was really acting for Zonker only, and that he won the suit by improper pleas to the jury. It was claimed that he made the jury believe they would not get their fees unless they decided on a conviction. This last statement Phillips denied with a good deal of vehemence. He was replied to by opposing counsel, Link, and then the Judge gave them his views. There may be quite a suit over this charge of malicious prosecution before it is over.

Wednesday's Daily.

There was rather a dramatic episode in the court on Tuesday afternoon. A bright looking girl of thirteen was brought in for the purpose of having her sent to the Girls Reform School, as an incorrigible. She was brought in by Mr. and Mrs. Paul Kessler, of Fairfield, with whom she had been staying for a time. But she had proved troublesome wherever she staid. They had tried to get a suitable home for her, where she would have good care and could attend school, but had failed. Everyone she staid with claimed they could not control her. Her father and mother had separated, and she was the youngest of the family, the others, all girls are supporting themselves. The mother has claimed that the father was so abusive the children could not stay at home. The father, Ephraim Neidig, was present in court. We believe he lives at the home of Emanuel Neidig, who is a relative. The girl's name is Jennie, and she is a bright appearing girl, and no doubt with judicious training will be a worthy woman. She gave clear and frank statements to all the questions asked her by Attorney McDonald, of Waterloo, who was conducting the inquiry. But she evidently feared going to the Reform School, as she often burst into tears and at times sobbed bitterly. All in the court room, including attorneys and judge at once sympathized with her. Her father's statement was not very satisfactory. Judge Penfield talked with the girl, and finally said he believed it would be better if some good family would take her and care for her. This struck a responsive chord in several persons in the room. W. G. Croxton said some member of the DeKalb bar ought to adopt the child C. M. Phillips said "I will take her if no one else will. I believe I can control her." "You'll be a good one if you do," answered the father. But he finally concluded he would assist in paying her expenses and Mr. Phillips took in charge. The poor girl looked happy, to have found a home in which she could at least have a fair chance. And there was not a person in the court room but wished Mr. Phillips and his young charge success in their new relations. We believe it will be a success.

The case of John Taylor vs Smithfield township was called up again. Last term of court Taylor got judgment for his entire claim. But this time J. H. Rose contended that the $525 which trustee Blake had paid Dole on that $1200 school house, should at least be taken out of the judgment. complained of was based on unbroken testimony showing that Taylor was entitled to the sum he got. The matter is not done yet.

J. W. Baxter again called up the case of the U. S. School Furniture Co. vs Jackson township, and said the company should be paid, as the furniture under discussion was accepted and used, and is still used by the township J. A. Rose for the township contended the township had no power to contract the debt as it had already exceeded the legal limit.

There was an error in our published list of the names of the grand jury. It is not Milton Eckert, but Michael Eckhart, of Fairfield township. Mr. Eckhart is a cousin of our townsman Chas. Eckhart.

The grand jury organized by making Geo. Rowe their foreman. Geo. M. Henderson, the official court reporter is acting as their secretary.

The first part of the forenoon was taken up in calling cases and finding on what day and before whom, they could be tried. A number were set before the Judge for next Monday, March 8. Judge Watkins is to be called to try some, if he can be had next week, and Judge Adair may be asked to try some. At present but few cases have been set for jury trial.

The case of 'Squires vs Becher was called, and it was learned that Mrs. Becher is in poor health. We did not learn when it will come up, though they already have her deposition.

FEES and SALARY BILL KILLED

A letter to-day from Senator Nusbaum says the "Fee and Salary Bill" was killed at 10 a. m. Monday. It had been worked up by county officers. assisted by gold democrats and republicans who had united to get it through. It would have greatly increased all county salaries. So the democrats have scored one victory for the people.

The Legislature.

The full session closes next Monday at midnight, but there is talk of an extra session to finish some of the work. This however is entirely in the hands of the governor, and he is not likely to call them together again.

As the closing days approach, there is the usual mysterious disappearance of state statutes with which each member is supplied early in the session, and which are very convenient for them as reference during the session. We presume each member consoles himself by saying "everybody does it."

There is a good joke out on Dr. Knepper, the member Noble county. He and representatives Haifley, Sence, Lambert Herod and Record were invited down to Plainfield to partake of the proverbial of Superintendent Charition of the Plainfield reformatory and inciden ally, to be shown over that institution. Upon boarding the train Messrs. Haiffley, Sence and Knepper retired into the smoker to enjoy a cigar around Mr. Lambert's family accompanied him, and with Mr. Herod and Mr. Record, they took seats in the regular passenger coach. Dr. Knepper is a great enthusiast on the general medical bill, and it was not long until the little party in the smoking car was totally absorbed in an exposition by the doctor of the features of that bill. When Plainfield was reached Mr. Lambert and his party stepped out upon the platform. They did notice until the train was a small speck in the distance that the other representative had failed to get off. They debat d what they should do, and finally telegraphed to the stationmaster at Carter's the next station, directing him to get on the train and notify the doctor and his party that they had pa sed Plainfield. When the telegram reached Carters the train had come and go e. A telegram was then hurried off to the next station. When the agent at that place entered the car he found the doctor explaining the sixth section of the bill, with Mr Haifley and Mr Sence fairly entranced. They were greatly surprised when told that they had missed their station. After various telegraphic communications a carriage was sent down from the reformatory. The men were a tired-looking set when they showed up at the reformatory after their long ride, but they were soon rewarded by a splendid dinner, with turkey as a feature.

—On every mail to-day we have received orders for the DAILY COURIER. The people in surrounding towns know that the DAILY gives them the correct account of court proceedings, and they are oply too g'ad to send us 10 cents a week in advance for the paper.

C. M. Brown's bill to list notes and mortgages with the assessor has passed both Houses and is before the governor. Dr. Nusbaum's bill as to commissioners and auditors has passed the Senate but may not pass the House as a democratic bill stands no show of consideration no matter how worthy.

The Governor vetoed the bill that makes a separate court circuit of Jay County, but it was passed over his veto.

A resolution was adopted by the House that hereafter prevents members from explaining their votes This will save a great deal of time needlessly wasted.

—Men who have hesitated about marrying pensioned widows can now go right ahead. The national house has decided that the pensions of "remarried widows" hold good.

WROTE TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES

The firm of Baker & Thornton, of Indianapolis, dealers in School supplies are opposed to the Roots Bill now pending before the legislature.

The bill in question is one calcuated to put a curb on trustees in the matter of purchasing school supplies and plunging a township head over heels in debt.

The firm have sent out the following letter:

Office of Baker & Thornton,
Indianapolis, Ind., Feb. 23, 1897.

"Write to your senator and tell him that the Roots bill is impracticable and harmful and that you would ask that he vote against it. Also write to Senator Newton W. Gilbert (chairman county and township committee), tell them both that section 1 would induce a trustee to make an extra levy to be safe, and that the bill would compel a trustee to borrow his own money of a bank and pay interest on it. Tell them we don't want a bill in the interest of banks, the author of which is in the Banking business. Get this in the first mail.

If you want to write more letters you can address Senators E. G. Hogate, O. Z. Hubbell, Ward H. Watson, James O Brien, J. M. LaFollette, J. C. Gochenour, Address them 'Care Indiana State Senate.'

If you would put a special delivery stamp on, it would help things."

CHEATED BY SOMEONE.

A dispacth from Hamilton reports a mysterious as well as sad case. Jacob Hale had bought a farm and to make his payments, wanted his money to come by express Two packages were duly received, each marked $1,500. He went to Angola to deposit the money in the bank at that place, but the bank officials refused to receive the packages until they were opened, to which Hall consented. The packages were found to contain old papers, but no money. Hall returned home apparently heartbroken. and and the next morning he was found in a dyitg condition, death resulted in a few hours after he was found in an unconscious condition. Mr. Hall had negotiated for the purchase of a farm on which he was to pay $5,000, which was to come to him in the express packages and the theory prevails that he was robbed of his money, or was the victim of duplicity. The grief over the loss caused his death. An investigation is being made.

A LUCKY RUNAWAY.

There was quite an exciting runaway Saturday evening just after the DAILY had been issued. Bert Penland, of Jackson township, was unloading wood at Frank Hoff's residence, when one of the horses, a Western pony, which was attached to the wagon with a grey, in some way rubbed off its bridle and the team started. They came down Seventh street at a high rate of speed, and when they reached Main there seemed to be a misunderstanding on the part of the excited horses which way to turn. The pony was headed straight east, while the other horse wanted to go towards home and turn south on Main. In the scuffle the grey horse fell and the pony drag ged th horse and wagon about two rods over the frozen ground, when they struck the cement sidewalk at the corner of the court square. Here the pony fell, and the grey got up. but all came to a sudden stop. Many willing hands were soon busily engaged in unhitching the team and getting the horse up, and in a few minutes they were hooked up to the wagon and driven back to Mr. Hoff's and the balance of the wood was unloaded. There was no damage done. except to the grey horse, which was considerably bruised by the slide over the rough ground.

MOVED

To-day finds T. H. Sprott and Charlie Weaver fully settled in their new quarters in the Gandy Block. Mr. Sprott occupies the west side of the room with his real estate, insurance and railroad business and has things fixed up very conveniently, even to a room for consultation purposes. Mr. Weaver has his express office on the east side, and has it fitted up very nicely. There is a partition that separates both offices from the rear half of the room, which will be used for express storage, etc. Altogether, the new location would seem to be very convenient.

An Old Resident.

The COURIER this morning received a business letter from J. D. High, now at Concordia, Kan. He is working there for the Missouri Pacific Railway. A part of his letter we believe will be of interest to readers and we give it below:

"The weather is quite cold to-day, (Feb. 27) down to zero this morning. There has been lots of sickness here this winter. I have been sick and my wife has been sick most all the winter, but is some better at this writing. I notice by the COURIER that lots of the old settlers, who I knew well, have passed away. But I see Bro. Meese is still living. I used to attend Sunday school when he was Superintendent of the M. E school. May the Lord bless him and that he may have many years before him yet, as he is a useful man."

OBITUARY

James Russell, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Lycurgus H. Klotz, of Waterloo, died February 24, 1897, aged 1 year, 3 months and 21 days.

It was the victim of whooping cough, complications of a fatal character, having arisen from protracted coughing. which was so violent as to produce spinal derangement and death after nearly twelve weeks of suffering. Cottage services were held and the little body buried in Waterloo cemetery on Friday last.

A Peerless Liniment.

As a pain destroyer and cure for rheumatism, Salvation Oil is the peer of all liniments. Mr. Wm. H. Brown, proprietor of Striebinger House, Cleveland, O., writes: "I suffered from rheumatism for twelve years and my last attack kept me in bed, unable to walk. I used Salvation Oil and soon was up and about. As a pain destroyer this liniment has no equal." Salvation Oil is sold everywhere for 25 cents. Try it and be convinced.

Mrs. Eleanor Dirrim, of Hamilton, had a close call from fire last week. The fire is supposed to have started from a spark from a mill near The heroic work of the citizens only saved the house from entire destruction. There was some insurance.

Last Saturday night about eight o'clock, the fire whistle aroused our people as they are usually aroused thereby, and in a minute the streets were full of people. The fire proved to be in a small dwelling owned by Mrs. Green Good in Lingenfelters Addition. The fire had obtained great head way before a stream was playing upon. The fire was soon under control, but not until the house was nearly ruined. No insurance.

Charles Wagner's dwelling on the John P. Wagner farm at Franklin Center, came near being destroyed by fire a week ago caused by defective protection to stove pipe where it passed the ceiling.

A WONDERFUL SHRUB!

Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism Etc.

New evidence shows that Alkavis, the new botanical product of the Kava-Kava Shrub, is indeed a true specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood or by disorders of the Kidneys and urinary organs. A remarkable case is that of Wm. Cornell, Logansport, corner Race and Sixth sts., who says: "I cheerfully send you a true statement of what Alkavis has done for me. On March 15th, 1894, I was taken with La Grippe, then Rheumatism and Kidney trouble followed. I was under the Doctor's care for twelve months, and during that time I suffered untold agonies. My urine was the color of strong tea and very offensive. I sent for Alkavis and in a short time I could notice a strong improvement, especially in the color of my urine, which was perceptibly clearer and of a more natural color. I gained ten pounds could almost walk erect, could sleep well; appetite improved I am now a well man and weigh one hundred and forty-three pounds Alkavis thoroughly reached my case and effected a permanent cure, and I advise any one suffering from Kidney trouble Rheumatism to at once procure Alkavis and get relief. I will cheerfully answer communications in regard to my case."

Dr. A. R. Knapp, a well-known surgeon and physician of Leoti, Kan., voices the opinion of the doctors and writes: "The case I ordered Alkavis for has improved wonderfully. I believe you have in Alkavis a complete specific for all kidney troubles."

Such testimony as the above makes it very clear that Alkavis is indeed a specific cure for these serious diseases.

The Church Kidney Cure Company, New York City, so far are the only importers of Alkavis, and they have appointed S. E. Hoisington, of Auburn, Ind., cor. 10th and Van Buren sts., as their sole distributing agent for this section. Those desiring Alkavis will call on or address the above agent. Send to our agent for book of one thousand cures, with guarantee of cure when three bottles of Alkavis are taken.

He says that March will be an unusually cold month. A great snow strom will envelop the south Atlantic states, and a blizzard will sweep the middle Atlantic on March 2. Heavy snows will fall all over the country. Another heavy snow storm will prevail on March 17th.

—The city elections held in Iowa Monday resulted in a general reversal of the republican victory of last fall. Citizen' tickets or the democrats carried most of the towns. A number of the chief cities of the state do not hold elections at this time, but under special charters. In Ottumwa the democrats carried the entire city for the first time in years; in Perry, the republicans were routed by a citizens' ticket; at Atlantic the citizens won, but the republicans elected Mayor J. B. Jones again. Algona was carried by a citizens' non-partisan movement, in opposition to the regular republicans.

Angola people remember so well the musical ability of Mr Stealy, that further comment is unnecessary. The operetta was given under the auspices of the "Woodlawn Club," and Mrs. Harry Reed, Mr. Stealy's sister, sang in the chorus."—It will be remembered that Mr. Staley also took part in an operetta here, "The Barber of Bath," the other members of the company being Mrs. D. Waterloo, Ind., June 22, 1896.

This is to certify that I was taken down with LaGrippe and Rheumatism and lay five months and a half. At that time I did not know my own family and could get nothing to benefit me in the least, then my wife managed to take me to Toledo, Ohio, to one of the best doctors and he told her to take me home on the first train as I might die before I got home. She brought home and called A. Y. Rosenbury in and I received treatment of him. My limbs were swollen very much and I suffered much pain and after the second treatment the swelling and pain went down and I haven't had any pain since and feel comfortable and well and give the praise to A. Y. Rosenbury. This I give voluntarily for the good of others.
MR. and MRS. DAVID WALLACE,

WATERLOO, IND., Jan. 20, 1896.

I was taken with lameness in my hip joint and had all done for myself that could be done and still grew worse, till I got so bad that I could not rest in any position and could not bend my hip joint a bit. Then I was advised to call on A. Y. Rosenbury and he told me if I would stop everything else, he could cure me and I did so and in about two months after, I was well and comfortable and this has been ten months since and I am as well to-day as I ever was. This is a true statement in my case.
Respe tfully,

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, surest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels, Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

UNDER THE WHEELS.

Benj. F. Young, Killed While at Work at Garrett.

Yesterday about 11 a. m. a terrible accident happened in the yards at Garrett. There were several men clearing the tracks and working about the yards, clearing the tracks of the snow, and in the blinding snow storm, Engineer Steckley on the yard engine, suddenly felt a jolting as if he was off the track. He stopped his engine, and was horrified to see the mangled form of a man under the wheels of the cars he was pulling. Several cars had passed over the man when he was discovered. It was found to be Benj. F. Young, one of the men who were clearing off the snow. He probably was blinded by the storm and besides, could not hear the moving engine as it came silently through the fresh snow, and so was struck and killed without being able to make an outcry. And the other men working near by did not see him struck. His remains were gathered up and cared for and Coroner J. W. Hughes, of Waterloo, was sent for, and an inquest was held. Four witness were examined, and the above facts ascertained. The man belonged at Laporte. He had come to Garrett at the time they were putting in the waterworks plant, but last Summer got a job working in the yards, as brakeman, we believe. Mr. Spielman sent a man to Laporte when the train went west, to see Young's people and learn what disposition to make of the remains. He was about thirty years of age. No blame is attached to anyone, as it was such an accident as might happen in such a stormy time.

IN MEMORIAM.

Miss Vinna Fair, a member of Crescent Rebekah Lodge No. 254, Auburn, Ind., died Feb. 24, 1897. While Sister Fair's affliction was such that she was not permitted to meet with us in our lodge room for the past several months, and while the silver cord is loosed and her membership has ceased, yet the memory remains fresh and beautiful in the hearts of the living.

Her devotion to the principles of the Order and her quiet, unassuming, lovable disposition has endeared her to many of her sister members in a manner that will not be forgotten.

She was a devoted christian, a faithful member of our Order and a kind and affectionate daughter.

Peace to her memory; may it grow green with the grass and blossom in eternity.

This year's Paris salon will be the one hundred and twenty-fourth. Under Louis XIV. ten exhibitions were held, under Louis XV. twenty-six, under Louis XVI. nine, under the first republic nine, under Napoleon I. five, during the restoration six, under Louis Philippe sixteen, during the second republic four, under Napoleon III. nineteen and since 1872 there has been one every year. In the salon of 1800 only 275 works were exhibited, whereas of late years the average has been 5,000.

A lady attended the celebration in Boston of the one hundred and sixtieth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine, and listened patiently for an hour to speeches eulogizing his memory and belittling Christianity, but when finally a speaker counseled the company to teach their children to become free thinkers, she arose and quietly but emphatically said: "Mr. President, I should like to say that when I give up my religion and my children, it will be for something very much better than anything you have offered to-day." Then she walked out, and for a full minute there was silence.

Before the invention of hydraulic mining Sacramento river was navigable for sea-going vessels as far as the city of Sacramento; but the vast deposits washed into its channel through the operations of that invention have made it at the present day unnavigable—a mere mud sewer for the interior of California. The destructive work of the hydraulic miner has now been at least partially checked, and a proposition is now before the State Legislature for the construction of a great dredge, capable of removing 8,000 cubic yards of mud per hour from the channel. By the operations of this machine it is hoped to make the river once more a clear water stream and restore to Sacramento some part of its former dignity as an ocean port.

It's Human Nature.

"I tell you," declared the reformed gambler, "that there are people in this country who insist upon being swindled. Nine out of ten of the men who are caught know that they are going up against some kind of a bunco game. They have read all about it, but it is the infernal egotism of the average man that leads him into the trap. He knows that others have been caught, but he's too smart for anything of that kind, don't you see.

"I was at a county fair in Iowa exposing the tricks of gamblers. My graft was in selling a little book that I had on the subject. There was a pretty lively gang there from a back township and when I showed them how the shell was done, one big fellow insisted that he could locate the elusive pea and was bound to bet on his proposition. I told him that I was out of the business, but that he was mistaken. Then they set up a cry that I was a fraud and afraid of my own game. I went over the whole thing again and showed them how they were fooled, but I must give the fellow a chance or they would wreck my whole outfit.

"At last, just to save myself, I let him put up his money and tendered it back to him after I had won. Then it took three other men to keep him from whipping me because I took him for a squealer. One or two others insisted on having a try at it and never turned a hair because of their losses. When it came to three-card monte, it was the same. Each of half a dozen men was sure that he could pick the card and, despite warning, would have a try at it, and some of them two or three tries. When they were cleaned out there went up a howl that I was the rankest kind of a fraud and they chased me three miles into the country before it was dark enough for me to escape."

Wax Candles Made in Chicago.

Eight tons of wax candles are produced almost within the city limits of Chicago every day, and yet this city and her adjacent commercial territory are counted a poor market for candles. The wax is the refined residue of paraffin oil, and is produced at the refineries of the Standard Oil Company at Whiting, Ind.

In Europe the American wax is fast displacing the Scotch article produced from shale, though the English factories engaged in the manufacture of wax candles are of enormous capacity and have been long established. These factories are now working largely on the American product, as it is of better quality and cheaper. A recent cut of a farthing per pound in the London price by the Standard Oil Company of the United States has already amounted to a loss of $250,000 on the 25,000 tons which the Scotchmen sell annually in England alone.

Though the sales of wax candles in America are increasing enormously, especially in eastern cities, the domestic sales are as nothing to the sales abroad. In America the public has not yet learned the luxury of a portable, odorless light for residences, and sales westward are therefore comparatively small. The American supply is practically unlimited, as the wax is only one of the many by-products of the crude paraffin oil produced in enormous quantities from the oil fields of Pennsylvania, Indiana and several other states.

Made a Man of Him.

An inspiring anecdote of the crisis of a life is related by the Examiner, thus: "Nothing better could happen to the young man who has the right kind of grit, than to be thrown on the world and his own resources. A well-to-do judge once gave his son a thousand dollars, and told him to go to college and graduate. The son returned at the end of the first year, his money all gone, and with several extravagant habits. At the close of the vacation the judge said to his son, 'Well, William, are you going to college this year?' 'I have no money, father.' 'But I gave you a thousand dollars to graduate on.' 'It is all gone, father.' 'Very well, my son; it is all I could give you; you can't stay here; you must now pay your own way in the world.' A new light broke in upon the vision of the young man. He accommodated himself to the situation; again left home, made his way through college, graduated at the head of his class, studied law, became Governor of the State of New York, entered the cabinet of the President of the United States, and has made a record that will not soon die, for he was none other than William H. Seward."

Proofs Needed.

Politics of the Day

A LOGICAL SITUATION.

Expecting the Republican party to take any decisive action against the monopolies and trusts is like expecting a cat to drown her own kittens, and those who still have a lingering belief that the Lexow investigation will amount to anything, or who hope that the McKinley administration will do something of consequence for the relief of the people, are sure to be disappointed and undeceived.

Monopolies, trusts and combinations of all sorts, formed to enable the few to enrich themselves at the expense of the many, are the offspring of the Republican system of alleged protection, of which we are sure to have another example in the Tariff bill, for the passing of which Congress will be called in extra session after McKinley has been inaugurated. They are the result of government partnership with individuals and classes wherein the former are put in the possession of millions that make it possible for them to contribute liberally to campaign funds and to buy up Presidencies and Legislatures that may help and "protect" them in their raids on the pockets of the masses.

The Republican party to-day is the champion of those who have already made vast fortunes with the aid of the Government, and who want to add to them, as well as to put their friends and relatives into "good things." It could not do otherwise than favor the trusts, the monopolistic manufacturers, the favored national bankers or any of the other big fry who fatten on the masses. To think for a moment that its most conspicuous representative, McKinley, will try to cut loose from them and select anybody for his cabinet who is not entirely satisfactory to them is merely to blind oneself to the logic of the situation.

The money-making combinations will be intrenched in all governmental places of power so long as the Republican party remains triumphant. That much is certain, and the people now realize it.—New York News.

Alger.

A thick and thin Republican organ declares: "The selection of Gen. Alger is objected to, but the objections are based on stories and rumors which were exploded long ago. The critics know that, yet so unconquerable is their propensity for fault-finding that they cannot refrain from condemning a selection with which people are generally satisfied."

Does not this beg the question? What information has the organ that there is satisfaction with the appointment of Alger? As for the objections, is it true that they were based on stories and rumors which were exploded long ago? Let us see.

1. Gen. Custer and Gen. Sheridan recommended the dismissal from the army of Gen. Alger because he absented himself without leave, which was equivalent in an active campaign, as all old soldiers know, to desertion in the face of the enemy. Is the story exploded? The story is part of the military records of the United States.

2. Criticism of Alger as a business man is based upon a decision of the Supreme Court of Michigan. The report is published. It is part of the records of that tribunal. It cannot be exploded or effaced. It stands confronting Gen. Alger and condemns him.

3. John Sherman's condemnation of Alger as a man who improperly used money to further his ambition to be nominated President of the United States stands in his printed memoirs. It is not exploded.

The selection of Gen. Alger for the position of Secretary of War is not merely mistaken, unfortunate, undesirable. It is a moral calamity.—Chicago Chronicle.

Congressional Extravagance.

When Speaker Reed, a few years ago, warned his fellow-Republicans that it would prove a dangerous thing from a party standpoint for them to furnish the country with the spectacle of a "billion-dollar Congress" they paid but little attention to him, and what he foresaw did happen. There was a political overturning which completely staggered them and lost them control of the Government for four years.

The country has now had another Republican Congress for two straight years, and it is a billion-dollar one beyond question. When Mr. Reed gave his former warning there was only a possibility of a billion-dollar Congress. The most conservative estimate of the cost of the present one to the people is forty-five millions more than the billion, which the then Czar of the House himself considered the height of extravagance!

Despite the desperate condition of the treasury, as well as of the country at large, every appropriation bill reported to the House during the present session has been larger than the similar bill of the preceding session. Thus the pace is set in extravagance for the next Congress, which will have a Republican President, who is sure not to set his face in favor of that economy which is contrary to the traditions of his party.

Reed Getting Democratic Support.

In his opposition to extravagance and favoritism Speaker Reed now finds his strongest supporters in the democrats of the country and in the house. He is opposed by his own party because he will not permit it to pursue the traditional republican policy of spending more money than there is in sight or will be in sight for several years to come. He may believe in the virtues of the new tariff now being framed, but he does not propose to place any mortgages on such collateral.—Sioux City, Iowa, Tribune.

The Four Burden-Bearers.

Food, fuel, clothing and shelter are the four essentials of existence in our climate. The Dingley bill as drafted puts nearly the whole burden of taxation upon these prime necessaries. The so-called farmers' schedule taxes every article of food for man or beast that may seek access to our market to supply local or temporary deficiencies. Bounties for campaign contributors, protection for trusts and the whole burden of federal taxation put upon consumption—the food, fuel, clothing and shelter of the people—this is the program. The "advance agent of prosperity" proves to be the arrived agent of injustice.—New York World.

Effect of Free Wool.

Some months ago the wool growers of this country were at great pains to show the enormous increase of the imports of raw wool since it had been put on the free list under the Wilson bill. Perhaps it did not occur to everybody that if the imports of wool had increased there must be a corresponding decrease in the amount of imports of woolen goods. The Wool Manufacturers' Association has recently furnished the following figures on this point. The imports were:

	Eleven months, 1895.	Eleven months, 1896.
Cloth	$23,511,581	$13,677,657
Dress goods	20,634,835	12,302,279

This shows that the manufacturers of this country have been able with free wool to sell in this country some $18,000,000 worth of woolen goods in one year, which, under the McKinley tariff bill, would have been imported.—Edwin Brainard, in Chicago Chronicle.

Highly Paid Labor the Best.

Americans can manufacture iron more cheaply than Englishmen, while paying much higher wages to labor, but it has been conclusively demonstrated that the best paid labor is the cheapest. England pays better wages than are paid on the continent of Europe, but in spite of that she has been able to maintain her supremacy, because she gets more service for a given amount of money. The same is true of labor in the United States. It is better paid than that of England, but in return it renders better service and is more efficient.—Pittsburg Times.

No Love Lost Between Them.

From the day when Joseph B. Foraker became a prominent figure in Ohio politics M. A. Hanna did not love him, nor has Mr. Foraker for a single moment loved Mr. Hanna. Party exigencies at times produced mutual action, but not mutual confidence. There is no reason for believing that Mr. Foraker is more kindly disposed toward Mr. Hanna now than when the friends of each were fighting each other tooth and nail at the direction, or with the approval of the two leaders.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Protection Another Name for Robbery

The present tariff law has been the best protector of American industries ever devised in this country, for it has enabled Americans to sell more goods and product abroad than ever before, but this is not what the millionaire manufacturers want. What they actually mean by protection is a measure that will so choke off foreign competition that they can sell their goods to their own people at two or three times their value.—Memphis Commercial-Appeal.

Asking for Too Much.

If Chairman Dingley can devise a bill that will collect $50,000,000 a year from the taxpayers without their knowledge or consent he will meet a long-felt want. Another way which is received with jeers by politicians and cheers by the people would be to reduce expenses $50,000,000 a year, but of course this is asking too much, and we hope the politicians will pardon us for ever hinting at such a revolutionary idea.—Louisville Post.

Fresh Burdens for the Farmer.

The Republicans are doing their best, as far as can be judged, to evade the responsibility they sued for. Instead of trying to remedy the constant and growing losses of the farmers the Republicans are actually engaged in preparing to legislate higher prices on the goods which the farmer has to buy and which, for lack of money, he cannot buy even at present prices.—Atlanta Constitution.

Bosses of New York State.

Republican rule in New York stands to-day for Platt and Payne, two men whose theories of political purpose and political methods are utterly corrupt, two men who represent what is worst and lowest in modern political life; two men neither of whom would dare submit his cause to the people, knowing that it would be buried under an overwhelming adverse vote.—St. Paul Globe.

Insist on Robbing the People.

To-day, when you could count on the fingers of one hand all the industries of the United States that could not compete on equal terms with the products of like industries in any other country in the world, we find that, so far from gradually diminished duties, a special session of Congress is to be called to restore them to the highest point ever known.—St. Paul Globe.

Political Pointers.

In the meantime nobody has recently mentioned Benjamin Harrison, formerly well known in the American republic, for a place in the cabinet.

In Mexico, if an advance agent misrepresent his show he is sent to jail. If Hanna lived in Mexico he would have to secure a pardon before running for Senator.

You are our kind of people, Madden, and we are sorry you lost, but we'll do a whole lot of the kind of work you were expected to do.—T. Cute Platt and M. Slippery Quay.

The Ohio wolves want the government to prohibit the entrance of foreign wool into this country. Perhaps one of the vultures will explain how this will increase our revenues.

The old McKinley tariff has been put back upon lumber, so far as the recommendation of the ways and means committee is concerned. The consumer of lumber, the house-builder, will soon find out how much more expensive it is to rear a dwelling under high protection than it has been under a moderate tariff.

HUNCHBACKS MADE ERECT.

The Remarkable Achievements of a French Surgeon.

A prominent physician and surgeon in France, M. Calot, has recently performed some remarkable operations on hunchbacks. He undertakes to straighten them out, and has already accomplished this prodigy in the case of thirty-seven subjects, and what is fully as marvellous as his discovery is that all his operations have succeeded. It should, however, be stated that children alone have been treated.

A hunchback is a person whose vertebral column has broken down. What should be done to correct this? First pick up the vertebral column, straighten it out and keep it upright by an apparatus until nature allows it to knit together. This operation is made when the patient is under the influence of chloroform. The child is laid on its stomach. Two nurses at its head and two at its feet pull so as to stretch the child. The others support him under the umbilical region and under the sternum. With his hands the Doctor makes an extremely vigorous pressure on the hump, proceeding with method until all the vertebræ have gone down to the level or are even beneath the neighboring vertebræ.

One perceives under one's hand, and sometimes even hears, bony crackings, which are evidence of the impairment of the two spinal segments and of the slipping of the vertebræ one over the other. The time required to arrange the spinal column properly is from one to two minutes.

The Doctor has not had one accident in thirty-seven cases. He has even been surprised at the facility with which the operation has been done. The great difficulty of the operation was to maintain the loosened spinal column in its normal position. The slightest false movement might bring about a rupture of the spinal cord and so cause instant death. A circular bandage of plaster is laid on a bed of wadding. Then over the vertebræ that constituted the hump are plugs of wadding, laid crosswise, allowing of the tightening of the plaster band without having to fear for the child any inconvenience in the functions of the abdominal thoracic viscera. Ten to fifteen minutes suffice for the construction of the apparatus. After that time the plaster is firm, the child can be brought to, and the operation is over.

This plaster apparatus should remain on the body three or four months. When it is taken off the back is flat. Then the first apparatus is replaced by a similar one for the same length of time. After the second or third apparatus the child is allowed to walk with a corset. That is the period of convalescence. The absolute removal of the deformity has taken exactly ten months.

The Academie de Medecine, the National Society of French physicians, has congratulated Doctor Calot on his communication made to that body explaining his methods, etc.

Pumping Water by Dog-Power.

The San Francisco Call says that there is a dog-motor on a Swiss ranch not very far from San Francisco. It has been in use for two years, and is found to be economical and in every way satisfactory. It is built on the same plan as the exercise runs which are often attached to squirrel-cages. In short, it is a barrel, which rotates as the dog inside of it runs. The power thus generated is communicated to a pump.

For more than a year this motor has been operated by a dog named Gyp, and she really likes the work, and knows more about pumping water than half the men in the State. When Gyp was first put into the machine she knew just what she had to do, and started in at a great rate. She ran so fast that she would have fallen from exhaustion had she not been lifted out. But as she has grown older at the business she has learned better.

But she likes the work as much as when she started. At first she did not know when to stop. She pumped and pumped, until the tank ran over all the time. In a few weeks, though, she was taught that all she was expected to do was to keep the tank full, and now she doesn't do any more.

When Gyp is taken to the motor in the morning, she first looks into the trough to see how much it lacks of being full. She then works accordingly, and when she thinks she has done enough, she runs out and takes a look at the trough. If it is full she lies down and rests, and if there are still a few inches remaining she starts again, and does not stop until the trough is running over.

All the water that Gyp pumps is for cattle to drink. It flows directly from the well into the drinking-trough, so that they can get it without trouble. Gyp knows as soon as she sees a band of steers making for the trough what they are after, and she starts pumping, so as to keep them from emptying it. Her idea seems to be to keep the trough full. In fact, she is unable to rest unless she knows it is in that condition.

Gyp has to work hard. Each stroke of the pump brings up about a quart of water, and she has to make about six jumps to do it; but when she feels like working nothing stops her, and the pumps make at least ten strokes a minute, or perhaps 500 gallons of water in ten hours.

Gyp is the only dog on the ranch that has ever liked the work. Others have been tried, but it is always necessary to lock them in to keep them from "jumping the job." Even Gyp's brothers always had business elsewhere whenever they thought there was any pumping to do.

There was one, to be sure, that was a good worker in his own way. He used to get so mad at being put in the motor that he seemed trying to wear it out for spite. He would run and run until the axle fairly smoked, but as soon as he saw that he couldn't do the machine any harm, he curled up in the bottom and went to sleep.

Consumption of Amber.

In Dantzic alone during last year nearly 100 tons of amber were turned to the smoker's purpose in pipes and cigarette holders. This, of course, is amber of the familiar yellow variety. Sicilian amber, on the other hand, shows a wonderful variety of tints, from ruby red to turquoise blue, as may best be seen in the private collection of Arnold Buffum, an American of fortune, who has made colored ambers his hobby, has written a book about them and has recently been on a visit to London, carrying with him a number of his finest specimens.

Not Long in Suspense.

The boy who was toiling up the long and devious hill turned out hurriedly when near the top to make way for a fat and frantic wheelman who had lost control of his machine.

"Say, Bub," yelled the bicyclist, "how far is it to the bottom of this hill?"

"I don't know exactly what the distance is," the boy called out after him, "but you'll be there in about four seconds, and there's a crick at the bottom of it."—Chicago Tribune.

WHEAT.

80 Bus. Per Acre.

With Salzer's new creations in Spring Wheat—to be sown before April 25—you can raise wheat at 40c a bushel and make money. How? Why, Salzer's Marvel Wheat has a record of 80 bus. per acre, and right here in Wisconsin it yielded in 1895 over 200 bus. on five acres. That pays handsomely at 40c a bu. It's a great wheat.

OATS.

209 Bus. Per Acre.

Salzer's Silver Mine Oats still leads the world, with a record right here in Wisconsin of 231 bushels per acre in 1896. What more do you wish? Don't this beat all? You see, Salzer's Seeds are bred up to big yields!

BARLEY.

173 Bus. Per Acre.

Jno. Breider, Mishicott, Wis., grew, in 1896, 173 bus. of Salzer's Silver King Barley from one measured acre, sworn to by five witnesses. That's immense, but you see Salzer's Seeds are bred to produce! That's why you get such big yields. Just try this!

CORN.

266 bus. per acre—that's wonderful. Well, Salzer's Seeds are bred to yields!

POTATOES.

1,667 Bus. Per Acre.

We know you can't believe it—it's too big! But Salzer's Seeds are bred to big yields.

GRASSES.

Largest growers of fresh, live Grasses and Clover Seeds in the world—hence our seeds are guaranteed. You can bet on our Clover and Grass Seeds growing! And such yields—6 tons of hay per acre! Well, you see Salzer's Seeds are bred to big yields.

VEGETABLES.

Finest, earliest to be had. Our Wisconsin Seed can't be beat. Why buy your seeds in stores when for even money you can buy them delivered free of us?

TRULY A FREAK.

The Dono Represents Bird, Beast, and Reptile.

The most wonderful freak yet discovered is a product of Patagonia. The head and breast are distinctly birdlike. The beak is that of a carnivorous bird. The plumage is that of the bird of the tropics, bright red and green predominating, but all the colors of the rainbow being there. The legs, although covered with down and feathers, are distinctively animal-like in shape, the toes being tipped with sharp claws. The leg and foot is like that of the raccoon. The tail is in shape a reptile's, narrowing down to a point at the tip from the size of the body. It coils its tail like a snake, and looking at that end alone one would take it for a reptile. The tail is also covered with down and very small feathers, which present a scale-like appearance. The queer bird is known as the dono.

BIRD, BEAST, AND REPTILE.

Our deposits of borax are believed to be practically inexhaustible.

The heliotrope has been discovered in New Mexico and Georgia.

The United States has 115 medical schools, regular, eclectic and homeopathic.

A great number of New Hampshire trout have been stocked in several California streams with good results.

Lead colic has been treated most successfully in Paris by administering large doses of olive oil. In chronic cases sixty grammes of oil a day were given with excellent results.

Teachers in Baden and other parts of Germany a hundred years ago were so poorly paid that they used to go about singing in front of the houses in the evening to earn a few extra pennies.

The total coinage, gold and silver, of the reign of Henry III. was £3,898; the total coinage of the reign of Victoria up to 1892 was £544,100,000, of which £312,300,000 were of gold and £231,800,000 of silver.

Toronto unions demand of aldermanic candidates that they shall vote for the abolishment of the property qualification for aldermen; union wages on city work and the abolishment of the contract system on city work.

Lucinda Bedford, an ex-slave, who died in Nashville, Tenn., at age of 94 years, left a fortune of considerably over $100,000. Her old master, William Bedford, who died before the war, set her free and left her his fortune of about $100,000.

Dr. Stuhlmann, who is traveling in Africa, has come upon a tree whose fruit gives out a tallow-like fat. The tree is one of the largest in the forests of Usambara, and the fruit is big and heavy, measuring a foot in length by half a foot in diameter. It is a new species of the guttiferi. The natives call it mkani, but the botanists name it Stearodendron Stuhlmanni.

The Russian authorities have intervened in behalf of the nightingale. The police of Kiew found some bird catchers who were on their way to Moscow with 600 nightingales in cages. The bird catchers were captured and fined and their little victims were taken to the Botanic Gardens and released. It is said they rose in the air in song, which was responded to by the other birds around.

The Champion Big Family.

Olean, N. Y., claims the champion big family of the country, the head of which is W. A. Field. He is the happy father of thirty-four children, twenty-seven of whom live at home with papa and mamma. The father is but 47 years old and his interesting brood consists of three sets of quadruplets, five sets of triplets, three sets of twins, while one, by some strange mischance, came into the world singly. Thirty-one of these children are living, eight being boys.

Salt Baths Are Good.

A hot salt bath gives almost instant relief to the victim of overexercise.

Pill Clothes.

The good pill has a good coat. The pill coat serves two purposes; it protects the pill, enabling it to retain all its remedial value, and it disguises the taste for the palate. Some pill coats are too heavy; they will not dissolve in the stomach, and the pills they cover pass through the system as harmless as a bread pellet. Other coats are too light, and permit the speedy deterioration of the pill. After 30 years exposure, Ayer's Sugar Coated Pills have been found as effective as if just fresh from the laboratory. It's a good pill with a good coat. Ask your druggist for

HUMOR OF THE WEEK

STORIES TOLD BY FUNNY MEN OF THE PRESS.

Odd, Curious and Laughable Phases of Human Nature Graphically Portrayed by Eminent Word Artists of Our Own Day—A Budget of Fun.

The Road to Wealth.

A gentleman saw the following advertisement in a paper: "The road to wealth. Send twelve stamps to ——" The gentleman sent twelve stamps, and in return for his outlay received minute instructions how to get to the Bank of England from any part of London.—Tit-Bits.

Did Him a Favor.

Pedestrian (to footpad)—Money or my life, is it? I was wondering how I was going to live through this week. Now I won't have to. Very kind of you. Shoot away.—Boston Transcript.

Noah's Claim to Wisdom.

Teacher—Who was the wisest man?

Tommy—Noah.

"Noah?"

"Yes'm. He was the only man who knew enough to come in when it rained."—Indianapolis Journal.

It Depends.

"Do you think," said the young man who had gone into politics, "that a man in my position can afford to be indifferent to public opinion?"

"I don't know," said Senator Sorghum, thoughtfully. "How much is your private income?"—Washington Star.

An Exigency Provided For.

Chambermaid (rushing in)—Please, mum, the cook's fell down the cellar and broke her arm!

Lady of the house (quickly)—I'll have it taken out of her wages.—New York Journal.

Plain and Blunt.

"I'm a plain, blunt man, Margarete, and can frame no honeyed speeches. Will you marry me?"

"I'm a little on the plain, blunt order, myself. No!"—Detroit Free Press.

No Fixed Rule.

"You cawn't set down no fixed rule o' conduct in this life," said old Wiggins, the Barley Mow orator. "Samson got into trouble 'cause he got 'is hair cut, and Absalom got into trouble 'cause he didn't."—Tid-Bits.

Reparation.

John Butts, Sr.—I want to leave my property to my two sons—one tenth to my youngest son, John Butts, and nine-tenths to my eldest son, Royal Chesterfield Chauncey de Peyster Butts.

Family Lawyer—H'm! Do you think that's quite fair?

John Butts, Sr.—Yes; I want to make some kind of reparation to Royal for allowing his mother to give him such a crackjaw name.—Tit-Bits.

An Exciting Game.

Mamma—Oh, Billy! Don't you know it is cowardly to strike your little brother?

Billy (indignantly)—I'm not acting like a coward. I'm pretending I'm his papa, and I'm punishing him.—Harper's Bazar.

A Good Thing.

One Matron—Since I have been married I have taught my husband good taste.

Another—Really? It was a good thing that you did not teach him before you were married. —Tid-Bits.

The Only Drawback.

Visitor—There is a panel in my new dining room that that would just fit.

Hungry Artist—Most happy, I'm sure.

Visitor—Only, when the room is paid for, I shall have no money for pictures. —Harper's Bazar.

Had Him Cut Down.

Tenderfoot—Is Slippery Sam hanging around here nowadays?

Alkali Abe—Naw. He was, but the Mayor had him cut down yist'day mawnin'.—New York Journal.

Poor Boy.

Rev. Dr. Choker—Ah, what a sweet little girl, and what a pretty dress she has! Will the little pet tell the minister her name?

The Little Pet—Arfer Fwederwick Wobinson.—Harlem Life.

Naturally.

Nurse Girl—I lost track of the child, mum, and—"

Mistress—Good gracious! Why didn't you speak to a policeman?

Nurse Girl—I wuz speaking to wan all the toime, mum.—London Pearson's Weekly.

Quite Prepared.

Doctor (sympathetically)—I trust you are prepared for the worst.

Weeping Wife—Quite. I had some lovely mourning bargains last week at Crepe & Wede's selling off.—Illustrated Bits.

Of Course.

"A horse is no good any more," declared the bicycle dealer; "ride him an hour and he's tired."

"Yes, but one of your durned machines is allus tired before you start to ride it," replied the farmer, who was just looking around.—Detroit Free Press.

The Brute.

She—Is my hat on straight, dear?

He—I don't see how in the nature of things it can be.

She—And why, pray?

He—Because your head isn't.—Boston Courier.

His Caliber.

Nora—Oh, guess what? George promised to buy a bicycle built for two.

Cora—I presume he meant two dollars.

Reason to Like Her.

Preacher—How do you like your new mamma, Johnnie?

Johnnie—Oh, purty good. I et a jar of plums yistaday and she blamed it on the hired girl.—Cleveland Leader.

At Last.

Jack—Hurrah, Mamie! We can get married now. Union stock is going up like lightning.

Mamie—Oh, Jack! And have you some?

Jack—No; but our father has."—New York World.

Awfully Slow!

He—Darling, I have loved you ever since first we met.

She—Well, why didn't you say so long ago? Did you think I was a mind-reader?—Cleveland Leader.

Their Reflections.

Mrs. Gray—Mr. Soule is going to preach to-morrow. I wouldn't miss hearing him for anything."

Mrs. Greene—I'm awfully sorry I shan't be able to go."

Mrs. Gray (after saying good-by)—No wonder she doesn't want to be seen in that shabby old cape again.

Mrs. Greene—Got a new bonnet or something, I suppose.—Boston Transcript.

Information.

"Young man," said a wealthy city man to his spendthrift nephew, "I laid the first foundation of my fortune by saving cab-fares."

"I didn't know you ever drove one, uncle," remarked the youth.—Tid-Bits.

The Piano Salesman.

Mrs. Reckets (interestedly)—Have you taken the young gentleman to board whom I see around your house so much lately?

Mrs. Vanwart (wearily)—No; he is merely trying to sell us a piano.—New York Journal.

No Greenhorn.

Boat official—To put out that electric light turn it off the same as you would gas.

Pat—Av coorse! Oi'm no granehorn; but yez mey lave me a few matches in case Oi wants t' loight it agin.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Hard on Hubby.

An exchange announces, on the death of a lady, that "she lived fifty years with her husband and died in confident hope of a better life."—Texas Sifter.

A Crusty Opinion.

"Uncle Theophilus, what is a grass widow?"

"Well, she's a widow whose husband didn't have to die to get rid of her."—Detroit Free Press.

Modern Improvements.

House Hunter—Seems to me this house isn't very well built. The floor shakes when we walk.

Agent—Um—yes; that's the new kind of spring floor for dancing, you know.

House Hunter—And those stairs creak terribly.

Agent—Y-e-s; we furnish this new patent burglar alarm staircase without extra charge.—Boston Traveler.

How the Day Was Won.

"Sire," quoth the chief of staff, "the Amazons are assembling on the right wing and evidently intend to turn our left with a vigorous charge."

"Do you mean the Amazonian wheel corps?"

"Yes, sire; and they are a gallant sight. Their wheels have all been renickeled and they have donned their new ashes of roses bloomers for the first time. What shall we do to avert the danger?"

"Order out the royal sprinkling carts."

"Yes, sire."

"Let them make the battle ground in front of our left wing as muddy as possible."

"Yes, sire."

"Just as soon as the charging Amazons in their new silk bloomers strike that mud they will whirl about and ride back as fast as they can pedal."

"For what, sire?"

"For their mud guards, stupid. Then, if we advance rapidly enough to surprise them before they can get their helmets on straight, the day is ours."

And it was even so.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Lofty Perch.

A Philadelphia exchange tells of four riggers who recently had an exciting experience. They were at work on a standpipe at the Bristol water-works, when the scaffold gave way, leaving them imprisoned on the top of the pipe, one hundred and forty feet in the air.

One of the riggers, more daring than his companions, slid down a small rope and reached the ground in safety; but the other three were afraid to venture. There they sat for hours.

When dinner-time came their pails were sent up to them by means of a pulley attached to the rope by which their companion had descended, and they made a meal under circumstances which would have taken away the appetite of ordinary mortals.

It was not until nearly dark that a block and tackle could be attached to the rim of the pipe, and the workmen were lowered from their perilous perch.

The Emperor's Dinners.

Some curious details regarding the private life of the German imperial family have recently been made public. It appears that the emperor contracts with his chief butler for meals at so much per head. An ordinary dinner costs less than $2 a plate, exclusive of wine, but on festive occasions the cost of a dinner varies from $5 to $10. The emperor usually has three meals daily—a meat breakfast, a hot lunch and a six-course dinner, the latter being always disposed of under an hour. There are French and German chefs, but the French are never used for the imperial family service. On the menu are hock, Bordeaux and champagne daily as table wines, and the cellars of the Schloss hold 2,000 bottles of fine wines and 4,000 casks of other wines and liquors.

Millions of Cook Books Given Away.

There is one large house in this country that has taken business on its turn and means to ride in on the rising tide. Alive to the signs of better times and to the best interests of the people, they are now circulating among families a valuable publication known as The Charles A. Vogeler Company's Cookery Book and Book of Comfort and Health, which contains very choice information on the subject of cooking. Receipts for the preparation of good, substantial and dainty dishes, prepared especially for it by a leading authority, will be found in its pages. Much care has been taken in its preparation and distribution, with the hope that it will be just the thing needed for housekeepers, and just the thing needed also for the care of the health and household. As a Cookery Book it will be invaluable to keep on hand for reference.

It also contains full information in regard to the great remedies of this house, which provide against bodily ailments, especially the Master Cure for Pains and Aches, St. Jacobs Oil.

To give some idea of the labor and expense of this output, more than 200 tons of paper has been used in its publication, and at the rate of 100,000 a day, it has taken several months for the issue.

The book can be had of druggists everywhere, or by enclosing a 2c stamp to The Charles A. Vogeler Company, Baltimore, Md.

Stupid Litigation.

A stupidly obstinate piece of litigation has just been settled by the house of lords. Two Aberdeenshire land owners quarreled over the right to fish in the River Dee, which borders their estates for 150 yards. Both admitted that the fishing was of no value, but they have spent $15,000 to have their rights decided.

Olga Nethersole, the actress, has turned her attention to writing, and will give advice of a practical nature to "The Girl Who Aspires to Elocution." Her contribution will appear in an early issue of The Ladies' Home Journal.

Half Fare Sunday Excursions.

The Nickel Plate Road will sell one day limit excursion tickets between any two local points at rate of one fare for the round trip.

The most facile play writer was Lope de Vega. He wrote over 1,800 dramas besides a vast quantity of other works. About 300 of his best plays are published in a thirty-volume edition.

Coughing Leads to Consumption.

Kemp's Balsam will stop the cough at once. Go to your druggist to-day and get a sample bottle free. Sold in 25 and 50 cent bottles. Go at once; delays are dangerous.

Good Excuse for Escaping Service.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

REASONS FOR USING

Walter Baker & Co.'s Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

SAPOLIO

"You see, to start with," said a Cleveland, Ohio, compositor, my work—that of setting type at the case—allows me little chance for exercise, and is too confining for anybody who is in the least subject to indigestion or dyspepsia. That has been my trouble for years, and I attribute the recent noticeable improvement in my physical condition to the occasional use of

RIPANS Tabules

I first heard of them through a fellow-workman who, on hearing my tale of woe, one day offered me a Tabule and said he would guarantee it to act on the liver. I took it under protest, but was surprised with the result. It was gentle but effective, and since then I have gradually noted an entire change in the working of my system, and I think that Ripans Tabules are the best remedy for liver and stomach troubles this side of anywhere. They are really in my case a substitute for physical exercise."

Voting Machines.

Albion Democrat.

Senator Shively, Friday, introduced a bill for the use of voting machines. The bill allows the county commissioners to purchase and use them, if desired, providing the machines purchased are thoroughly tested.

The machines, to be used, are to have the capacity to contain the tickets of seven political parties, with fifty candidates on each ticket. The ballots to be used, on the voting machines are to be the same as those provided for by existing laws, with the exception that names of candidates may be placed such distance from the center of the ballot, as may be required by the voting machine. The bill provides that the present law relating to booths, chutes and rooms for holding of elections, shall continue in force, except that there shall be only one machine, and that it shall be properly locked with two locks, and shall not be opened until the polls are closed.

No person is to remain in the booth with the machine longer than one minute, and if he remains longer he may be removed by the inspector. When the polls are closed and the statement taken off the machine, it is to be signed by the election inspector, and read aloud by him to all the people present, and every opportunity is to be given to the public to compare the written statement with the figures shown by the open machine.

County commissioners, of counties in which the voting machines are to be used, according to the bill, subdivide each township into voting precincts, each precincts to contain, not to exceed, 600 voters, as nearly as may be ascertained, from the votes of the last preceding general election. The bill provides that the voting machines may be used in the city elections, being delivered by the clerk of the circuit court to the mayor of the city, who shall receipt for the same. The machines are to be returned within five days after election.

Any unauthorized person found in possession of a voting machine, similar to those officially adopted, is to be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined; and any person attempting to tamper with, deface or impair any voting machine, is to be deemed guilty of a felony.

Knoder-Mortorff

At the Lutheran parsonage last night Rev. J. D. Brosy joined in marriage Thomas Knoder and Miss Lillian Mortorff. After the ceremony the happy couple repaired to the home of the brides' parents about four miles out in the country where a reception was tendered them by the parents of the bride. The Trumpet Note Band Band of which Mr. Knoder was a member, was also present and music was one of the chief attractions, besides a good supper.

Mr. and Mrs. Knoder are both worthy young people and have the best wishes of the COURIER and their many friends for their future happiness. They left on the noon Lake Shore train to-day for Pleasant Lake where they will visit relatives a few days.

Growing Children

One-third of all the children die before they are five years old. Most of them die of some wasting disease. They grow very slowly; keep thin in flesh; are fretful; food does not do them much good. You can't say they have any disease, yet they never prosper. A slight cold, or some stomach and bowel trouble takes them away easily.

SCOTT'S EMULSION of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites is just the remedy for growing children. It makes hard flesh; sound flesh; not soft, flabby fat. It makes strong bones, healthy nerves. It changes poor children to children rich in prosperity.

Book about it free for the asking.

OBITUARY

Blessed are the dead That die in the Lord.

Elizabeth Ann Lahnum was born in Wayne, Co. Ohio., April 15, 1845, and departed this life at her home in Auburn, Feb. 23, 1897, age 51 years, 10 months and 8 days. She was the happy mother of eleven children; husband, ten children, one sister and two brothers are living to mourn her gain and our loss. One child Oscar Marion, preceded her Aug. 12, 1865, when one year, 7 month and 23 days of age. The happy family have enjoyed family reunions, and was to have another last Sunday, but owing to illness of Nanie, who lived at Grand Junction, Mich., and Wesley, who lives at Ontario, Ind., could not reach home, all others at home. The dinner was not enjoyed by mother, and the remark was made by one, "Mother it seems as if we are not to meet all at home again?" It was true. Our dear mother had one great motto, "Let us love one another." She was called away without a moment to say good bye, or to leave a word. But the Lord knew we had been instructed from day to day both by her teaching and daily life, what to do to meet her dear soul in heaven? Her daily prayer has always been that we be an unbroken family in heaven. "Praise the Lord." The funeral was at the Baptist meeting house Thursday Feb. 25, at 2 p. m. and interment at Woodlawn. Services were conducted by Bro. Wm. Miller, of Jerry City, Wood Co. Ohio, and Bro. T. J. Cox, of Tecumseh, Mich. The last words with her pencil in writing a card was, I am saved by the almighty power of Christ.

"Praise the Lord. "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God. 1st John, 3rd chapter and 9th verse.

The Grand-st Remedy.

Mr. R. B. Greene, merchant, of Chilhowie, Va., certifies that he had consumption, was given up to die, sought all medical treatment that money could procure tried all cough remedies he could hear of, but got no relief; spent many nights sitting up in a chair; was induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery, and was cured by use of two bottles. For past three years has been attending to business, and says Dr. King's New Discovery is the grandest remedy ever made, as it has done so much for him and others in his community. Dr. King's New Discovery is guaranteed for Coughs, Colds and Consumption. It don't fail. Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 2

DON'T!

It has only been a few weeks since the Postal authorities in Washington held the public sale of uncalled for letters and parcels which had been sent through the mails without the return card printed thereon. Frank I. Jones, first assistant Postmaster General has sent out the following notice to be posted in public places and postmasters are to call their patrons attention to the same.

"Don't mail your letter or valuable package without having your own address written or printed upon the upper left-hand. [Give Street, Number, and Postal Station in large cities.]

This will insure its return to you if not delivered, and will prevent its being sent to, and opened at the Dead Letter Office."

Remember that for a very small sum we can furnish you 250, 500 or 1000 envelops printed at a very surprisingly low price. Your letters will always be returned to you then.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The usual steal was put through the Senate a few days ago. They voted to pay their journal clerks $205 extra for completing the journal. The question is, why do not these men complete their journal each day, instead of sitting around talking while drawing their regular pay. This thing happens too often.

A steal was attempted in the House Thursday, but was promptly exposed. A firm had put on the desk of each member a copy of the statutes. It was supposed these books were a present to the members. But that day a bill was offered to pay $7.50 a set for them. It will not be paid.

Gov. Mount has signed the apportionment bill and it is a law.

Mr. Brown's bill for listing notes, mortgage's etc., with the assessor, for taxation purposes, passed the House Thursday, and goes to the Senate. The vote on it was 70 to 17.

Senator Gilbert of Angola, has a bill that has passed both houses, and will now go to the governor, making it illegal to take fish at any time of the year in any way except by hook and line. It is the most stringent bill ever passed on this subject.

Senator Phares's bill regulating the collection of taxes delinquent by county treasurers and allowing them 8 per cent., was passed.

The bill passed by the last session and vetoed by the governor, providing for a fixed time to draw grand and petit jurors, was passed over governor Matthews' veto.

Senator Shively's bill providing for a visiting day at all benevolent and penal institutions, was passed.

Engrossed house bill 129, providing that discharged prisoners shall be sent to the place of their choice in the prison district and given a suit of clothes and $10 in money, was passed.

FROM TEXAS.

We have just received a letter from John Pepple, at Hillsboro, Texas, in which after discussing some personal matters, he says:

"I get the COURIER now regularly. We are as well as common. It don't seem much like Spring up in Indiana, by what the COURIER says. Here we have all our gardens planted, our peas, spring onions, radishes, lettuce etc, are all growing nicely. The plum trees are white with blossoms, oats about all sowed and up and growing nicely. Plenty of strawberries in market in Galveston and Houston. Farmers are busy preparing their corn ground. We have had a delightful winter, with a steady temperature about cold enough for frosts in the morning and sometimes colder, but no blizzards at all."

This sounds very spring-like up here in DeKalb this extremely cold winter morning, Feb. 26, with frosty snow sifting down on the bare and frozen fields. Well, we hope Mr. and Mrs. Pepple will enjoy their southern home, and a good degree of prosperity.

WATERLOO, IND., Jan. 20, 1897.

To whom it may concern;—I have suffered with eczema for four years and had it bad. I tried three different doctors and got no relief. I then called on Dr. Rosenbury and he took my case and I soon got better and still improved, till now I am well and comfortable, and will say that this is given voluntarily for the good of others. I don't begrudge the money I paid him. I am comfortable and well. Yours With Respect,

EDWARD WAREHAM.

Stop over Privilege at Washington.

A ten day stop-over at Washington, D. C., is now granted on all through tickets between the east and west, via Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Stop-over will also be granted on the return journey made on round trip ticket, within the final limit of such tickets, but not exceeding ten days. Passengers will deposit their tickets with the Ticket Agent at B. & O. R. R. Station in Washington, who will retain them them until the journey is to be resumed, when they will be made good for continuous passage to destination by extension or exchange. This arrangement will doubtless be greatly appreciated by the traveling public because it will permit the holders of through tickets to make a brief visit to the National Capital without additional outlay for railroad fare. 8-9

Robert Culbertson Dead.

G. S. McCord returned this forenoon from a trip out in the country, where he was called to make arrangements for the burial of Robert Culbertson, father of H. R. Culbertson. He died last night about midnight at the residence of Mr. Welch southeast of town, the Old Coy farm. He had made his home there for some time as Mr. Welch is a relative. The funeral will be at the residence Saturday at 10 a. m. and interment will be in Evergreen cemetery in Auburn. Mr. Culbertson was one of the best known and respected of the older citizens of that section. His age was about 81 years.

$3,000

J. H. Gugerli, though his attorneys Roby & Link have brought suit for $3,000 damage against the Lake Shore Railroad Co. It will be remembered that Mr. Gugerli was hurt in the wreck at Fort Wayne on Dec. 14, 1896. He a few days afterwards agreed to release all claims for $50 and six tickets to Fort Wayne. Later this amount was tendered Mr. Gugerli in paper money and he wou'd not accept it, as he wanted gold. Then about the middle of January he was tendered the amount in gold coin and he then concluded that the sum was not large enough to cover his loss and so would not accept this offer. Mr. Gugerli claims that the injuries he received prevent him from his work as tailor, has therefore brought suit for $3000 damages.

STOP MY PAPER.

Angola Magnet

Occasionally the threehold of the country newspaper office is crossed by a man who says, "Stop my paper. Times is hard, and I can't afford to take it any longer. Fact is, you charge too much fur it. Why, I can git the Toledo Blade or the Inter Ocean, or the Family Story Paper fur a dollar a year; they're a heap bigger'n yours, and you charge a dollar'n a half. Your paper's good enough, but I can't stand so much expense, and I'll let it stop fur awhile." And the man goes home to read news from all quarters of the world—except the town and county in which he lives—or to sit entranced over the marvelous work of some fertile imagination in a love story, but he will be as ignorant as a sheep of the occurrences of the greater part of his own town and county. He will know nothing about the stores offering the most tempting bargains, nor of the fine live stock offered for sale by his neighbors. If he enjoys the social features of life among his neighbors and acquaintances, he finds no record of what they have been doing, in either of his big city papers—he has shut his eyes to what is going on around him. If that man should die, (and very likely he will, and probably younger than if he had not been isolated') will the Toledo Blade of either named above, sound his virtues in a lengthy obituary notice? Would either of them announce that a fine boy had come to bless his home, and add that father was the most promising man in the community? Would the Family Story Paper tell him where to buy his winter supplies and warm clothes cheapest and would it add sympathizing words in time of trouble? Not a bit of it. Every person should make it a point to have the home paper first and then as many more as may be consistent with purse and inclination.

Ducks Dive Deep.

Michigan City, Feb. 23.—To catch wild ducks on books sunk by fishermen to great depths in the lake is not an infrequent occurrence. The tug Diamond lifted hooks yesterday and brought in twelve ducks, together with the fish and sturgeon that were caught. The hooks which the Diamond lifted were set to depths ranging from fourteen to seventeen fathoms, or from eighty-four to 102 feet, and the ducks had to dive these depths to reach the hooks. It seems incredible that ducks can dive to such a depth, but they have gone even deeper, and the limit of their capacity for diving is scarcely known. They have been caught in thirty-five fathoms, or 210 feet, and it is said they have gone as far as 350 feet for the bait with which fishermen tempt the appetites of the finny tribe.

COURT

This forenoon, Thursday, grand jury returned three indictments against county officer and ex-officers, on charges of forgery.

They were Auditor Borst, Ex-Treasurer Sawvel and Ex-Surveyor Hook. All three were placed under arrest by the sheriff. Sawvel pleaded guilty; Hook pleaded not guilty, and Borst asked for more time before making a plea. Borst and Hook gave bonds. Each was indicted on a single count, as that is enough to cover the whole ground.

The case of Sarah Emerick vs Peter Emerick was called up Wednesday and a statement made. It seems that Mrs. Emerick complains that Peter has worked her farm but has not given her her share of the crops, etc. and so she asks damages to the extent of several hundred dollars.

The Corbin will case called out several arguments from attorneys McClellan, Rose and Roby, who represented the different interests at stake. It appears that thirty years ago yesterday, Mary Corbin made a will, in which among other items, she gave a piece of land to her son Charles Corbin on conditions that he must take care of an invalid daughter of hers, Charles sister Mary. And in' case Charles died before Mary did, then the other brother was to care for Mary, and as it would appear, that he would then have the land. But Charles sold the land to Freeman Kelley, in whose possession it is yet, and a few years later died leaving the care of Mary to the other brother, Abram. Abarm took care of her without pay till a few years ago, when he died, and now Mary has to fall to the care of his heirs, Worth Corbin and Amy Fisher. It is contended that no matter what happened, the invalid, Mary, should have the benefit of the land set aside from her mother's estate for her support. It is too intricate a question for us and we will wait to have the court settle it.

The case of Oppenheimer vs Jackson towhship was called up. This is like the others, as the question turns on the right of a firm that sells furniture to a township, to collect the value thereof when the township is already in debt more than the legal limit. The two sides were argued by J. W. Baxter and J. H. Rose.

Numerous other cases were called up, but it seemed that the parties generally were not ready. A number of cases were set for Monday, March 15. Among them is the one against A. D. Moore, and the Sherwood case. On Wednesday, March 17, are Wolf vs Wolf; Aultman & Miller vs Cole.

On Thursday, March 18, are set: Hirsch vs Loewenstein; Showalter vs Ellert in which Ellert refuses to pay a bill as he says a broken leg was not set properly; Henderson vs Patterson; Schlatter vs Rowley.

On Friday, March 19, are set: Dittmars vs Smithfield; Austin vs Same; Gandy vs Keel; Emerick vs Emerick; Pierson vs Corbin. All the above, we believe, are for the jury. But Martin vs Alsbaugh and Squires vs Becher, are before the Judge.

Saturday, March 20, is Homerick vs Rideubaugh, and some other cases.

The trial jury will be called for 10 a. m. Monday, March 15.

Friday's Daily.

Although court is not in session, and the grand jury takes a rest over Friday and Saturday, the work goes merrily on in some of the departments of justice. This forenoon Frank Dills was arrested a second time for raising another order, and was taken in charge by Deputy Platter till he could get His mother went on his bond again.

As stated yesterday, the three men arrested, gave bands, and were liberated. Mr. Sawvel had the hardest time to get bail and Mr. Platter had him going about town for several hours, L. J. Miller finally went on his bond, and he was liberated.

It will be a matter of some surprise to learn that Mike Boland was appointed deputy auditor Feb. 25. As. Geo. Ralston was already a legal deputy, his appointment dating Feb. 22, the appointment of a second deputy, seems to foreshadow a change in that office. Just what it was done fore, we are not fully advised.

Saturday's Daily.

The absence of regular court work Friday gave us a chance to pick up the odds and ends of other items that had been called up and disposed of.

CRIMINAL DOCKET.

There are a number of entries here, including charges for violating the liquor laws, gambling, etc.

The first one bearing an indictment, is a joint one against Frank Borst and Reuben Sawvel, the charge being forgery. Borst gave bail $1000, with L. J. Miller on his bond. Sawvel gave the same amount with L. J. Miller and J. B. Baxter as bondsmen.

The next on the docket is J. M. Hook, charged with grand larceny. This we believe is for a county order of $175 without having any bill or claim to show for it. Mr. Hook denies all knowledge of it, and pleads not guilty, A. W. Madden is on his bond of $500.

The next is a joint one against F. A. Borst and Frank Dills, the charge being grand larceny, the arrest being made Friday forenoon. The bonds were placed at $1000 each. Mrs. Emily Dills went on Frank Dills' bond.

CIVIL DOCKET

In the partition case between Lewis and Thomas Brown, a sale of the land for $1900 cash was reported. This was approved and a deed ordered made out.

The divorce case between Wm. and Daisy Wolf was dismissed by the plaintiff.

The case of Sharpless vs Shellhouse on a note was settled by the parties for $160.

A similar case against Shellhouse, by A. J. Little was settled at $87.50.

The case of D. Blucher vs A. Zonker for false imprisonment resulted in a judgment for defendant for costs. An appeal was granted to the supreme court.

The case of Gard vs Gump, on a mortgage, there had been a motion for a new trial, but this was withdrawn.

The case of Kiplinger vs Stamets on a mechanic's lien, there was a judgment for the plaintiff.

The case of Kuhn vs Weaver was dismissed at defendant's cost.

The one of Farnum vs Gee on note was also dismissed.

The case of Levy vs J. M. Shull on note resulted in a judgment for plaintiff for $87.

PROBATE DOCKET.

The following reports were examined and contined two years:

R. N. Crooks, guardian of Marion C. Worth Corbin for Mina Corbin, Richard Shull for Madge Haskins, Mary E. Paul for Nathan Haggerty, Isaac Hague for Mary W. McBride, Wm. Olinger for Samuel L. Olinger Daniel Shilling for Clara Shilling, Geo. D. Weaver for Samuel C. Weaver.

The following guardians made final reports and were discharged Nathan Elliott for the Jane Elliott heirs.

A. W. Beehler was granted privilege to purchase a piano for Marion Frazheim.

John H. Heitz for Calvin Heitz continued to May tern.

ADMINISTRATORS.

E. D. Metcalf for Daniel Metcalf estate continued to October term, Jacob Walborn for David Price estate continued 1 year, P. D. West for D. C. Headley estate, continued two years, D. D. Diehl, executor Sawyer will, sale reported and deed ordered, Ruth Bubb for Bubb estate, asks to have estate set over to her. D. Tomlinson and W. L. Blair appointed appraisers.

A. Thrush for the Sarah Fair estate, and J. Walborn for the Henry Wartensleben estate, each continued one year.

John W. Porter for Irene Wood estate made final report and was discharged.

W. H. McIntosh for the Noah Lung estate and J. W. Clark for the J. McClure estate. were continued one year.

R. S. S. Reed for Margaret Sheets estate continued to May term 1898.

D. D. Diehl reported final settlement of J. P. Wagner estate and was discharged.

J. A. S. Hamman for J. A. Hamman estate contined till Oct term.

ADJUSTMENTS.

D. B. Keller administrator of the Louisa Cherry estate, reported the legal posting and publication of notices and sale of real estate to A. J. Mason for $600. Report approved and deed ordered made out.

In the case of Dunn vs Gardner estate, on an account, an amended complaint was filed.

A claim of $30.38 was allowed to Peter Bishop on note due from T. H. Kirst estate, and Dr. Nusbaum was allowed $14, and J. R. Culbertson was allowed $20.84 in the same.

Krontz-VanAuk'n Scrap.

Ex-Surveyor Leaves the Court House, mouth Bleeding.

This afternoon about one o'clock, Cal VanAuken and Surveyor Krontz met in the auditor's office, and had a few words, that resulted in a blow on the mouth, given by Krontz. VanAuken had Krontz brought up before Squire Walter. It appears that Krontz found that some records that belonged to his office, and which he needed, had been taken from the auditor's office by VanAuken. Hence the trouble. Soon after this Krontz was arrested for assault and battery on a warrant sworn out by VanAuken. He went before Squire Walter and plead guilty, but as VanAuken was not present the matter was put off till next Monday at 9 a. m.

Mrs Boulton, 222 Crane St. Writes: Dayton, O., March 12, '96.—"My baby two months old and from her birth has had severe attacks of wind colic. I tried almost everything, but nothing gave her any relief until I got Dr. Hand's Colic Cure. I have used two bottles and would not do without it. It surely the best colic medicine ever made." Hand's Colic Cure and all of Dr Hand's Remedies at Fischler & Son's.

THE LEGISLATURE.

After all, the bill of Dr. Nusbaum regulating the work of auditors and commissioners did pass the House. It will throw many safeguards about the business of the county, and will, we believe, be of great benefit. We hope the Governor will sign it, as he probably will.

As present laws do not give a corporation the right to lease a railroad. Now a law is being put through so a company can do this. It is aimed to legalize the acts of the Eel River road in its combination with the Wabash.

The patent medicine bill over which Senator Nusbaum has had so much fun, was killed, just as he expected it would be. But he enjoyed the scare he had given them.

The cigarette bill has passed both Houses, making it illegal to sell to minors.

The bill for county treasurers to take office Jan. 1, was defeated for want of a quorum. It may come up again, as it ought to pass.

BILLS SIGNED.

The governor has signed house bill 231, an act concerning taxation; the bill legalizing bonds issued by Jeffersonville; bill for the relief of Henderson Dunkle, of Carroll county; bill reincorporating the Indiana cotton mills, at Cannelton; bill legalizing acts of deputies under age.

SEVEN MEN KILLED.

An Awful Explosion of Gas in a Boston Sub-Way.

By an explosion of gas in the sub-way at the intersection of Tremont and Boylston streets, Boston, Mass., seven persons were killed and a dozen or more were injured. The explosion wrecked three electric cars that were passing at the time, and one of them was burned. Several buildings in the vicinity were more or less damaged. The explosion was caused by escaping gas. Among the buildings damaged are the Hotel Pelham, the Knickerbocker and Chickering buildings and the Masonic Temple. Window glass in the buildings within 200 feet of the scene of the explosion was shattered.

All the dead are identified. They number seven, as follows:

Rev. W. A. Slack, President of Tufts College; G. B. Bigelow, conductor; Paul Hacket, motorman; Mrs. A. M. Bates; Coachman Sibley, of the Bates family; W. L. Vinal; Benjamin Downing. The shock of the explosion was felt in stores on Washington street, beyond Kneeland street. The excitement was intense. Street cars were stalled the whole length of Washington street. There was an immense crowd of people and many were in imminent danger of being run down by cars, engines or ambulances.

MINE DISASTER.

One Man Instantly Killed and Thirty-five Injured.

Mine 44, of the Kansas and Texas Coal Company, Huntington, Ark., exploded, burning thirty-five men, all of them seriously and some fatally. Bud Hanley was killed.

Mine 44 is situated about a quarter of a mile north of the main part of the town. It was a shaft sunk six years ago, but abandoned for about two years. This summer a slope was driven into the old working and it again commenced to produce coal. Over 100 men, half of them negroes, were employed in the mine.

A muffled roar startled the people and they turned their eyes toward the mine. A column of smoke and debris shot up high from the air shaft at the mine. Over the open ground and net work of railroad tracks rushed men and women. Many of the latter had husbands and other members of their families in the mine. In a few minutes after the explosion the men commenced to appear. Some were not burned at all, while others appeared with their skin standing up in blisters on their faces and hands, or hanging in ribbons.

WON'T BACK DOWN.

Greece Continues Her Preparations to Enforce Her Rights.

Athens special: Feverish activity continues throughout the whole country. Large quantities of arms, ammunition, provisions and military stores are being conveyed by transports to Thessaly. The massing of troops on the frontier is proceeding with the utmost speed and public feeling is at the very highest pitch of excitement. Those taking the coolest view no longer conceal their opinion that in the event of coercion by Europe, the center of interest will be transferred to the Turkish frontier where the most serious events may be expected. Many foreign correspondents have already started for Thessaly.

Weyler Returns to Havana.

Captain General Weyler has returned to Havana. No reason is given for his return. It is generally well known that his campaign in Matanzas and Santa Clara has been an ignominious failure, and that while he was claiming to have compelled the insurgents to retreat eastward to Principe they had in fact dodged past his columns and pursued their way westward. It is thought that the change in administration in Washington may have much, if not all, to do with his return, as he has been led to believe that President McKinley will not sanction the illegal arrest and detention of American citizens which, in many cases, passed without protest from the Cleveland government.

A Cyclone in Illinois.

Cairo (Ill.) special: A heavy thunder storm, with rain and wind, struck this section the other day. Roofs were torn off, plate glass windows smashed, a frame church under construction was destroyed, one house blown down and the wreckage burned. Eight persons were injured with one of the inmates killed and burned in the ruins. No other houses were lost. The wind had a velocity of fifty-six to eighty miles.

Big Wagon Factory Burned.

The wagon factory of Stricht Bros. of Oshkosh, Mich., was destroyed by fire. Loss, $100,000.

Reed Will Be Re-elected.

There will be no opposition whatever to the choice of Speaker Reed as the Republican candidate for another term in that position. There has been mention of Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio, and Mr. Hopkins of Illinois, as possible candidates, but neither gentleman desires to run.

A Mail Clerk Cremated.

A wreck occurred near Bennett's Mills, 100 miles west of Jefferson City, Mo. The mail car and contents were burned and the mail clerk was cremated. A brakeman was killed.

Attempted Bribery.

A sensation was sprung in the Kansas State Senate. Two members, Senators Titus and Jumper, arose and said they had each been offered $1,000 to support a certain measure concerning the Kansas City stock yards. The parties were named and one of them, Al Touchie, has been placed under arrest.

Left with $500.

Philip Delhaye, a Belgian, manager of the saloon of J. C. Greisheimer, in Boyce-ton, a suburb of Muncie, Ind., has departed with $500 belonging to Mr. Greisheimer. Delhaye is a window glass worker, and cannot speak English.

DEATH IN A FIRE.

Two Persons Meet Such a Fate at Wheeling, West Virginia.

Early Thursday morning inmates of Mrs. Mary Ferrell's boarding house, on the south side, Wheeling, W. Va., were aroused by screams from a room occupied by John Henderson, a porter, and his 11-year-old son, Henry, and James Bradley, another porter. The house was filled with smoke, and Bradley burst through a door and dragged Henderson and the boy out. Henderson and the boy were both terribly burned and died soon after being rescued. Brady was seriously burned and it is feared he will die. The fire was of an incendiary origin.

Miners Badly Injured.

A train on the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad, containing several hundred miners on their way to work, was on the main track at Brazil, Ind., when a freight backed around the Horn and crashed into it with great force. Several cars were badly wrecked, while the miners were thrown into a heap in the cars, and benches, tools, etc., were piled upon them. Eight miners were considerably injured; Lawrence McMains had one ear torn off, and was otherwise hurt.

Love, Rivals and Death.

Evansville (Ind.) special: Nicholas Trautvetter and Robert Moore, young farmers of Warrick County, sought the hand of Miss Sophia Sciek. When Trautvetter took the young lady home he was joined by Moore, en route home. Before completing their journey Trautvetter was murdered. Moore hastened home, saying his companion had been assassinated by unknown parties in ambush. Moore was arrested.

Fire at Fort Wayne.

Fort Wayne was visited by a destructive fire recently. The hardware store of Morgan & Co., together with the stock, the wholesale paper house of Nathan & Kircheimer and stock, and the Romary hardware store and stock are a total loss. Two other buildings were badly damaged by falling walls. The total loss will be $150,000. Several firemen were seriously injured by falling walls.

The Powers Send Their Ultimatum to Greece.

Athens special: A representative of the powers has presented identical notes to the Greek Government. It declares that the island of Crete shall be converted completely into an autonomous state under the suzerainty of the Sultan, and the demands that Greek vessels and troops be withdrawn within six days. They also presented a collective note.

He Fooled with Dynamite.

Peter J. Gerber of Painter Township, near Wooster, Ohio, was nearly killed while blasting stumps. One cap failed to explode, when he piled stumps on the one having the dynamite and set fire to the pile. All burned to ashes, but when he took a pole and stirred the ashes the dynamite exploded, mangling one side of his body from head to foot. He may recover.

Gun and Knife Duel.

Word has been received at Evansville from New Harmony, Ind., of a murder there Thursday. George Baker and Nathan Moultrie reside on farms, and while going home got into a drunken quarrel. Moultrie attacked Baker with a knife, and the latter used a shotgun, blowing off half of Moultrie's head. Baker surrendered.

Outrages on Christians.

Vienna special: Reports have been received here of outrages upon Christians in Old Servia by Arnauts and Turks. A wedding procession was set upon near Tetovo and twenty-one of the party killed or wounded, and an attack was made upon a priest and two peasants near the town of Prilip, all three of whom were killed.

Durrant Must Hang.

The Supreme Court of California has affirmed the decision of the lower court in the case of Theodore Durrant, found guilty of the murder of Blanche Lamont, in Emanuel Church, almost two years ago. The case will now be sent back to the Superior Court, which will fix the date for Durrant's execution.

A $500,000 Blaze.

The power house at Thirteenth and Mount Vernon streets, Philadelphia, Pa., from which the Union Traction Company operates a half dozen of its lines of trolley cars, was destroyed by fire. The loss is about $500,000, principally on the valuable machinery in the building. The loss is covered by insurance.

Work Suspended.

Work in the Globe Ship Building Company's yards at Cleveland, Ohio, has been suspended by reason of the strike of unskilled workmen. The strike of the helpers has made it necessary for the company to lay off between 300 and 400 skilled workmen.

Oldest Showman Dead.

Matthew Buckley, aged 87, the oldest showman in the United States, is dead at Delevan, Wis. He was born in England and was in the circus business continuously from early manhood until age compelled his retirement.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

FELLOW Citizens: In obedience to the will of the people and in their presence, by authority vested in me by this oath, I assume the arduous and responsible duties of President of the United States, relying on the support of my countrymen and invoking the guidance of Almighty God. Our faith teaches that there is no safer reliance than upon the God of our fathers, who has so singularly favored the American people in every national trial and who will not forsake us so long as we obey his commandments and walk humbly in his footsteps.

The responsibilities of the high trust to which I have been called—always of grave importance—are augmented by the prevailing business conditions, entailing idleness upon willing labor and loss to useful enterprises. The country is suffering from industrial disturbances from which speedy relief must be had. Our financial system needs some revision; our money is all good now, but its value must not further be threatened. It should all be put upon an enduring basis, not subject to easy attack, nor its stability to doubt or dispute. Our currency should continue under the supervision of the Government. The several forms of our paper money offer, in my judgment, a constant embarrassment to the Government and a safe balance in the treasury. Therefore, I believe it necessary to devise a system which, without diminishing the circulating medium or offering a premium for its contraction, will present a remedy for those arrangements, which, temporary in their nature, might well in the years of our prosperity have been displaced by wiser provisions.

With adequate revenue secured, but not until then, can we enter upon such changes in our fiscal laws as will, while insuring safety and volume to our money, no longer impose upon the Government the necessity of maintaining so large a gold reserve, with its attendant and inevitable temptations to speculation. Most of our financial laws are the outgrowth of experience and trial and should not be amended without investigation and demonstration of the wisdom of the proposed changes. We must be both sure we are right and "make haste slowly."

If, therefore, Congress in its wisdom shall deem it expedient to create a commission to take under early consideration the revision of our coinage, banking and currency laws, and give them that exhaustive, careful and dispassionate examination that their importance demands, I shall cordially concur in such action. If such power is vested in the President, it is my purpose to appoint a commission of prominent, well-informed citizens of different parties who will command public confidence, both on account of their ability and special fitness for the work. Business experience and public training may thus be combined, and the patriotic zeal of the friends of the country be so directed that such a report will be made as to receive the support of all parties and our finances cease to be the subject of mere partisan contention. The experiment is, at all events, worth a trial, and, in my opinion, it can but prove beneficial to the entire country.

International Bimetallism.

The question of international bimetallism will have early and earnest attention. It will be my constant endeavor to secure it by co-operation with the other great commercial powers of the world. Until that condition is realized when the parity between our gold and silver money springs from and is supported by the relative value of the two metals, the value of the silver already coined and of that which may hereafter be coined must be kept constantly at par with gold by every resource at our command. The credit of the Government, the integrity of its currency and the inviolability of its obligations must be preserved. This was the commanding verdict of the people and it will not be unheeded.

Economy is demanded in every branch of the Government at all times, but especially in periods like the present depression of business and distress among the people. The severest economy must be observed in all public expenditures, and extravagance stopped wherever it is found and prevented wherever in the future it may be developed. If the revenues are to remain as now, the only relief that can come must be from decreased expenditures. But the present must not become the permanent condition of the Government. It has been our uniform practice to retire, not increase, our outstanding obligations, and this policy must again be resumed and vigorously enforced. Our revenues should always be large enough to meet with ease and promptness not only our current needs and the principal and interest of the public debt, but to make proper and liberal provision for that most deserving body of public creditors, the soldiers and sailors, and the widows and orphans who are the pensioners of the United States.

The Government should not be permitted to run behind, or increase its debt, in times like the present. Suitably to provide against this is the mandate of duty; the certain and easy remedy for most of our financial difficulties. A deficiency is inevitable so long as the expenditures of the Government exceed its receipts. It can only be met by loans, or an increased revenue. While a large annual surplus of revenue may invite waste and extravagance, inadequate revenue creates distrust, and undermines public and private credit. Neither should be encouraged. Between more loans and more revenue, there ought to be but one opinion. We should have more revenue, and that without delay, hindrance or postponement. A surplus in the treasury created by loans is not a permanent or safe reliance. It will suffice while it lasts, but it cannot last long while the outlays of the Government are greater than its receipts, as has been the case during the last two years. Nor must it be forgotten that, however much such loans may temporarily relieve the situation, the Government is still indebted for the amount of the surplus thus accrued, which it must ultimately pay, while its ability to pay is not strengthened, but weakened, by a continued deficit. Loans are imperative in great emergencies to preserve the Government or its credit, but a failure to supply needed revenue in time of peace for the maintenance of either has no justification.

Larger Revenues Necessary.

The best way for the Government to maintain its credit is to pay as it goes—not by resorting to loans, but by keeping out of debt—through an adequate income secured by a system of taxation, external or internal, or both. It is the settled policy of the Government, pursued from the beginning and practiced by all parties and administrations, to raise the bulk of our revenue from taxes upon foreign productions entering the United States for sale and consumption—and avoiding for the most part every form of direct taxation, except in time of war. The country is clearly opposed to any needless additions to the subjects of internal taxation, and is committed by its latest popular utterance to the system of tariff taxation.

There can be no misunderstanding, either about the principle upon which this tariff taxation shall be levied. Nothing has ever been made plainer at a general election than that the controlling principle in the raising of revenue on imports is zealous care for American interests and American labor. The people have declared that such legislation should be had as will give ample protection and encouragement to the industries and the development of our country. It is therefore, earnestly hoped and expected that Congress will, at the earliest practicable moment, enact revenue legislation that shall be fair, reasonable, conservative and just, and which, while supplying sufficient revenue for public purposes, will still be signally beneficial and helpful to every section and every enterprise of the people.

To this policy, we are all, of whatever party, firmly bound by the voice of the people—a power vastly more potential than the expression of any political platform. The paramount duty of Congress is to stop deficiencies by the restoration of that protective legislation which has always been the firmest prop of the treasury. The passage of such a law or laws would strengthen the credit of the Government both at home and abroad, and go far toward stopping the drain upon the gold reserve held for the redemption of our currency which has been heavy and well-nigh constant for several years.

Reciprocity.

In the revision of the tariff, especial attention should be given to the re-enactment and extension of the reciprocity principle of the law of 1890, under which so great a stimulus was given to our foreign trade in new and advantageous markets, for our surplus agricultural and manufactured products. The brief trial given this legislation amply justifies a further experiment and additional discretionary power in the making of commercial treaties, the end in view always to be the opening up of new markets for the products of our country, by granting concessions to the products of other lands that we need and cannot produce ourselves, and which do not involve any loss of labor to our own people, but tend to increase their employment.

The depression of the last four years has fallen with especial severity upon the great body of the country, and upon none more than the holders of small farms. Agriculture has languished and labor suffered. The revival of manufacturing will be a relief to both. No portion of our population is more devoted to the institutions of free government, nor more loyal in their support, while none bears more cheerfully or fully its proper share in the maintenance of the Government, or is better entitled to its wise and liberal care and protection. Legislation helpful to the producer is beneficial to all. The depressed condition of industry on the farm and in the mine and factory has lessened the ability of the people to meet the demands upon them, and they rightfully expect that not only a system of revenue shall be established that will secure the largest income with the least burden, but that every means will be taken to decrease rather than increase our public expenditures. Business conditions are not the most promising.

It will take time to restore the prosperity of former years. If we cannot promptly attain it, we can resolutely turn our faces in that direction and aid its return by friendly legislation. However troublesome the situation may appear, Congress will not, I am sure, be found lacking in disposition or ability to relieve it, so far as legislation can do so. The restoration of confidence and the revival of business, which men of all parties so much desire, depend more largely upon the prompt, energetic and intelligent action of Congress, than upon any other single agency affecting the situation.

Duties of Citizenship.

It is inspiring, too, to remember that no great emergency in the 108 years of our eventful national life has ever arisen that has not been met with wisdom and courage by the American people, with fidelity to their best interests and highest destiny, and to the honor of the American name. These years of glorious history have exalted mankind and advanced the cause of freedom throughout the world and immeasurably strengthened the precious free institutions which we enjoy. The people love and will sustain these institutions. The great essential to our happiness and prosperity is that we adhere to the principles upon which the Government was established and insist upon their faithful observance. Equality of rights must prevail and our laws be always and everywhere respected and obeyed. We may have failed in the discharge of our full duty as citizens of the great republic, but it is consoling and encouraging to realize that free speech, a free press, free thought, free schools, the free and unmolested right of religious liberty and worship and free and fair elections are dearer and more universally enjoyed to-day than ever before.

These guarantees must be sacredly preserved and wisely strengthened. The constituted authorities must be cheerfully and vigorously upheld. Lynchings must not be tolerated in a great and civilized country like the United States; courts—not mobs—must execute the penalties of the law. The preservation of public order, the right of discussion, the integrity of courts, and the orderly administration of justice must continue forever the rock of safety upon which our Government securely rests.

One of the lessons taught by the late election, which all can rejoice in, is that the citizens of the United States are both law-respecting and law-abiding people, not easily swerved from the path of patriotism and honor. This is in entire accord with the genius of our institutions, and but emphasizes the advantages of inculcating even a greater love for law and order in the future. Immunity should be granted to none who violate the laws, whether individuals, corporations or communities; and as the Constitution imposes upon the President the duty of both its own execution and of the statutes enacted in pursuance of its provisions, I shall endeavor carefully to carry them into effect.

The declaration of the party now restored to power has been in the past that of "opposition to all combinations of capital organized in trusts or otherwise to control arbitrarily the condition of trade among our citizens," and it has supported "such legislation as will prevent the execution of all schemes to oppress the people by undue charges on their supplies or by unjust rates for the transportation of their products to market." This purpose will be steadily pursued, both by the enforcement of the laws now in existence and the recommendation and support of such statutes as may be necessary to carry it into effect.

Naturalization and Immigration.

Our naturalization and immigration laws should be further improved to the constant promotion of a safer, a better and a higher citizenship. A grave peril to the republic would be a citizenship too ignorant to understand or too vicious to appreciate the great value and benefit of our constitutions and laws—and against all who come here to make war upon them our gates must be promptly and tightly closed. Nor must we be unmindful of the need of improvement among our citizens, but with the zeal of our forefathers encourage the spread of knowledge and free education. Illiteracy must be banished from the land if we shall attain that high destiny as the foremost of the enlightened nations of the world, which, under Providence, we ought to achieve.

Reforms in the civil service must go on, but the change should be real and genuine, not perfunctory or prompted by zeal in behalf of any party, simply because it happens to be in power. As a member of Congress I voted and spoke in favor of the present law and I shall attempt its enforcement in the spirit in which it was enacted. The purpose in view was to secure the most efficient service of the best men who would accept appointment under the Government, retaining faithful and devoted public servants in office, but shielding none under the authority of any rule or custom who are inefficient, incompetent or unworthy. The best interests of the country demand this and the people heartily approve the law wherever and whenever it has been thus administered.

Congress should give prompt attention to the restoration of our American merchant marine, once the pride of the seas in all the great ocean highways of commerce. To my mind, few more important subjects so imperatively demand its intelligent consideration. The United States has progressed with marvelous rapidity in every field of enterprise and endeavor, until we have become foremost in nearly all the great lines of inland trade, commerce and industry. Yet, while this is true, our American merchant marine has been steadily declining until it is now lower, both in the percentage of tonnage and the number of vessels employed, than it was prior to the civil war.

Commendable progress has been made of late years in the upbuilding of the American navy, but we must supplement these efforts by providing as a proper consort for it a merchant marine amply sufficient for our carrying trade to foreign countries. The question is one that appeals both to our business necessities and the patriotic aspirations of a great people.

Foreign Policy.

It has been the policy of the United States since the foundation of the Government to cultivate relations of peace and amity with all the nations of the world, and this accords with my conception of our duty now. We have cherished the policy of non-interference with the affairs of foreign Governments, wisely inaugurated by Washington, keeping ourselves free from entanglement either as allies or foes, content to leave undisturbed with them the settlement of their own domestic concerns. It will be our aim to pursue a firm and dignified foreign policy, which shall be just, impartial, ever watchful of our national honor and always insisting upon the enforcement of the lawful rights of American citizens everywhere. Our diplomacy should seek nothing more and accept nothing less; we must avoid the temptation of territorial aggression. War should never be entered upon until every agency of peace has failed; peace is preferable to war in almost every contingency.

Arbitration is the true method of settlement of international as well as local or individual difference. It was recognized as the best means of adjustment of differences between employers and employes by the Forty-ninth Congress, in 1888, and its application was extended to our diplomatic relations by the unanimous concurrence of the Senate and House of the Fifty-first Congress, in 1890. The latter resolution was accepted as the basis of negotiations with us by the British House of Commons, in 1893, and upon our invitation a treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain was signed at Washington and transmitted to the Senate for its ratification, in January last. Since this treaty is clearly the result of our own initiative; since it has been recognized as the leading feature of our foreign policy throughout our entire national history—the adjustment of difficulties by judicial methods rather than by force of arms—and since it presents to the world the glorious example of reason and peace, not passion and war, controlling the relations between two of the greatest nations of the world, an example certain to be followed by others, I respectfully urge the early action of the Senate thereon, not merely as a matter of policy, but as a duty to mankind.

The importance and moral influence of the ratification of such a treaty can hardly be overestimated in the cause of advancing civilization. It may well engage the best thought of the statesmen and people of every country, and I cannot but consider it fortunate that it was reserved to the United States to have the leadership in so grand a work.

Extra Session of Congress.

It has been the uniform practice of each President to avoid, so far as possible, the convening of Congress in extraordinary session. It is an example which, under ordinary circumstances and in the absence of a public necessity, is to be commended. But a failure to convene the representatives of the people in Congress in extra session when it involves neglect of a public duty places the responsibility of such neglect upon the executive himself. The condition of the public treasury, as has been indicated, demands the immediate consideration of Congress. It alone has the power to provide revenues for the Government. Not to convene it under such circumstances I can view in no other sense than the neglect of a plain duty.

I do not sympathize with the sentiment that Congress in session is dangerous to our general business interests. Its members are the agents of the people, and their presence at the seat of Government in the execution of the sovereign will should not operate as an injury, but a benefit. There could be no better time to put the Government upon a sound financial and economic basis than now. The people have only recently voted that this should be done, and nothing is more binding upon the agents of their will than the obligation of immediate action.

It has always seemed to me that the postponement of the meeting of Congress until more than a year after it has been chosen deprives Congress too often of the inspiration of the popular will and the country of the corresponding benefits. It is evident, therefore, that to postpone action in the presence of so great a necessity would be unwise on the part of the executive because unjust to the interests of the people. Our actions now will be freer from mere partisan consideration than if the question of tariff revision was postponed until the regular session of Congress. We are nearly two years from a congressional election, and politics cannot so greatly distract us as if such contest was immediately pending. We can approach the problem calmly and patriotically, without fearing its effect upon an early election. Our fellow citizens who may disagree with us upon the character of this legislation prefer to have the question settled now, even against their preconceived views—and perhaps settled so reasonably, as I trust and believe it will be, as to insure great permanence—than to have further uncertainty menacing the vast and varied business interests of the United States. Again, whatever action Congress may take will be given a fair opportunity for trial before the people are called to pass judgment upon it, and this I consider a great essential to the rightful and lasting settlement of the question.

In view of these considerations, I shall deem it my duty as President to convene Congress in extraordinary session on Monday, the 15th day of March, 1897.

Triumph of the Whole People.

In conclusion, I congratulate the country upon the fraternal spirit of the people and the manifestation of good will everywhere so apparent. The recent election not only most fortunately demonstrated the obliteration of sectional or geographical lines, but to some extent also the prejudices which for years have distracted our councils and marred our true greatness as a nation. The triumph of the people, whose verdict is carried into effect to-day, is not the triumph of one section, nor wholly of one party, but of all sections and all the people. The North and South no longer divide on the old lines, but upon principles and politics; and in this fact surely every lover of the country can find cause for true felicitation. Let us rejoice in and cultivate this spirit; it is ennobling and will be both a gain and blessing to our beloved country.

It will be my constant aim to do nothing and permit nothing to be done that will arrest or disturb this growing sentiment of unity and co-operation, this revival of esteem and affiliation which now animates so many thousands in both the old and the antagonistic sections, but I shall cheerfully do everything possible to promote and increase it.

Let me again repeat the words of the oath administered by the Chief Justice, which, in their respective spheres, so far as applicable, I would have all my countrymen observe:

"I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

This is the obligation I have reverently taken before the Lord Most High. To keep it will be my single purpose—my constant prayer—and I shall confidently rely upon the forbearance and assistance of all the people in the discharge of my solemn responsibilities.

THE INDIANA SOLONS

The bill authorizing the Attorney General to bring suit at once against the Vandalia Railroad Company for the large indebtedness of the company claimed by the State passed the House Friday under a suspension of the rules and without a dissenting vote. The Vandalia investigation, to discover what amount, presumably $2,000,000, the company, it is said, has been defrauding the State out of for years under its old charter, was threatened with being smothered by the influence of the railroad lobby. The Senate killed the Sunday baseball bill by laying an amended bill on the table which provided for submitting the question to a popular vote. The House caught the friends of the Citizens' Street Railway asleep, and the bill providing for 3 cent fare was rushed through to engrossment. It will now require a square vote to kill the measure.

The House voted on the appropriation bill Monday; it passed by a strict party vote. The bill, in going through the House, made a net growth of only $15,663.91; the intermediate prison bill, by permitting the payment of the administration of the reformatory out of the earnings, permitted the deduction of $47,800 from the bill. Mr. Willoughby presented an amendment giving $15,000 for the Vincennes University, which accepted $15,000 in full of its claim two years ago. But his claim was not allowed. An effort to pass an amendment to pay Mrs. May, widow of the architect of the State House and Prison North, 5,000, was defeated.

The street railway bill, originating in the Senate, which abrogates the charter of the Citizens' company in Indianapolis in 1901, besides other street railway franchises, was passed by the House Tuesday. The minority attempted to break the caucus action on the Fort Wayne charter by threatening to defeat the bill, but the Indianapolis delegation stood firm. The Fort Wayne charter amendment, which was so violently opposed, provides that the councilmen of that city shall be elected by the several wards, six of them now being councilmen at large. Seeing that the majority would not yield on the railway bill, only thirteen voted in the negative. The House passed the compulsory education bill, compelling schooling of children between 8 and 14 years, and the voting machine bill, the commissioners to have right to use any approved device. The Peckinpaugh building and loan bill, the labor arbitration bill, the anti-cigarette bill, Senator Hawkins' bill permitting railroad companies to lease their property and franchises, the House bills providing for the release of mortgages and to prevent taking "provoke" cases out of the township where they originated, and the general pharmacy bill were passed by the Senate.

After an hour of constant wrangling, during which the House of Representatives was so noisy that one could with difficulty hear himself speak, that body defeated on Wednesday the bill passed by the Senate limiting street railroad fare in Indianapolis to 3 cents. Another wrangle followed on the bill amending the Fort Wayne charter so as to require all the councilmen to be elected by wards, but being a caucus measure the majority carried it through. The House then concurred in the Senate's amendments to the anti-trust bill and to the anti-cigarette bill, and both of the bills were sent to the Governor for his approval. For a time it looked as if a personal collision would result in the Senate over the repeal of the apportionment of 1885. The bill was passed. The House passed the prison contract labor bill, which provides that the product of the labor of convicts shall not be put on the market in competition with that of free labor, but shall be used in the State institutions. Other bills passed: Taxing insurance companies upon their receipts; requiring that chattel mortgage foreclosures be made in the Circuit Court; permitting incorporated towns to levy a tax of 50 cents on the hundred dollars for electric light plants; to wipe out wine rooms; to prevent the sale of impure miners' oils. The Senate defeated the State Board of Commerce bill for a commission to revise the laws relating to local government.

The House Thursday reconsidered its vote defeating the 3-cent car fare bill and its provisions limited to Indianapolis, and it was forced to a passage by a vote of 51 to 45. It was this bill which was bitterly fought by the Citizens' Street Railway Company. A "double" motion was made to reconsider and table, which was done. Gov. Mount appointed Hugh H. Hanna, Indianapolis; ex-Congressman George W. Cooper, Columbus; James R. Henry, Spencer, and Senator Ellison, Fort Wayne, directors of the Indiana reformatory at Jeffersonville. Following are some of the more important bills that have been finally passed: Bill making it unlawful to sell cigarettes to any minor; new street railroad bill; bill repealing the special verdict law; pharmacy bill; general medical bill; labor commission bill; Linck anti-trust bill; the bill to give the Republicans a majority in the boards of control for the hospitals for the insane and the institutions for the education of the blind and the deaf and dumb; bill providing for incorporation of farmers' live stock insurance companies; building and loan association bill.

Arizona's Big Claims.

The population of Arizona in 1890 was 59,620, including Mexicans, Indians and half-breeds. The total is now "claimed" to be 80,000. This is about half the population fixed as the ratio for a representative in Congress. And yet it is proposed to give this fraction of the congressional ratio two Senators and a representative in Congress and three votes in the electoral college. Its population is less than that of Portland, as returned by the last census. And yet if it was admitted to the Union with its sparse population it would be the equal in the Senate of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio or Illinois of the larger States, or of Oregon or Washington.—Portland Oregonian.

South Carolina's Fisheries.

Very few people know that the terrapin industry on the coast of South Carolina amounts to $100,000 annually, and that from $150,000 to $200,000 are raised from the sturgeon fisheries, and $50,000 from the shad fisheries.

NOBODY KNOWS BUT MOTHER.

How many buttons are missing to-day?
Nobody knows but mother.
How many playthings are strewn in her way?
Nobody knows but mother.
How many thimbles and spools has she missed.
How many burns on each fat little fist,
How many bumps to be cuddled and kissed?
Nobody knows but mother.

How many hats has she hunted to-day?
Nobody knows but mother.
Carelessly hiding themselves in the hay,
Nobody knows but mother.
How many handkerchiefs willfully strayed,
How many ribbons for each little maid,
How, for her care, can a mother be paid?
Nobody knows but mother.

How many muddy shoes all in a row?
Nobody knows but mother.
How many stockings to darn, do you know?
Nobody knows but mother.
How many little torn aprons to mend,
How many hours of toil must she spend,
What is the time when her day's work shall end?
Nobody knows but mother.

How many lunches for "Tommy" and "Sam?"
Nobody knows but mother.
Cookies and apples and blackberry jam,
Nobody knows but mother.
Nourishing dainties for every "sweet tooth"—
Toddling "Dottie" or dignified Ruth,
How much love sweetens the labor, forsooth?
Nobody knows but mother.

How many cares does a mother heart know?
Nobody knows but mother.
How many joys from her mother-love flow?
Nobody knows but mother.
How many prayers by each little white bed,
How many tears for her babes has she shed,
How many kisses for each curly head?
Nobody knows but mother.

RAMBLING ROBIN.

People called him "Rambling Robin." You could have seen him almost any day walking along with his head hanging down, and his eyes fixed on the ground. Nobody spoke to him, nor did he speak to anybody. His clothes were in rags. He wore no collar. Sometimes a red scarf was fastened round his neck, but oftener than not his neck and chest were bare to the cutting winds. Nobody knew where he came from, and nobody cared.

Some said he had been an actor at one time—others that he had been a doctor, while many maintained that he was a man who had gambled away a large fortune. Whatever he might have been, we could all see that he was no common vagrant.

I do not know whether the peace and good will which are supposed to come to all men at Christmas time had anything to do with it, but when I passed him one Christmas eve a few years ago, as I was hurrying off home, a sudden impulse led me to stop.

"Will you come home with me and have your supper, Robin?" I said.

He stopped and lifted up his head. Poor fellow! I noticed the tears spring to his eyes. Kind words were strangers to him.

"My—my supper!" he gasped. "I never have any supper."

I quite believed him. In fact, if he had said he never had anything to eat at any time I should not have contradicted him.

"But make an exception to-night," I urged. "Christmas time, you know. People break the ordinary routine of their lives at Christmas. Come along."

He made no answer; at least, not with words, but his eyes spoke plainly enough, and, quickening his pace, we strode along together toward my home.

At last we reached the house, and my wife opened the door. My little Mabel came toddling to meet me, and as I lifted her up and carried her back on my shoulder I told my wife I had brought a friend home for supper.

Robin and I sat talking together while Annie was getting the meal ready. His face had brightened, and his brilliant conversation confirmed the opinion I had formed of him, that he was a man of culture.

Mabel climbed down from my knee and went across to Robin.

"Have oo no 'ittle diri?" she lisped.

He stroked her hair gently, and shook his head.

"And no mamma?" she asked, looking first at me and then at the smiling face of my wife.

Robin turned his face away. Trust a child for finding the way to a man's heart.

"No, no mamma," he replied, after a pause.

Mabel sighed, and came across to me. "Is ee poor man?" she asked.

The intervention of my wife with the information that supper was ready saved me from replying.

The meal over, my wife rose to take Mabel to bed, but before she left the room the little girl ran back, and climbing on Robin's knee, kissed him "dood night." Then Robin and I pulled our chairs to the fire. His eyes were shining. He seemed a different man. I handed him a cigar, and we sat smoking for awhile without speaking.

"Would you like to hear the history of 'Rambling Robin?'" he asked, bending forward. "If you would, I will tell you the first part. The second part only begins to-night. * * * You shall hear that in a year or two."

I did not quite understand him, but I nodded and waited for him to start.

"Two lines," he began, "frequently occur to me. You remember them:

"'Who falls from all he knows of bliss,
Cares little into what abyss.'

"They are the truest lines ever written," he said, and he stared into the fire for a time without speaking.

"Listen, and I will tell you how I fell. Five years ago I was a young man—do I look young now?" and he pointed to his sunken cheeks and gray-streaked hair. "And yet five years have made the difference.

"My name is Robin Alerne. I was living with my father in Scotland and it was there I met my Flora. I can see her now, as she was the first day I met her. It was a glorious day in June. I had sauntered out with my rod in the morning, and was whipping the stream which ran along the outskirts of the wood, when the sound of sweet music fell on my ear. I turned round and saw a woman. She had not seen me, and as she came along she sang in a voice as sweet and pure as was the singer:

"'Her face is fair, her heart is true,
As spotless as she's bonnie, O!
The opening gowan, wet wi' dew,
Nae purer is than Nannie, O!"

"She was slinging her sun bonnet in her hand, and the sun was playing with her golden hair. Her neck was bare, its whiteness contrasting with her bonnie, sunburnt face.

"When she saw me she stopped and blushed. Then she threw on her sunbonnet and walked on hurriedly.

"She was a girl from the neighboring farm. I fell in love with her, and we met in the wood, unknown to any one. Then my father heard. He forbade me to see her, and told me if I disobeyed him he would turn me from the house.

"I met Flora the same night, and persuaded her, on that glorious moonlight night, to be my wife. We came south together, and I married her. I was successful in obtaining a clerkship, and after my work at the office was done, my wife would sit in the little chair by my side, while I sat writing at my desk. For I had the gift of writing bits of stories, and often when the night had drawn on, and work was put away, Flora and I would sit talking of the future, of the day when I should be a famous author, and the drudgery of the office should be a thing of the past.

"But our happiness was too great to last. The roses on my darling's face began to fade, and though she tried to smile away my fears, I felt sure she was going to be ill.

"Then one night when I came from the office, I found her ill in bed. In despair I sat down to write a story, which, if accepted, would enable me to get her away into the country, or to the seaside. I worked at it all night, and finished it. Then a week later I received a letter at the office from the editor telling me that my story had been accepted, inclosing a check and asking for more stories.

"Flora had been growing worse each day, but now, I thought, she should soon be better. I cashed the check and bought some luxuries for her, and, passing a flower shop, I went in and obtained a spray of lilies. They were her favorite flowers.

"Then I hurried away home. I could hardly walk fast enough, but at last I reached my little house, and entered. I ran upstairs and threw open her bedroom door.

"'Flora,' I cried. 'Success at last, my darling. You shall go away for a few days now.'

"She did not answer me. 'She must be asleep,' I thought, and noiselessly I walked across the room.

"I stood over the bed, looking at my sweetheart's lovely face. It was so calm, so beautiful, so pure. There was a sweet smile on her lips, and her hair was hanging down, framing her face in gold. My thoughts wandered back to that day in June, and the words of tha song came back to me.

"I knelt at the side of the bed, and, placing the spray of lilies in my Flora's little hand, waited in silence, watching and praying—praying that she would soon be restored to health again.

"She awoke with a little start.

"'I am so glad you have come, Robin,' she said, as I kissed her. 'I have had such a glorious dream. I was dreaming that you had written a book, and that the world was ringing with your name.'

"I interrupted her.

"'Perhaps the day is not far off, love. See, my story has been accepted, and the editor begs that I will send him some others.'

"She did not speak, but the proud look in her eyes told me what her thoughts were. Then she saw the lilies and she kissed me for them."

Robin covered his face with his hands, and a sob shook his frame. He rose from his chair and walked round the room. Then he stopped, and, with his face averted, he finished his story:

"In less than a week she was dead. She died in my arms. I thought she was better, but it was not to be. She was too good to live. We were too happy for this world. Heaven would have had no meaning could we have lived together longer. And when her last breath was gone I laid her back gently on the bed and covered her face from my sight. I went on my knees and cursed—cursed my fate and everything else.

"Now, perhaps, you understand my fall. 'Why work,' I thought, 'when I have nobody to work for? My literary work was neglected. I lost my situation at the office. I have sunk deeper and deeper, until now," he paused for awhile, "now I am 'Rambling Robin.'"

Then he came across and stood by the fire.

"But the innocent prattle of that little child of yours has brought me to my senses. As there is a God above, I will yet make the world ring with my name. Even if I cannot work for my dead Flora, I can work for her memory's sake. And so I will. I start to-night on the second part of my life. In two years I will let you know the result. I will come and see you. Good-by."

I pressed him to stop the night, but he would not. I persuaded him, however, to take the loan of a few pounds, and as he walked to the door I slipped a note into his hands.

And last Christmas eve he kept his promise. He came to see me carrying a small parcel under his arm. It was a book—the book of the year. He had written it under a nom de plume. His name now is known throughout the English-speaking world, and the book which made his name is dedicated:

HOLLAND STILL GROWING.

Indefatigab's Dutchmen to Wrest More Land from the Sea.

Holland has determined upon a gigantic engineering feat—the reclaiming of 787 square miles of land now lying under the Zuyder Zee. Eight hundred years ago all of Holland contained but 600 square miles of land, or less than one-third of the area of the State of Delaware. Gradually, by means of great dikes, land has been reclaimed until the present area is nearly 13,000 square miles. This is more than twenty times the original area. The new work involves the construction of a dam twenty-seven miles in length. The line will run from a point near Helder, which is north of Amsterdam, to the island of Wieringen. Then from the east end of the island, which is ten miles long, connecting at a point just south of Workum. The dike will measure thirty-five feet at the base, tapering to eight feet at the top.

The first task is the driving of two rows of piles on either side of the proposed dike, forming a passage fifty feet wide. Against these there will be packed bags of sand until two parallel embankments are raised above the sea level. The water will then be pumped out of this area and a dry canal formed from shore to shore. Here on the bed of the sea the dike will be built of solid masonry. Behind the wall will be a bank of earth, bound with willow twigs in a series of basket work. For the drainage of this great basin colossal windmills are to be constructed 200 feet in height, with arms seventy-five feet long. These will raise the water into the network of canals which will cover the reclaimed area. Nor is this the end of the task. The bottom of the sea is sand of little fertility. Top soil and fertilizers will be brought from every Dutch colony, and in two or three generations the depression will be brought to the level of the canals. Where once the sea flowed unrestricted there will be green gardens and farms, dotted with cottages and towns, and canals covered with heavily laden barges.

Holland will have spent $50,000,000 in completing this enterprise, but she will have added $600,000,000 to her national wealth, and will have demonstrated afresh the moral greatness of a people who, in the face of such tremendous natural disadvantages, have the patience to compel earth to yield her treasures.—Literary Digest.

The Old Virginia Fiddler.

What has become of the old Virginia fiddler, whose services used to be in incessant demand at this season of the year, and who was known and greeted by all the young people for miles around?

Of old, there could be no Christmas in the country without him. He was as indispensable as the children's stockings, the egnogg bowl, the roasted shoat, the mince pie or the stuffed turkey. He was the important functionary at every dance, and called out the figures in an unchangeable voice, which grew fiercer and fiercer as he warmed up to his work. Has our old friend disappeared? Is his fiddle cracked and his bow unstrung? Has he been unable to withstand the invasion of his territory by the piano and the piano agent? We fear so. We hear of him very seldom now; whereas in the times agone, at Christmas his name was on every tongue, and his bow was a scepter wielded over many willing subjects. Happily for him that he found suitable eulogists before his type was extinct. Dr. George W. Bagby, that great humorist and player upon the heart strings of men, in numerous sketches, and the founder of this paper, in his delightful realistic reminiscences, have both described and immortalized the old Virginia fiddler. And well they did; for he is becoming as rare as the buffalo upon the Western prairies. But well he served his day and generation before he laid down "de fiddle and de bow."—Richmond Dispatch.

Telegraphy.

The Postal Telegraph Company made a test a few days ago to determine whether the Morse system of telegraphing is cheaper to operate, taking all things into consideration, than other systems, notably the Wheatstone, that is used in England and to some extent in this country.

The result was a unanimous verdict that the Morse system as invented more than fifty years ago stands to-day without the change of a dot or a dash or any alteration in the principles of transmission, far ahead of any other system.

During the test three New York operators sent to Pittsburg, Pa., 102 messages in 90 minutes, and 200 messages, containing 5,605 words, in three hours. This was an average of 66 2-3 messages per hour. Pittsburg, however, beat this, sending an average of 68 1-5 messages per hour.

These messages were taken in the regular course of business, and this result, while not equaling the fastest individual bursts of speed for a few minutes, exceeds previous records of its kind. The company then took into consideration the cost of transmission, salary of operators, accuracy of work, time consumed and all other factors entering into telegraphy. These were compared with similar results in other systems, and the decision was wholly in favor of the Morse system, that is today an unchanged monument to the great American inventor.—New York World.

Not the Same Thing.

When shrewd men talk, it is best to mind their exact expressions. The Lewiston Journal mentions a case in point:

There had been a great financial catastrophe in Piscataquis County by which many people lost their little all, and the word went round that a citizen who usually clings to his shekels had suggested a public subscription to make up the losses, and had promised to subscribe largely himself. The people were amazed at the report, and inquiry was begun to learn its truth.

"Did you offer to give $25,000 to pay these losses?" the citizen was asked.

"Well, no," he said, "I didn't put my offer in just that way. What I did say was that I would willingly give $25,000 if the thing had never happened."

Then the people laughed.

Every real nice old lady should have her picture taken with her little Bible in her hands; it gives the people an added respect for the Bible.

AN interesting series of episodes is represented by the inaugurals of the various Presidents of the United States, for the administering of the oath of office to the chief magistrate, from the father of his country down to the present incumbent, has been attended by many incidents that go to form part of our national history. The scenes from some of these bygone pageants are unique and impressive. They cover the triumphal progress of the first President to his installation that put the new nation on its feet, the Jeffersonian simplicity that won by its quiet and correct dignity, the Jacksonian tinge of "the wild and woolly west" that made Old Hickory famous, the attendance of guards armed with rifles to protect the new chief magistrate on one occasion, and grand and formal, plain and cheerful, quiet and uproarious inaugurations, according as circumstances and enthusiasm ruled the time.

The first Wednesday in March, 1789, was the 4th, and it has ever since been regarded as inauguration day. In the case of Washington, however, the installation became "a postponed event." The old continental congress failed to meet at a time assigned, and the result was that our first President was not officially notified of his election until April 14. People traveled slowly in those days, and it was not until the 23d, after a week through which he received all possible honors from the people, that Washington reached Elizabethtown Point, on the New Jersey shore, opposite New York City. Here he was met by a committee of Congress and a deputation of local officials. A barge had been prepared to carry Washington to the city and was waiting under the command of Commodore Nicholson. It was manned by thirteen sailors in white. The sailors pushed off, other barges fell in behind, and a striking procession made its way. The ships in the harbor were gaily decorated, and as the long procession moved through them with music and song it was saluted by cannon and cheers that shook the echoes. The preparations for the formal inaugural, however, were not yet complete and the proceedings were postponed for a week. The 30th opened a bright and cheering day. A national salute was fired and the city bells were rung. At 9 o'clock the people were summoned to the churches in thanksgiving, and to offer up prayers for the success of the Government.

At Federal Hall the troops were formed on both sides and Washington walked between the lines to the Senate chamber. He was dressed in a suit of broadcloth of American manufacture throughout. His white silk stockings were spun and wove in America, and his shoes were ornamented with plain silver buckles. His head was bare and his powdered hair was tied behind in a fashionable bag. Chancellor Livingston repeated the oath of office and Washington kissed the page. "It is done," said the Chancellor. Then waving his hand he shouted to the multitude: "Long live George Washington, President of the United States!"

When Washington for the second time took the oath of office there was less public demonstration than on the first occasion. The seat of government had by that time been removed to Philadelphia, and the inaugural was held in Congress Hall.

The inauguration of John Adams was notable chiefly for its dual character. It was less a welcome to the new executive than a farewell to the old.

The hall was filled, and it is related that there was scarcely a dry eye save only those of Washington. To Mr. Adams it seemed that Washington was triumphing over him. "His look seemed to me," wrote Mr. Adams to his wife, "to say: 'I am fairly out and you are fairly in.'" The general towered above all those about him, showing in his worn but calm features the touch of care that had been heavy upon him, and that he was the central figure of the event there can be no doubt.

The ungracious absence of the acting

JEFFERSON TIES HIS HORSE.

President marred the installation of Thomas Jefferson. Washington had alreay set the precedent that the outgoing President should attend his successor during the ceremony of taking the oath, when he did the honors at Adams' inauguration. But before dawn of March 4, 1801, Adams had left Washington. The day throughout the United States was celebrated like a new Fourth of July. In some places the defeated Federalists made hostile show of their chagrin, but the rejoicing seemed practically universal.

With Jefferson came an era of simplicity that took its character from him. He had objected to the pomp marking previous inaugurations. His own was totally free from this element. He had no establishment in Washington. He had no coach. So Jefferson rode to the Capitol on horseback unheralded and without escort, tied his horse to the palings of a convenient fence, and entering, took the oath. His dress was as plain as tailor could devise. The second inauguration was as devoid of display, but it was under more pleasant auspices. Jefferson had been elected by 162 votes against but 14 for his opponent, and the electoral college had no new failure to record.

James Madison seemed content to continue the era of simplicity. His dress at his inauguration was of homespun, a circumstance in itself sufficient to excite great enthusiasm. So vast was the concourse that it seemed the whole population had turned out. The escort of cavalry with difficulty pressed its way through the mass. Ladies fainted, and the gentlemen accompanying them had to fight to guard them against the jostling, trampling throng, all eager to press near the platform. In the outskirts of the crowd there were a number of encounters between rowdies. One Tory who had the temerity to shout his sentiments that "Jim Madison ought to be hanged" was set upon and nearly beaten to death, escaping finally with bruises and the loss of an eye.

Before the time came for the inauguration of Monroe the British had burned the Capitol. The inaugural took place in Congress Hall and the public ceremony occurred on a platform near the site upon which a new structure was being erected. The military feature was impressive. As Monroe took the oath a single gun announced the stage of proceedings and military salutes followed in quick succession from the navy yard and different organizations that had participated in the march.

When John Quincy Adams was inaugurated little remained of the Jeffersonian simplicity of a quarter of a century before. At about noon Mr. Adams left the door of his residence, with his predecessor, in a carriage. The escort was largely military, and the many handsome uniforms lent color to an imposing array. Mr. Adams, dressed in a plain suit of black, ascended to the Speaker's chair, the chief justice just in front. Then the new President read his address, occupying forty minutes in its delivery. Among the prominent people present was Gen. Andrew Jackson, and the apparent cordiality of the handclasp between the two was much commented upon.

There was turmoil in Washington the day that Andrew Jackson became President. The inauguration was not the comparatively quiet and orderly affair to which the public had grown accustomed. The vicinity of the Capitol was like a dark and troubled sea. When Jackson appeared thousands of heads were bared, and thousands of faces turning upward changed the aspect of the sea in an instant. But the clamor of the White House reception outdid that witnessed at the Capitol. Orange punch had been provided by the barrel. The adherents of Jackson crowded to the presidential residence. They shouted. They stood on damask chairs, leaving there the imprint of muddy boots. "Go it, Andy; we put you there," they yelled. "Give 'em fits, Andy." And the general smiled. All the men carried hickory sticks. Many of the women wore necklaces made of hickory nuts strung together. It was the wildest scene that ever had the White House for its setting, and those who viewed it carried the memory of it long.

March 4, 1837, the date of the Van Buren inauguration, was as perfect as could have been desired. Much of the good-will shown was for the retiring President Jackson, tall and erect as ever, but with hair silver white and deep marks of care upon his face. Old and worn he was, and, as with Van Buren by his side he passed along the line, cheers were for him. The two rode in Jackson's phaeton, a gift made of wood from the old frigate Constitution. Van Buren's address was an effort of oratory, and was listened to intently.

For days before the inauguration of William Henry Harrison the city had been filling with visitors, many of them from a distance. The military feature of the parade was the finest that had ever been seen at Washington. "Tippecanoe and Tyler, too!" was the cry of the day. Mr. Harrison rode a white horse. He was attended by seven citizen marshals, all handsomely mounted. There were unique figures in the parade. A log cabin on wheels, drawn by four horses, was the creation of some of the many Tippecanoe clubs. It was applauded from one end of the line to the other, for this was the triumphant close of the Log Cabin campaign.

Exactly one month after he had taken the oath of office as Vice-President John Tyler was called from Williamsburg to assume the duties of the presidency. William Henry Harrison lived but thirty days after having taken a place in the White House. When Tyler arrived an effort was made to induce him to take an oath as acting President, but this he refused to do. His refusal was constitutional, and was accepted later as a precedent in the cases of Fillmore, Johnson and Arthur.

There was the usual great concourse of people to attend the inauguration of Polk, so great being the rush that a bed was a luxury. All the arrangements were admirable, but the weather could hardly have been worse. While it permitted Polk and Tyler to ride in an open carriage, an umbrella was held over the former while he delivered his address to an ocean of other umbrellas. The pavements were so slippery that many of the soldiers fell ingloriously during the parade.

The inauguration of Zachary Taylor was not marked by unusual features. The procession was headed by twelve volunteer companies. A special guard that kept the crowd back from the carriage was composed of 100 young men mounted on spirited horses. A prominent feature of the parade was the number of "Rough and Ready" clubs, so named from the title the general had won at the head of his command. At the conclusion of the inaugural address bells rang, cannon were fired and the cheering was prolonged.

Millard Fillmore was the second to assume an executive chair made vacant by death. July 10, 1850, the day after Taylor had passed away, Mr. Fillmore, Vice-

"GIVE 'EM FITS, ANDY!"

President, appeared at the capitol. Senate and House were in joint session. He went before the body, took the oath of office and left the building unattended.

The crowd attracted to the capital to witness the inauguration of Franklin Pierce had a strong western element in it. The day was raw and cold. The guard of the President was composed of mounted young men, and a fine display was made by the army and navy. Mr. Pierce delivered his address from memory, the manuscript in his hand not being looked at. Before he had finished snow was falling. As he took the oath of office, far away before the American consul in Cuba, Wm. R. King took the oath of Vice-President.

March 4, 1857, was foggy and cold in the early morning, but as the cannon announcing the approaching inauguration of Buchanan began to boom the fog rolled away. Once more Washington was crowded. The address was delivered at the eastern portico of the Capitol to an immense crowd, that as the towering form of Buchanan appeared cheered with much enthusiasm. The oath was administered by the venerable Chief Justice Taney and salutes were fired.

The inauguration of Abraham Lincoln, March 4, 1861, was the opening of an epoch, the turning of a page in history. For the first time a President-elect of the United States was forced to seek the Capitol with people about him to guard him from the violence of assassins, unheralded and by night so that murderous designs against him might be baffled. President Buchanan got into the same carriage with the President-elect, and the two were grim, Grant calm and content. Behind them stretched back a long array of political organizations bedecked in the uniforms they had worn during the campaign. There were Tanners, Invincibles, Wide Awakes, and Grant and Colfax Clubs. Colored Republican clubs were also numerous. In the evening the city was illuminated. Fireworks were set off, and there was noise made of a hilarious sort. The ball was a heroic social affair. So cold was the ballrooms that ladies retained their wraps and gentlemen their coats. The ice cream froze solid, but nobody cared; warm drinks were in demand. Mrs. Grant shivered bravely in white silk, but driven through the narrow lane left on Pennsylvania avenue between pressing lines of citizens. It was feared that an attempt would be made to assassinate him on his way to the Capitol, and in addition to the escort sharpshooters were posted on the buildings with orders to shoot anyone who should draw a weapon, but no untoward events occurred.

The second inauguration was under circumstances far different. The United States Government seemed no longer threatened with dissolution, but the end of the struggle was nearing. Lincoln was looked upon as the savior of the country. His address, as before, was one of courteous firmness. Chief Justice Chase administered the oath.

After the death of Lincoln, April 15, Andrew Johnson succeeded to the presidency. The oath was administered by Chief Justice Chase in the presence of the cabinet. President Johnson made a brief address, but there was in it no demonstration.

A striking feature of the first inauguration of Ulysses S. Grant as President was the number of veterans in the crowd. Grant and the retiring President rode in an open landau, Johnson looking sour and the guests went early, and by midnight the hall was deserted.

The inauguration of R. B. Hayes was peculiar. Mr. Hayes took the oath of office twice. Saturday, March 3, Gov. and Mrs. Hayes were guests at the White House. They withdrew from the other guests, their purpose being unknown, and entered the Red Room with President Grant. There Gov. Hayes first took the oath. Once more the ceremony was performed, this time Chief Justice Waite publicly administering the oath in the presence of Senate, House and visitors. The inaugural address was delivered from the usual stand. In the evening a reception was given at the White House, a collation having been provided by Mrs. Grant.

The inauguration of James A. Garfield was marked by the enthusiasm and display that had become by this time a part of each recurring event. As he began the delivery of his address the sun broke through the clouds, and it seemed to all a happy omen. When he had finished, and applause was yet ringing in his ears, the President turned and kissed his mother, who had sat unspeakably proud of her son, and then kissed his wife.

Again death was the usher, and Chester A. Arthur was called to the presidency when his chief lay on the bier. He was in New York when notified of the necessity of qualifying, and at once took the oath as President. This was Sept. 20, 1881.

The inauguration of Cleveland in 1885 and of Harrison the second in 1889 are too recent to need more than a mention to recall them to the reader. It was done in a minute, the actual making and unmaking of Presidents. At these installations the usual formalities were rigorously observed and the usual throngs were present. Perhaps the inaugural ball which signalized Cleveland's second inauguration was as impressive an event as had characterized such a function for many years. It was preceded by a magnificent parade, and the ballroom contained 10,000 persons representing the flower of America's sons and daughters. The ceremonies had a certain military tinge from beginning to end that lent unusual brilliancy to the event.

well in spite of his immense size. The only disagreeable feature of his life is the almost perfect unanimity among all sorts of people with all sorts of opinions he finds his presence inspires. People never dispute his word, and few, if any, can be found who do not indorse his views on all matters—whenever he is present. Mr. Sulloway is fond of joking, and is always sure of having his jokes laughed at. No one dares interrupt him when he tells an ancient tale. This Brobdingnag of the House once defended a band of Salvation Army people who were prosecuted for disturbing the peace, and fell in love with a little lieutenant, who had a very bright pair of eyes under a very ugly poke hat. He proposed and was accepted. The lady never even dreamed of rejecting him, because he could have carried her away in his pocket. Mr. Sulloway takes luncheon in the sandwich-room of the House, and prefers a stool at the counter to a chair at a table. His reason for this plan of eating involves the fact that he cannot get his legs under the table. When seated on the stool, so he says, "he can see what they give him to eat." He is an eloquent speaker, a wit of the first order, and a popular man in Washington.

Obedient to the Call.

The editor of Thierfreund relates the following story, drawn from his personal experience of the high training of military horses. In the year 1872, during a skirmish with the Sioux Indians, the Third Cavalry Regiment had formed an encampment in a valley on the southern border of Dakota.

At nightfall the horses were tethered to the ground by a long line. Toward daybreak a violent storm of rain and hail burst over the valley. The unsheltered animals, terrified at the violence of the storm, broke loose, and tore away in a wild stampede up the steep sides of the valley, their fear driving them right into the territory of the enemy.

Without horses the soldiers would be at the mercy of the enemy, yet it was impossible, in the half-darkness, to go after them into an unknown region probably full of Indians. Everything seemed lost, when the captain, as a last resource, ordered the stable call to be sounded. In a few minutes every horse had returned to the encampment, and the men were saved.

Their Advantage.

There are some things in which our English cousins have the advantage of us.

An American millionaire, accustomed to purchase anything he wanted, tried to obtain from an Oxford gardener the secret of the beautiful lawns which make the pride of England—or a portion of it.

"Tell me, my good man, how you manage it," he said condescendingly, putting his hand significantly into his pocket.

"It werry simple, sir," replied the gardener, quaintly. "You cuts it as close as ever you can cut, and you rolls it and cuts it for 600 years."

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DEKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNES, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....MARCH 11, 1897

D. D. MOODY

Sentenced To The Prison North.

FOR ONE YEAR

Fined One Dollar and Disfranchised One Year.

Now Let the Other Accused Men, If They know themselves Guilty, Follow the Same Course.

This morning, Saturday Judge Adair came over from Columbia City to hear the case against D. D. Moody, on charge of embezzlement of funds belonging to others. At ten o'clock several attorneys and spectators were present, to hear the final points of this first case of the several now coming up. Soon, Mr. Moody came in and his attorney, E. D Hartman was telephoned for, and soon arrived. The judge had Mr. Platter call court, and the case was at once brought up. Prosecutor Davis appeared for the state and Mr. Hartman for the defendant. Mr. Hartman's plea was one of great feeling and eloquence, and there were not a few moist eyes in the court room as he proceeded. He spoke of Mr. Moody's early years, as a native of the county. He spoke of his honored family, and of his early struggles and successes. He spoke of the absence of criminal intent on the part of Mr. Moody, that the trouble was largely the result of carelessness and habits of a spendthrift. Mr. Moody had confessed the shortage, had turned over to his bondsmen every penny he had except household goods, had even given up his library, had made every possible sacrifice to help make amends for his wrong doing. He had concluded to plead guilty not only for his sake, but to save the county the expense of a trial. Mr. Hartman believed Moody's fault very much less criminal than that of the other accused men who had in cold blood, conspired to rob the county. He believed, too, that the manly course taken by Moody, would have a good effect on the other accused men. In conclusion. he asked the judge to give the lowest sentence the law allowed, the terms being fixed at one to five years.

Mr. Davis, the posecutor, followed Mr. Hartman. He said the state of Indiana has no malice against any man, and only prosecutes men to secure justice and preserve good citizenship. Mr. Moody's offense, was greatly less than that of "the men who with cold minds had put heads together to loot the treasury of DeKalb county." He admitted the willingness of the state to accede to Capt. Hartman's most eloquent plea "to temper justice with mercy."

After Mr. Davis had concluded, Judge Adair, who was evidently greatly affected, begrn by saying it was a sad duty he had been called here to perform. He would gladly have avoided it had there been any good way to do so. At the conclusion of his remarks he announced the verdict, which was, one year in the penitentiary, one year disfranchisement and $1 fine

The entire brief session of the court was dramatic and sad. Mr. Moody was evidently feeling deeply, his disgrace and misfortune. But he maintained a firm outward appearance, though his face was pale and showed the great mental strain through which he was passing. His son, Ralph, had happened to come in and was present. He kept near his father and was evidently affected. Court was adjourned by deputy Platter, and those present bade Mr. Moody good by, and Mr. Platter then took him in charge. By this time it wre 11 a. m. Just before noon the bus started for the Junction and Mr. Moody, and Sheriff Stroh went down there and took the noon west bound train to Alida where they get a train on the Monon to Michigan City.

Thus ends the first chapter in the history of the investigation that DeKalb county is making into the conduct of its once trusted officials. It is a sad chapter, but there is more to follow. It is unfortunate, but it is necessary. Now let the other accused men, if they know themselves guilty, follow the same course. They can recover some small part of public good will, if they will in this way acknowledge their wrong doing, and save the county a great deal of expense.

And now. the people can see that business has been begun in earnest, and we believe they will sooner or later be rewarded for the patience with which they have waited, and for the confidence they have reposed in the officers who are conducting these investigations. We feel sure that all will agree with the COURIER, that today's work was just as it should be.

ROBBERS AT ST. JOE

And Escaped With a Few Dollars Worth of Valuables.

ST. JOE, IND., March 9, '97. (Special to the DAILY COURIER.)—Sometime during last night thieves broke into the hardware store of Case & Co. and into the postoffice, which is located in the same building. As far as ascertained by your correspondent, only a few articles were taken. One revolver worth $5 has been missed, a tray of house keys—a hundred or more—and nearly and nearly all the padlock keys are gone, and a lot of padlocks without keys. The firm have on hand now a number of padlocks that will have to be replaced No money as far as known was taken. Postmaster Baker informs us that he had 75 cents in money and about $2 worth of postage stamps in a drawer, but they were not molested. The thieves obtained an entrance through the east door which was pried open It was undoubtedly the work of home talent. It will now be in order for all who have locks on doors of any kind to import other locks. From the keys stolen, undoubtedly almost any lock in town can be opened.

ORATION.

TRUE CITIZENSHIP.

Ladies and Gentlemen:—The United States, in which we are living, is one of the greatest, if not the greatest republics on the globe. What is it that makes a country great? Extent of territory, fertile soil, great mineral resources, as: Gold, silver, copper, iron, coal, etc., large valuable forests, natural advantages, and so on. All these things are essential or indispensable to make a country great. But above all, it is the intelligence of the people, that inhabit such a country, that greatness depends upon.

As already stated, we live in a republic. A republican form of government is a goverment, where the people themselves elect their officers, and make their laws. By this we see that it is necessary for a citizen of such a country, to educate himself.

Education is the foundation of civilization, and it is the foundation of true citizenship. But education in itself does not make a true citizen, for a person may be ever so well educated, and not be a true citizen. If this be true, who is a citizen? A true citizen is a person that above all, loves his country and defends it against all enemies. Yes, he is willing to, if necessary, give up his life for his country without ever asking or expecting, any reward, whatever. He is thankful for the liberties he enjoys, and does everything in his power to preserve such liberties. He takes a deep interest in the welfare and progress of his country. A true citizen always is and will be honest. He takes a great interest in the nomination and election of the different officers, and can and will support no other, but true citizens.

He honors and respects his fellow-citizen, friend or foe, and will do unto them, as he wishes to be done unto him. As true citizen is truthful, reliable and patriotic. He will always help to subdue all corruptions and do everything in his power to have honesty and purity prevail. He is willing to pay the taxes levied upon him by the government, to defray the necessary expenses, and to have the taxes arranged in such a way, that rich and poor, can be educated in our public schools, so that the youth may become intelligent people. But a true citizen, if elected to office, is not ignorant of the fact, that he is only a servant of the people, elect by them to do their business and make their laws He always will resist all temptations to use his office for his own individual benefit. But some one might say: Is it not right, that a person should look to his own individual benefit, if elected to office? Not at all, for a true citizen knows that a public office is a public trust, entrusted to him by the people, to do their business for them as a servant and an honest servant, which a true citizen always is, never cheats or robs his master. It is a disgrace and robbery, for an officer, and should always be regarded as such, to use his office for his own benefit, either through bonus or by direct steal. But it is a credit for an officer, if he fulfills his office, and does his duty as a true citizen. He will be honored and respected by every one as a true citizen and patriot. My friends, let us, therefore study and educate ourselves in the principles of true citizenship, that we may be an honor to our parents and community, but more so to the benefit and welfare of our great republic, so that we may in truth, love our country, appreciate the liberalties we enjoy, stand by, and defend its constitution, so that our grand union flag, red, white, and blue, may wave over our great land for centuries to come.

1895 JOHN W. MARTZ.

ROHM-BOWEN.

This forenoon, Mar. 10th, at the home of the Misses Keeran, and rooms of the officiating clergyman, Rev. W. L. Meese, occurred the marriage of John F. Rohm. of Richland township and Miss Dora Bowen, of Auburn. Both these young people are well known and no doubt their many friends will be surprised to learn of their quiet marriage. Mr. Rohm is a farmer and they will at once move to Richland township. They have the best wishes of the COURIER.

FIVE YEARS EACH!

Is the Sentence of Mr. Sawvel and Mr. Borst.

BOTH PLEAD GUILTY THIS MORNING

A Blow at Official Corruption that Should be a Warning To Those Who Follow.

Monday's Daily.

Another sad scene was enacted in the court room this forenoon. Judge Adair came in on the morning train, and it was soon rumored that new moves were on foot, in the county cases. It proved to be that Mr. Borst and Mr. Sawvel had concluded to plead guilty. At nine o'clock the court room began to fill up and the Judge was on hand, but nothing was done till Prosecutor Davis came down on the 10-10 train. As soon as he was present Bailiff Crew called court, and Judge Adair said he was ready. Mr. Borst soon came in and a few minutes later was followed by Mr. Sawvel. The two men consulted with their attorney, John W. Baxter, but it was plain to be seen in their pale faces and nervous manner, that they hadd ecided to meet their fate and accept with stern resolution, the punishment due to outraged laws. When all was ready they took seats in front of the bar, facing the Judge. Prosecutor Davis and his assistant, Mr. Roby were at their left and Mr. Baxter at the right. There was a deep feeling pervading the whole court room, and every face wore an anxious look. To add to the intensely dramatic condition the lowering clouds of a severe thunder storm just then began to settle over the town, making the scene darker and gloomier than usual. The Judge called case 1520, and the certain had risen on the second scene of DeKalb's legal drama. The defendants were sworn, as they would be required to make a statement. Mr. Baxter questioned them. Mr. Sawvel stated that he had given up to his bondsmen, and to make good to the county, his farm and home, and made all the other financial restitution he could. A similar statement was made by Mr. Borst. He had given up his own means and when that was found insufficient, his father-in-law, Mr. Miller had helped. Mr. Baxter then addressed the court on behalf of his clients. He spoke with difficulty, and was laboring under deep feeling. He said he had known Mr. Sawvel since both were boys, and spoke of the high character he had always sustained. He spoke of the confidence the people felt in Mr. Sawvel, and how he had filled the office they had given him, with ability and honor till temptation came. In a similar strain he spoke of Mr. Borst, of his long service as the trusted deputy in the office, and the ability he had shown, not only as deputy, but now for over two years as auditor. He believed both men originally honest, but they had fallen into temptation and the tempter had triumphed. In conclusion, he said they had confessed their crime and as far as possible had made restitution, and now threw themselves on the clemency of the court. He hoped they would receive the lightest sentence the law fixes, which runs from two to fourteen years.

Prosecutor Davis followed. He regretted as much as anyone, that he must ask for the punishment of men heretofore among our most honored citizens. but the law knew no social distinctions. and so without any desire to aggravate their offenses, he would make a plain statement. The crime which these men stand charged, is not merely one crime, but many, not merely an accidental matter yielded to on the spur of the moment. But they had on very many occasions, lasting through a series of years, gone on coolly committing one offense after another, and he did not think justice would be meted out if they were given the lowest term only. The people had a right to call their servants to account and demand punishment for their shortcomings. He had been fully into their indictments and knew what had been done, and he felt that it was a serious series of crimes. And even now, while these men have turned over to the county all they have we do not know yet how much more will be lost. Mr. Roby followed in a similar strain, except that he seemed less severe, but he thought the crimes too serious for the lightest sentence Still, he spoke kindly of them. In the investigations, which he himself had helped to conduct, Mr. Sowvel had frankly made confession, and this had been of value in unearthing some of the trouble.

When he concluded, Judge Adair gave them their sentence. He, too, was greatly moved, but he felt that as a man not a resident of the county, he should give such a sentenc, that while not the heaviest, it should still be heavy enough to stop all further prosecutions. If he gave them the lowest term, two years, it was morally certain that when they came out, some of the other indictments would be brought against them. And there were enough of these to keep them in for life. So he put their punishment at five years, and $5 fine.

As sentence was pronounced the defendants visibly turned paler, and it was evident they had looked for not more than three or four years. But the people generally seemed to think the sentence a just and wise one. The friends of the two men came to bid them farewell, and then for the first time, they broke down and sobbed like children. It was a sad "sight. The The lowering clouds outside were not darker than the shadows that over spread the scene in the court room. The men, each in charge of a bailiff went to their saddened homes. They start for Michigan City to-morrow noon. And this closes scene second in the unfortunate drama.

Tuesday's Daily.

The men senteneed yesterday went away to-day noon, quite a number of their personal friends following them to the train. There is considerable sympathy for them, but more for the innocent ones in their families and the nearer relatives. There are now, three families utterly prostrated with grief and heart broken, solely by the fault of the husband and father. And there are other families connected with them, who are crushed by this terrible calamity.

Last night Mr. Borst was in charge of J. J. VanAuken, and Mr. Sawvel in charge of Bert Maxwell. There was no danger that either would escape, but the law is strict, and should be obeyed. Both men are very penitent. The general opinion is that the five years was a fair sentence, although we find a few extremists some of whom say they should have had ten or twelve years, and others think two years would have been right.

Yesterday afternoon, both Sawvel and Borst were taken again before the grand jury, but of course we do not know the result. In the evening Frank Dills was arrested, this time on three indictments. His bail was put at $1000 and his mother again went on his bond. The correctness of the COURIER'S position as to sheriff Stroh is now very plain. To-day he is engaged in correcting his books. There is quite a sum of the court allowances of $2 a day to be turned over, as well as other fees which he has kept. Of the latter, his accounts will show $883 and with the court fees he had retained would show about $1080 that he ought to transfer to the county, possibly more. He has already turned over nearly $700 of this shortage, and there has been made a deposit to his credit by the clerk. To-day he has made some further settlement, so that by to-night he will be pretty near square. Mr. Stroh and his friend got very hot at the COURIER for calling attention to the condition of his accounts. But his own action now, shows we were right. Now let us hear from the Butler Record. The grand jury is still at work, but of course we know nothing of what they are doing.

Many rumors are abroad connecting this one and that with these troubles, but our readers should not give credit to mere rumors that may injure innocent parties. Wait and be patient. Accuse no one, till the grand jury accuses him. It is all in their hands, and with the prosecutor. We believe they will do their duty.

Wednesday's Daily.

The grand jury has been busy unearthing more rottenness, though of course all outsiders can hear nothing except rumors.

Among these rumors is one to the effect that Frank Dills will soon plead guilty but objects to having Adair sit on his case. He probably objects to the Judge's favorite number, 5.

Another rumor is that some one has been letting out the secrets of the combine. If we are to believe these stories, there has for some years been a practice of getting into the auditor's office and playing poker, using raised orders instead of money to help make the game interesting. This story connects quite a number of people, not county officers, with these disreputable transactions. The people may now have a chance to reflect on the danger of putting into responsible positions, men of loose habits or loose morals. And whether this story is true or not, the fact remians that on at least two occasions, there were drunken orgies in officers' rooms in the court house, and participated in by the officers themselves. It is largely the fault of the people, if they elect men to county offices, who will disgrace them.

As we said yesterday, there are some who think the term of five years for Mr. Borst and Mr. Sawvel too long. But we should not forget if they behave as no doubt they will, they will earn enough "good time" to reduce the five years to three years and nine months. A prisoner who behaves properly is allowed one month "good time" for the first year, two months for the second, and so on up to five years. Then his credit of good time stops, and if he has to serve longer, must serve all of it unless pardoned out or let out on parole.

To those who have lately begun to receive the DAILY, and who therefore do not know the earlier history of the trouble we would say that Mr. Borst is the present auditor, having been elected in the fall of 1894, his term expiring in the fall of 1898. He had been deputy under three previous auditors but it is supposed the crooked work began under the one before him, Mr. Coffinberry. Mr. Sawvel was treasurer two terms or four years in all, his term covering Mr. Coffinberry's four years as auditor, Frank Dills was a deputy under Mr. Coffinberry, and also under Mr. Borst. Mr. Moody was county clerk from Nov. 1892 to Nov. 1896.

This forenoon, Wednesday, W. H. McIntosh was called into court on a citation from the prosecutor to compel him to show his books, or at least the record in which were kept the account of the county orders he had bought or sold. He was put on the witness stand and examined by the prosecutor, Mr. Davis and his deputy, Mr. Roby. He was also examined by his own attorney J. W. Baxter. Mr. McIntosh's evidence seemed to the effect that he had refused to have the private and personal part of his record examined. So it was finally settled that he and Prosecutor Davis would retire and examine the books and the Prosecutor might in that way take any items he chose in record to any county orders that Mr. McIntosh may have handled in his business.

The grand jury is still taking testimoney and are calling in many citizens to given evidence as to any matter directly or indirectly connected with the county troubles.

THE AUDITOR'S OFFICE.

Much speculation is going on as to what will be done with the Auditor's office. As Mr. Borst could not be disfranchised under the law, the office is not vacated, so it will be left in the hands of deputies till the matter is arranged otherwise. Mr. Boland was made one of the deputies for a time at least, and very properly, as, being one of the bondsmen, he will be useful in caring for their interests, and as far as can be, help to make up their losses, and to care for the family of Mr. Borst, who are left with but little means of support. It will be wise if this is allowed to remain as at present.

NO, IT ISN'T.

The esteemed Butler Record is constrained to keep up the dispute over Sheriff Stroh in an article headed, "Isn't this a fact, Bro. Barns?" To which article we reply as above. The following is the Record's article.

The COURIER in speaking of the defense, made by republican papers, of Sheriff Stroh says they were "all evidently influenced to do so." When the democratic and populist papers make simultaneous attacks on a republican official whom they know is no criminal it begins to look as though there were concerted plans on their part to make political capital out of it eventually. They forsee the fact that it is probable that one of their officials will be ousted and there will be another republican added to the list of county officers before this trouble is settled They can't defend their own man so they attack a republican with the hope of getting him ousted in order to come out even. The facts in the case are "influence" enough to make any newspaper man who loves justice, come to Stroh's defense.

In commenting on this, we have to say, that Stroh or his friends, we do not remember which had allowed to be given out, that by way of getting even with the COURIER, the various republican papers of the county would likely have something to say about our criticisms on his course. So, were we not taken by surprise, when the next week, brought to light an article in Dispatch, Press and Record. But the Press while aiming to keep on the sheriff's side, admitted plainly, that the $2 a day court allowance belonged to the county, and not the Sheriff, and not one of the papers denied our statement that the sheriff had taken these fees and kept them. Stroh himself never denied it, but justified himself by saying he had been told he had a right to take it. We have however, the authority of some of the very ablest lawyers, to the effect that the law gave him no such right. So the main point in dispute still stands as the COURIER had it, that no fees of any kind can be retained by a county officer under the present salary law. Every dollar of fees belongs to the county alone, and an officer has no more right to take or use them, than has any private citizen

As to any "simultaneous attack by democratic and populist papers on republican officials," there have been none. But the democratic and populist papers come out very unanimously in condemnation of crime on the part of all officials making no distinction between democrats and republicans. We have not thought of the politics of the accused. The COURIER has consulted with no one as to what course to take, when public servants are indicted for high crimes. The COURIER knows no politics in such a case. No democratic or populist paper has tred to shield a democratic official. Can republican papers say as much?

What difference does it make to the taxpayer who steals his money or how it is done? It makes no difference to the COURIER who will be auditor, a democrat or a republican. If a vacancy should occur in the office of auditor, all we ask is that it be filled by an honest and competent man, no matter what his politics may be. If the new officer, should there be one, goes on taking money that don't belong to him, we say "Put him out, also." The law is plain, that a county clerk commits a crime, when he takes and uses for himself, money that is not his. The law is plain, that a treasurer commits a crime when he so manipulates, county orders that he can thereby obtain money that does not belong to him. The law is plain that a sheriff commits a crime, when he takes fees that belong to the county, and converts them to his own use. The law is plain, that a surveyor commits a crime, when he manages to draw from the public treasury, money that he has no claim to. The law is plain, that a recorder who pockets and uses the fees that are paid into his hands, and then goes and draws a fixed salary besides, commits a crime. In short any officer for whom the salary act, fixes a salary commits a crime if he draws that salary and then increases it ever so little, by taking and using fees that come into his hands, thus making his salary that much larger than the plain figures fixed by the law. In brief, we cannot agree with the Record in this matter The Record is defending republicans only. The COURIER has not attempted to defend anyone. But we would have dropped this matter some ago, and would have given it over into the hands of the people, whose servants these officers are, had it not been for the active partisan defense of republican officials by such papers as the Record. Moody, Borst, Dills and Sawvel are democrats. Fair and his son, and Mr. Stroh are republicans; We have said more for these republicans than we have for the democrats, less against these republicans than against the democrats. Can any republican paper in the county say as much? These are serious matters. It is no time to split hairs or be biased by political opinions. When any county officer takes a wrong course, every good citizen should help to see that he turns back into the right channel before he does worse. The smallness of the irregularity is no excuse. This is a good time for every public servant to look well to his footsteps and keep his record clean, no matter if the dollars do not pile up as fast as he wishes. We repeat, it is a good time to call every public officer to account and see that he takes only what the plain law allows him.

RESOLUTIONS.

WHEREAS. It has pleased the Master to call our sister and faithful S. S. worker Miss Nellie Simpson to her home above;

WHEREAS. We deely feel the loss our Y. P. C. U. has sustained, therefore, be it resolved.

That we bow in submission to the will of Him who has said, "Be still and know that I am God."

That in her death the society has lost one of its most active and generous members, one who was ever ready to help and advance the Master's cause.

That we as a society have been given a solemn warning by the death of our sister, of the uncertainty of life, and that we endeavor to become more earnest and consecrated in the Master's work, not knowing how soon we may receive the summons, "The Master has come and called for thee."

That we extend our sympathy to the bereaved father and brother, and commend them to the loving care of our Heavenly Father. That the above be published in the county papers and a copy sent to the bereaved family.

Committee, { Minnie Becker. Willie Good. Ollie Tresch.

SHE SLAPPED HIM.

Mrs. Irvin Rader, who lives south of town, was in Auburn Saturday evening, and in passing along the streets was interrupted by a man she did not know and who proceeded to make some indecent remark to her. She resented his insults, and not being able to get rid of the fellow in any other way, pitched into him and defended herself with her fists. A few vicious slaps satisfied the fellow, and he got out of her reach. She was not able to learn his name. Mrs. Rader ought to to have a pension.

Squire Walter's Court.

The assault and battery case by C. E. VanAuken against Surveyor Krontz, which was set for Monday at 9 a m. before Squire Walter, did not come off on time, as it appears the law is that though a man pleads guilty, as Mr. Krontz did, his case cannot be considered till the complainant is brought into court. In this case, they had to wait to get Mr. VanAuken, and about four o'clock he was present and the case proceeded. Krontz was fined $1 and costs, the sum total being $10.50.

A GONE DENTIST.

Last Saturday morning, Dr. Edwards and wife left Auburn, for Pittsburg. Mr. Edwards bought the practice and good will of Dr. Darling and as he was at a heavy expense here in supporting himself and wife and making the payments on his office fixtures, he found that the expense account was much larger than the receipts. Mr. Edwards received word Friday afternoon that a salaried position was waiting him in Pittsburg if he would get there by Monday morning and he accordingly left on the next train. There are some few bills around town which have not settled. He left the office fixtures to cover a balance due Dr. Darling and left some accounts due him in the hands of an attorney to liquidate his debts. John Zimmerman served out a warrant and attached his trunks which were at the livery stable, to be taken to the depot. He and J. E. Pomeroy went through the trunks but found nothing of value except clothing and trinkets which belonged to Mrs. Edwards. It seems that Mr. Edwards desired to do the fair thing by all his creditors but a lack of funds prevented him from so doing. He even had to borrow a few dollars to purchase his tickets to Pittsburg. He no doubt will be heard from when he gets settled down to work in his new location.

BROWN, CULBERTSON & BOLAND.

GETTING HOME.

Hon C. M. Brown reached home last evening. As there was not the same rough and tumble fight at the close of this legislature, that disgraced the one before it, our member got home with a full set of limbs and teeth and is looking well. Dr. Nusbaum went around by way of Michigan City, where he will look in briefly on the flourishing DeKalb Colony now beginning there. Both our members have been unusally successful in getting new laws passed, and their laws are among the best of the session.

Honesty and Virtue.

There is more honesty and virtue contained in a bottle of Salvation Oil, than in any other liniment known. "Mrs. A. Fiedler, 2864 Palethorp St., Philadelphia, Pa., confirms this truth: She found Salvation Oil to be an excellent remedy for rheumatism, stiff joints, bruises, etc., and thinks it should always be kept in the house." Don't listen to the dealer's arguments in favor of a substitute. Insist on getting Salvation Oil, it costs only 25 cts.

FILIAL LOVE.

Last Sunday the congregation of the Baptist church were favored listeners to a delightful and unique address delivered by the pastor, Rev. William Pearce. During the previous week, Mr. Pearce received tidings from England, of the death of his mother, and on Sabbath morning the son delivered an oration in memory of that dead mother, which cannot soon be forgotten by those who heard it. The text was from 1st. Kings 11. and two words from verse 20:—"My Mother."

The pastor in his own graphic manner described the throne of Solomon, the wise King upon it, and the mother at his side. "Ah!" the speaker said, "had I been Solomon and that woman my mother, she should have sat the Queen upon the throne, and I her son, beside her."

With tender pathos he pictured the mother as a worker, nurse, teacher, comforter and religous guide,—mother's medicines, mother's cooking, mother's voice, mother's singing, mother's love, mother's prayers. With eloquence born of love, he dwelt upon the precious characteristics and sacrifices of motherhood, until overcome by memories which his own words recalled, the pastor hid his face, and for a few moments stood in silence before his weeping congregation.

"MOTHER."

Oh, worn, long suffering mother, you who sleep
In that fair isle where our forefathers rest;
Beyond the blue waters of Atlantic's deep
A stranger's voice is raised to call thee blest.
Perhaps you dreamed the boy you watched above,
And cradled in your arms with tend'rest care,
Would hold your name a synonym for love,
Of earth's fair ideals supremely fair.
With love's inspired eloquence he praised
The angel guardian of his childhood's years,
'Till stranger mothers felt their beings raised
By motherhood's sweet pride, untouched by fears.
And many a man in reverence bowed his head
Before a son's grief for a mother dead.
Mother! to clasp thy child, a precious joy is thine,
To lead that child to Heaven. is divine.

—Vol. 1. No. 1., of The Dispatch published at Hicksville by the Church of Christ is before us. It is full of church news.

—A. J. Baxter and wife, came over this morning from Butler, and are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Wash Askew. They also attended the Bar Association meeting this afternoon.

—Constipation in its worst forms, dyspepsia, sick headache, billiousness and derangement of the liver are readily cured by DeWitt's Little Early Risers. The little pills never gripe. Small pill, safe pill, best pill. Davenport the Druggist.

—Supt. Merica is sick and announces that he will not be able to grade and prepare the examination papers this week. So those who are looking for reports in their work at examination will understand the cause of any delay.

—Frank Harris, of Columbia City, came up here Tuesday, and went to Waterloo to see his mother and other friends. Yesterday on his way home, he made his old friends of the COURIER a visit. He has been rather under the weather for a time but hopes to get to work again soon. He has been some years in the blacksmithing department of the Harper Carriage Factory at that place.

—Horace Greeley once said: "The way to resume is to resume," speaking of again putting gold into circulation after the war. But you may say "resume" any number of times to your torpidliver and it won't budge until you take Simmons Liver Regulator. Many people seem to forget that Constipation, Billiousness and Sick Headache are all caused by a sluggish liver. Keep the liver active.

—Several persons were taken into the M. E. church Sunday, by letter. They were county clerk, M. F. Long and two daughters, county recorder Mr. and Mrs. Jones, and Lewis Geisinger. And Mrs. Tripp was taken in by a vote of the membership.

—Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Campbell of the Anderson Herald, returned Thursday evening from their trip through the South. They have been away three weeks and spent most of the time in Galveston and San Antonio, Texas and attending the Mardi Gras in New Orleans.

—Conrad Myers, who has been making his home during the winter with his niece, Mrs. Snell, on south Main street left Saturday for Baltimore, Md. and to-morrow he will sail on the ship, Rolland, for the old country, where expects to spend the remainder of his days with his daughter. Mr. Myers is 85 years of age. He came here early in the winter from Fort. Wayne.

—Mrs. Allen Wolfe of South Cedar St. is very ill with a relapse of the gripp. Dr. Baxter was called in attendance yesterday.

—The Bowery Girl is to be played at Waterloo, March 16, instead of 18 Note the change of date. It is said to be an excellent play. This is the opening play of their New Opera House.

—Mrs. Minnie Davenport returned to-day to her home in Chicago.

—Mrs. Hettie Sommers goes to Indianapolis this evening to visit a few days with the family of her cousin, Judge McBride. She will also attend the opening of the large millinery stores there, to get new fashions and ideas for the Bishop & Lackey store. Mrs. Brown went down there to-day noon.

—J. P, Henderson uncle of H. R. Culbertson returned to-day to his home at Rochester. He was called here by the death of Mr. Culbertson's father.

—South Bend Times:—Col. I. B. McDonald has been reappointed as a member of the board of control of the State Soldiers' Home at Lafayette, by Governor Mount. This is a merited compliment to an official who has done his duty faithfully and conscientiously.

Monday's Daily.

—Judge Adair and his daughter Jo, came up on the morning train and went to Albion at noon. The Judge begins court there to-day and Miss Jo will visit relatives for a few days.

—Owing to poor health, Harry Lewis will go to Asheville, South Carolina in about a week. Here the doctor claims he will in a few years be relieved of his chronic troubles. Asheville is located at the foot of Smoky Ridge mountains and is a very healthful place. It is known as "The Land of the Sky." Mrs. Lewis will accompany him and in the fall they will be joined by Mr. Lewis. They expect to remain there about three years. We hope that Harry may be permanently benefited by this trip.

—Garrett people who remember Mr. Belknap once a citizen of that place, but now a member of congress from Chicago will be interested to learn that Speaker Reed has appointed him as one of the Board of Visitors to the National Military School at West Point. Probably he knows nothing whatever as to the school. but he got the place because his father was once secretary of war.

—Cal Husselman started this morning for Lafayette, where, as we understand it, he will take the benefit of some lecture course at Purdue. Friday and Saturday he assists in a farmers institute at Delphi. He is becoming one of the most popular institute workers in the state.

—Extra session of Congress is called to meet next Monday, March 15. There is but one thing they will undertand to do an that is to increase the tariff taxes.

—The circulation of the DAILY COURIER is increasing so rapidly that our edition of ready print this evening is not large enough. Hence if your paper is blank on one side or is of a former date, you will know the reason. We will endeavor in the future to keep on hand a supply, large enough to accommodate all.

—There were more than a hundred people assembled at the Junction yesterday noon to see the sad sight of Mr. Borst and Mr. Sawvel taking the train for the prison. They were driven to the Junction in a cab, accompanied by Sheriff Stroh, Mike Boland and Geo. Ralston. They stopped at the Brunswick hotel till the train was due, Mr. Stroh and Mr. Boland accompanying them to the prison. At Garrett there were also a large number of people assembled to see them pass through. Ed Reyher and Postmaster Thumma accompanied the party from Garrett. At Michigan City they were joined by Dr. Nusbaum who was on his way home from Indianapolis. As soon as Messrs. Moody, Borst and Sawvel are assigned to their departments the COURIER will publish the same.

ST. JOE.

Hon. J. D. Leighty and wife returned home from Washington Sunday night.

W. C. Patterson, James Hamilton and B. A. Hadsell attended the inauguration of Mr. McKinley and returned Sunday.

C. Curle and wife are in Ohio this week on a visit to friends.

Wm Sayler and his brother Lige were at Fort Wayne Friday of last week visiting his younger brother who has a position as conductor on a street car.

Frank Boyle and family were in town over Sunday visiting with Mrs. Boyle's mother and other friends.

Chas Dailey and family have gone to Leo to be under the care of Dr. Murphy. Mr. Dailey and family have been sick for some time with the grip.

Roland Bearse who moved to Garrett last fall will return to St. Joe as soon as he can get the possession of his residence.

Grandpa Leighty has sold his residence property to Tom Abel. Tom will take possession about the first of April.

Frank White will move to Sherwood about April 1, to take charge of a Hotel at that place.

In the suit in justice court between William Leedy plaintiff and John Allen defendant for $20, jury found for plaintiff costs $12.40.

Rev. Evans of the M. P. church is holding a series of meetings at their church in the city, and it is to be hoped will meet with good success, while there maybe other places a few miles off that needs as little of the good work, St Joe stands in need of a share.

Prosperity started in with such a boom at the hoop factory last Thursday morning that before 9 o'clock a. m. that the safety valve was blown off, a man head blown out, and two or three flues busted. Somebody at Washington, perhaps W. C. P., touched the button that started the machinery a little too strong

The St. Joe schools will close next week, and the only thing that can be said is, Well done thou good and faithful servants thy work has been well done enter thou upon the enjoyment of the fruits of thy labors.

SEDAN.

We expect Mr. Prosperity to make his appearance in this vicinity in the near future.

Peter Reinhart will move to Auburn this week and take charge of the Union Bakery.

The Literary Society has changed its headquarter from Showers Corners to Sedan.

The latest query in these parts is What has become of the other half of that line tree? Echo answers, Gone west.

Sedan should have a Daily by all means, so that everybody might get the news alike.

There is a man in this neighborhood that gets a different thresher to do his threshing every year and then, (well it is against the rules of Sedan to say more.)

John Wetzel is quite sick at present.

P. K. Guthrie and daughters and Mr. Wm. Stout and family visited Mr. Cline's in Noble county, yesterday.

Wm. Eckert has moved back on his mother's farm in north Fairfield.

Bert Stout, a former Sedan boy, but now of Coral, Mich., is visiting in this place.

There are plenty of people in and near Sddan that can do up any talking machine ever invented.

So far we have not learned of any one from this vicinity, being called before the grand jury, but it is our candid opinion that if proper investigations were made, some one might get a free ride to Michigan City.

Subscribe for the COURIER, if you want to get the court news and get it straight.

BUTLER.

Washington and the inauguration for many years I have had a desire to visit the capitol, during the ceremonies of a presidential inauguration, but have been deterred from the reason that the event occurred at an unpropitious season of the year when cold and rain or snow prevail. This year the indications appeared a little more favorable, and concluded to go. On Monday, March 1, '97, in company with a friend, we left Butler at 1:27 p. m. and reached Toledo without incident, we here left No. 2 for the purpose of taking the fast train. After an hour's delay during which we concluded No. 2, had placed many miles between us, we noticed a Lake Shore train pull into the depot, and we hurridly embarked. We were congratulating ourselves on having a fast ride for once, when the train suddenly drew up at a little way station. We asked the conductor, why he stopped, when he told us this was the accommodation train that stopped at all stations. It only took us a moment to find out that the fast train had stolen a march on us and that we were still on the same train that carried us to Toledo At 9 p. m. we pulled into the Cleveland depot, and waited until 11:02 for a Pittsburg train. Then made the run to that city in about seven hours, distance, 150 miles. The night was quite dark and but few objects were visible. At Wellsville, we discovered that we were upon the banks of the Ohio, and could see the glimmers of its muddy water as the lights reflected upon it. Day began to dawn as we reached the smoky city. Our Baltimore train stood in the depot so we had but little time here and saw next to nothing of the place. As soon as our train cleared the depot we were startled to find it moving swiftly along at the base of mountainous hill, looking upward it seemed a thousand feet to the top where innumerable houses were perched upon its brink seemingly ready to tumble upon us. We had one of the fastest trains, and whisked by small towns and shortly meeting trains on double tracks like flashes. We passed Braddock, a manufacturing city of about 5000, and soon afterward struck the head waters of the Conamaugh, famed for its destruction of Johnstown The town is situated in a narrow valley, and has so far recovered from its disaster to show but few scars We sollowed the track of the flood for several miles with frequent reminders of its destruction force by large piles of earth and stone, and naked abutments, where bridges had been swept away. The stream is an insignificant affair, but when swelled by a thousand acres of water became an irrestible torrent. More anon.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

CORUNNA.

Meetings at the M. E. church closed on Sunday night. The vital doctrine of the church, sanctification as a second distinct work, (not teaching that men get where they cannot sin, for every man may sin while in the body) receivable now by faith was clearly and carefully taught by the pastor and his helper, Evangelist Geo. C. Ulmer. A number of Christians have entered into this experience, Rom. 6-6 10. The evil effects of tobacco have been brought out, and quite a number have been freed from the habit and the appetite.

The men's meeting I Effects of narcotics and stimulants on the individual, his offspring and society: H. Vital excesses, their effects on man parents and children. Hereditary and parental influences brought to the front in a plain simple manner, yet in a way that no sincere person could object.

Rev. Ulmer asks us to thank the good people of Corunna for their help and kindness, also the county press for the use of their columns in the Lord's work.

CARD OF THANKS.

Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Fair wish to extend their most sincere and heartfelt thanks to the officers and members of Crecent Rebecca Lodge No. 254 who so kindly remembered us in our last sad bereavement occasioned by the death of our daughter, Vinnie, also to our neighbors and friends for their kind care and assistance.

D. W. FAIR AND FAMILY.

THE LADIES' LITERARY CLUB.

The L. L. C. perpetrated a surprise on Mrs. Barns when they met with her on Saturday. They brought "well filled baskets" as the saying is, and that meant a splendid lunch. We are pleased to note that while these ladies have greatly improved their minds and added to their stock of valuable information, they have gone ahead equally, in the (to their husbands) very acceptable department of culinary art. We speak advisedly and gratefully, for on this occasion the senior member of the editor's family got wind of the affair just in the nick of time and promptly considered himself "cordially invited."

—Michigan City Dispatch:—D. D. Moody, ex-clerk of DeKalb county, has donned stripes at the northern prison, having been sentenced to a term of one year for embezzlement. Moody was brought up by the sheriff of DeKalb county Saturday night, but the officer did not consign his charge to the prison authorities until Sunday night. Instead the officer took Moody to Shultz's hotel, where they stayed over night, and Sunday they spent a few hours about town, visiting such places as might interest them.

—Rev. W. L. Meese left on the noon train to-day for Chicago where he will spend about four weeks with his daughter, Mrs. Eaton at 140, 42nd place. He has not entirely recovered from his recent illness, but feels able to make the trip.

—Last night a poor lonesome musk rat came wandering into the bar room at the Glazier house and there met its fate. The high water overflowing the creek probably compelled it to move out of its permanent quarters. It was laid gently aside till this morning when Charley Downing came along with his beer wagon and he acted as undertaker and removed the same to the south end where it no doubt was laid to rest—floating down the creek.

NOTES ABOUT SCHOOLS AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

Much Depends on the Arrangement of the Routine Work of the Schoolroom—Singing in Primary Classes—How to Read for Profit.

Hints on School Discipline.

The routine work of the schoolroom should be so arranged as to prevent friction and disorder, thus avoiding the necessity of reproof or punishment, and leaving the time free for study, instruction and recitation. Lessons should be given in the first days of the term to teach the pupils how to move together, to come and go to and from the recitation, to stand and to work at the board, to go out and in at recess. This prearranged order of movement will prevent collision and disturbance. In the first exercises, when the pupils are practicing the movements, the directions should be definitely and quietly given. After the children have become accustomed to the order of movement, a signal may be substituted for the complete direction. This should be slight and quiet. Noise does not command attention. Let the voice be low, clear and decisive, impelling quiet, thoughtful attention to the exercise. All directions, whether by word or signal, should be followed by every pupil. The school should move as a unit. Reiteration of commands makes them meaningless.

Many occasions of disorder in the schoolroom would be prevented by a right apportionment of lessons, adapted to the capacity of the children, and varied from day to day so as to secure interest. The mischief found "for idle hands to do" can be banished by work alone. Careful preparation of the day's lessons beforehand makes the teacher ready with task, material and directions. Each pupil knows just what to do, when to do it, and how. The need of questions and comment is obviated by the concise directions. Pupils can be trained to distribute pens, pencils, papers, etc., quietly and expeditiously, in some definite order, thus relieving the teacher for more important work, and creating in them the spirit of helpfulness.

The teacher's preparation for the teaching exercise or recitation enables her to present her subject in a manner interesting to the pupils, to illustrate vividly, and to be free from all need of reference to the book. Thus she can hold the attention of the pupils.

Beyond the careful preparation for her lessons and the details of the schoolroom work, the teacher needs sympathy with child life, and power to put herself into the child's place. Many an offense against the rules of the school is committed thoughtlessly, yet is treated by the teacher as if it were an act deliberately intended. Such an assumption on the part of the teacher leads to wilful disobedience later, for it stirs a sense of injustice, which rankles in the child's heart long after the teacher has forgotten the offense. She should learn to judge from the child's standpoint, in order to see both sides, and to deal justly. The wise teacher often shuts her eyes to misdemeanors which would be emphasized by open reproof. The attention of the school is attracted by the reprimand to faults which otherwise would never be seen. A quiet word to the offender, a look or sign, a conversation after school, when nobody else knows, are better than the open correction. The teacher's manner, in necessary direction, should assume the intention to obey, not antagonize. Her attitude toward the child does much to determine his.

Rules of action should be decreed only when occasion demands them. The reason for them will then be apparent, and they will not seem to the pupils arbitrary exercise of authority. Once made they should be carefully followed. Penalties should be in line with the offense when possible. The child who cannot play with his mates must take his recess alone. The abuse of a privilege should be followed by its withdrawal. Punishments may and should be slight but certain. The teacher's even and steady persistence in the course she considers right counts for more than undue severity.—Waymarks for Teachers.

Singing.

Among the "tried recipes" for happiness and good work in primary classes none finds greater favor with me than singing. I wish every teacher of little ones could thoroughly appreciate the assistance it affords. There is nothing more refreshing and restful after a period of steady work than a song. The effect is sometimes magical. Pencils are placed by tired little hands that look as though they could go no farther. But look again a minute or two later. Fingers are moving as rapidly as muscles can make them, as the snow comes "falling down so pure and white." The music and motions put new life into the children.

Languor and lassitude fly before a bright song, and often when a spirit of unrest and disorder seems to possess the class it disappears entirely when the regular work is stopped for five minutes and a song substituted.

Children love singing. There is no doubt about this, and when we add to that fact the other, that it is of the greatest assistance in preserving good order, we should be convinced of the desirability of giving it a place in our program. I would have every grade up to the highest sing, and sing frequently. Time is not lost, but rather saved, by it.—Educational Record.

Teacher or Drillmaster.

There are certain things which are easy of accomplishment in a schoolroom. In over seventy schools that I have inspected thus far I have not found more than six or seven rooms which the teacher in charge could not control. There is an abundance of poor teaching and any amount of lack of teaching. The country is full of people who can control. It is also an easy thing to teach pupils to read in the sense of recognizing word-forms. In the poorest schools are found many pupils in the upper rooms who can read with fluency. Teachers with no method or with any one method or with all methods will teach pupils to read. It is easy to teach grammar to a certain extent. By the aid of diagramming and formal parsing a mechanical proficiency may be secured which is closely akin to intelligence. History and geography, too, have their easily accessible phases. It is quite as remarkable what children will absorb mentally. It is quite as remarkable what ignorant persons can do in the way of teaching.

On the other hand, it is remarkable how little influence the common school has on the life of the pupil after he leaves school. I mean in the way of giving him a predisposition to push any or all of his studies after his school days are ended. The geographies and histories and reading books of our common schools have no successors unless the pupils find them in higher institutions of learning. Does it not seem fair to expect that the common school will make book stores more profitable? I mean real book stores and not paper-covered ones.—Exchange.

Stop the Evil.

Should the little folks be required to prepare lessons for school at home? Emphatically, no. Six hours' mental application, which they get in school, is enough of a demand upon their vital resources every day. A sound mind and a healthy body are worth infinitely more to every man and woman than the knowledge of books and schools. Give the children a chance to play and romp, to laugh and sing, to rest and sleep, so that the fatigue and worry that necessarily settle upon them from the day's work may be thrown off, and their young systems kept fresh and elastic. Do not crush the springs of young life and make children at seven and ten talk and act like old people. You have no right to starve their mental and moral growth, and yet that is what you are doing when you burden them with work at night. Six hours' study is more than enough for any child below twelve years of age, and to attempt more than this is taking a mortgage upon the child's future health and happiness. Let us be content in such cases with the school, and not seek to do that which will harass the child's sleep with troubled dreams and the morbid fancies of an overworked brain.—Exchange.

How to Read.

Read topically, read about a period, read about a certain nation. Have a system, but don't spend so much time on the system as not to read at all. As to "what to read," read relatively little fiction, no matter how good. Read what interests you. Read in connection with your business. Be sure to read at least one great and good book each year. Have books, but do not buy a whole library at once. Buy the books you want. Let your library grow up around you. No one can afford not to buy books. When a man gets where he wants no more books he is dead and only awaits burying. The envelope system of securing and classifying the results of one's reading is to be commended. Have a series of envelopes. Put the topic on the outside. Put a blank piece of paper in each. On this put references to any work you may have read on the subject. Also put newspaper cuttings in the same envelopes. By this means one's information on any subject can be massed very quickly.—Selected.

Indian Tradition.

The strange legendary tradition among the Natchez Indians concerning the descent of their royal family from the sun is thus partly explained by Le Page du Pratz in his "Histoire de la Louisane." He had questioned an old man of the nation, keeper of the Natchez temple in which was kept burning constantly their "sacrifices," asking him whence the Natchez people had come originally. "The tradition" (l'ancienne parole), replied the keeper of the temple, "does not tell of the land from which we came; all that it teaches us is that our forefathers came to this land, followed the sun and came with him from where he rises; that they were a long time on their journey, were on the point of dying, all of them, and that they found themselves carried into this country without their looking for it. Do not ask me more concerning this thing," said the keeper, "for the tradition says nothing more on the subject, and no old man will tell you more than what I have told you." Does this imply a flight of a surviving band of mound builders from the east of the United States, or is it an obscure and distorted tradition of the march of the children of Israel from the bondage of Egypt to the promised land, led on their weary journey through the wilderness by the mystical pillar of fire and fed in their extremity with manna from heaven?—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Sleeping on the Stomach.

Sound, restful sleep, both by night and by day, is more easily induced if from the first the child be taught to lie on its stomach and face. The only necessary precaution against suffocation is the provision of a smooth, flat, somewhat hard hair mattress without a pillow. The advantages of this position are many. Some one has said that half the diseases of infancy result from keeping the stomach too cold and the other half from overheating the spine. By adopting the position suggested as the uniform one during the hours of sleep the stomach and abdomen are kept so warm as to prevent the colic and stomach ache and materially to aid the digestive process, while the spine and back of the head are no longer overheated by the increased temperature of the sleeping child. It may be a coincidence merely, but it is at least a significant one, that all the children the writer has known to rest habitually face downward have been unusually sound sleepers and have enjoyed more than average good health.—Harper's Bazar.

That Explained It.

One of the dispensary doctors—it would not be fair to name him—tells a good story on himself.

There was a dispute as to the disease of which a certain gentleman died, whom he had attended. Several medical friends insisted that he had died of dropsy. None of them knew that the young doctor had attended him, and when he remarked that he knew what the man died of, and insisted that everybody else was wrong, one of them said:

"How do you know so well what he died of? If you know so well, perhaps you can tell us."

"I know what he died of—because I attended him," was the reply, and the cruel answer came in chorus: "That explains why he died."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

WM. M'KINLEY IS PRESIDENT

Reins of Government Are Placed in His Hands.

SOLEMN OATH TAKEN.

Thousands View the Inaugural Ceremonies.

Patriotism of Seventy Million People Breathed Into the Inaugural Ceremonies—Uncounted Thousands View Proceedings—Resplendent Scene in the Senate Chamber—Gorgeous Military Pageant the Great Spectacular Feature—Brilliant Decorations of the Capital—Grand Ball.

William McKinley, of Ohio, is now President of the United States. Standing with bowed head before an immense gathering of people, he took the oath to faithfully perform the duties of the office. The ceremony was performed by Chief Justice Fuller. With an expression of humility mingled with realization of the heavy burdens he was about to assume, Mr. McKinley bent his head and repeated in a clear voice the words:

"I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the constitution of the United States."

There was a deathlike silence as the preparations for administering the oath were begun. The people could see the pantomime enacted, but only the favored few in the immediate vicinity could hear the words; then a cannon shot was heard. This marked the beginning of the term of William McKinley as President, and instantly a tremendous cheer went up. Hats, canes, handkerchiefs and other articles were waved as President McKinley stepped to the edge of the Capitol portico and bowed his acknowledgments to the people. As soon as the President noticed a lull in the applause he began to deliver the inaugural address. At least 150,000 strangers witnessed the ceremony, while the capital city citizens, numbering 300,000 people, lined the streets and filled the avenues. Capitol Plaza, where President McKinley stood, was filled with a seething, surging mass of between 50,000 and 60,000 people.

PARADE ON PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

There have been many inaugurations in Washington, but in many respects that of March 4, 1897, will go down in history as excelling all that have gone before. The citizens of the capital city worked to that end with a degree of energy unknown, and the great popular demonstration was a unique and shining success in every particular. In beauty, in taste, in novelty the decorations of the city were incomparably superior to anything ever seen in Washington; the magnificent body of regular United States troops was more numerous than any gathered since Grant's great display at the close of the war; seventeen sovereign States had their citizens in the line of parade and over sixty civil organizations helped swell its magnificent proportions.

Along the broad avenue, on every open space, were erected grand stands that, instead of being disfigurements to the scene, as has been the case in days gone by—mere scaffolds of rough boards—were not only comfortably covered and of pretty architectural design, but were most appropriately and substantially decorated. The citizens had spent money with a liberal hand to beautify their houses and with the aid of the thousands of flags of every kind loaned by the National Government, Pennsylvania avenue, the great artery of the city, was turned into a rainbow of bright color, in which Old Glory predominated.

WILLIAM M'KINLEY,
Twenty-fourth President of the United States.

Enormous Gathering of People.

To witness all this display there was a mighty gathering of the American people in the capital and even up to noon the railroads poured thousands into the city to swell the great total of strangers. Everybody agreed that it was an ideal inauguration day as far as the weather was concerned, for those who expected to march in the parade, while the increasing warmth of the sun as it mounted higher in the blue sky reassured the persons who feared for their comfort in the covered grand stands.

The executive committee had been at work all night and by morning there was a double line of cable two miles in length stretched along both sides of the avenue on the line of march, which promised the most effective protection ever designed to keep the crowd from closing in on the line of the parade.

Detachments of the regular troops to take part in the great display were early abroad, swinging along at a quickstep, easy and confident, in sharp contrast to the more gaudy overcoat militiamen.

Seats were in great demand. The brilliant day sent the stock of the grand stands up several points, and there was scarcely a seat to be had on any of the big stands. Nearly every building along the line of march that had a window commanding a view of the avenue was in the market. The prices asked had been phenomenal—$25 being the lowest for which a single window could be had, while the prices ranged from that figure to $300 for a three-window room. Calvin Brice of Ohio paid $1,000 for an avenue room for the day at Willard's with luncheon served for a small party, and Secretary Carlisle a good price for one in the Postal Telegraph building.

While the rest of the town was pulsing with enthusiastic anticipation, there sat at his desk in the White House the man who is now ex-President. Even his indisposition of Tuesday did not keep him from his work. Mr. Cleveland toiled through most of Wednesday night, and when he resumed his labors in the morning the electric lights had to be turned on, for day had not broken yet. He worked on till the hour for him to leave the White House for the last time as President, and then he laid down his pen with the satisfaction to himself, at least, of duty done. His cabinet officers also were similarly engaged in cleaning up the final bits of business on their desks, and, like their chief, were ready to relinquish the cares of office.

Close of Congress.

And up on the hill in the great white building, bathed in the bright sunshine, the congressional mill was grinding on and on and on, intent on making up for lost time. The House was noisy, the Senate calm and quiet. Bills were being ground out with a speed which made those spectators who have been watching progress of this great national legislative mill for the past two years dizzy. An immense throng of people stood round the outer doors of the Capitol, beseeching, clamoring, demanding admission, but the police, obedient to orders issued by their superiors, because the capacity of the building could not be stretched, refused admission to all save those who held tickets to the Senate, where the dignitaries of the nation were assembled.

A sound night's rest put the President-elect in perfect condition for the exhausting functions of the day. He had retired early, so that he enjoyed a full night's repose, and the beneficial effect was plainly visible when he arose Thursday morning and saluted Mrs. McKinley with the remark that it was the first day of her accession to the dignity and title of the first lady of the land.

At five minutes to 10 o'clock Senator Sherman and Senator Mitchell of Wisconsin, of the Senate committee appointed to conduct the inauguration, appeared and announced that they had come to escort the President-elect to the Capitol. They were admitted at once and exchanged greetings with Mr. and Mrs. McKinley. Soon the President-elect emerged from his reception room on the arm of Senator Sherman. He looked calm and walked firmly. Just behind him came Secretary Porter, with Senator Mitchell of Wisconsin. Capt. Heistand of the army, with Abner McKinley, brought up the rear and kept back the people who pressed upon the party, even in the hotel corridors.

As the party emerged from the private entrance of the Ebbitt there was a roar of applause that shook the buildings. The street was packed with a solid mass of people, through which the carriage that was to convey the President-elect to the White House could scarcely be driven.

While the police struggled to clear a passage through the crowd the President-elect stood at the head of the granite steps and bowed his acknowledgments. The applause became deafening as he crossed the sidewalk and mounted the carriage step, so great that he stopped again, while the horses reared and champed uneasily in the din, and turned from side to side with uncovered head, his face expressing the appreciation he felt of this great manifestation of popular esteem. The President-elect was seated with Senator Sherman, sitting on the rear seat, and Senator Mitchell and Mr. Porter occupied the front seat.

The start was made for the White House amid renewed cheering by the crowd. Troop A of the Cleveland crack cavalry troop, comprising about 100 men, splendidly mounted on black chargers, opened the way through the mass of people, with a line stretching almost across the street; the coachman gave the word to his horses, the carriage fell in behind and the way was taken down Fourteenth street to Pennsylvania avenue and to the White House.

Scene in the Senate.

The Senate chamber was the center of attraction. The presidential family arrived at 11:30. Mrs. McKinley, accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Barber, took a front seat which had been reserved for her. Following the wife of the new President came the venerable Mrs. McKinley, Sr., garbed befitting her years. The diplomatic corps entered, followed a moment later by the chief justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court. They filed slowly down the aisle in gorgeous regalia and silken robes. The members of the House of Representatives, headed by Speaker Reed, then entered the chamber. There was a stir of interest when Senate officials announced the Vice-President-elect. Mr. Hobart entered from the right door, bowed slightly to the standing Senators and officials, and stepped to the seat near the presiding officer's desk.

All this was but accessory to the arrival of President Cleveland and President-elect McKinley. It was just 12:20 when they entered the main doors, facing the Vice-President, and attention was rivveted at once on these two central figures as they moved down the middle aisle. Mr. McKinley bowed to the presiding officer, and, with Mr. Cleveland, was seated immediately in front of the platform, facing the Senate and the crowds.

On the left sat Major General Miles, commanding officer of the army, and Admiral Brown, senior officer of the navy, both in full uniform. The members of the outgoing cabinet were in a semi-circle to the left, facing the outgoing and incoming Presidents. On the opposite side of the center aisle, in a semi-circle, were Chief Justice Fuller and the associate justices. The members of the House of Representatives filled the entire body of the hall on the right side and on the opposite area of the chamber sat the Senators and Senators-elect.

As the presidential party took their seats Vice-President Stevenson rose and invited his successor to step forward and take the oath of office. Mr. Hobart advanced to the desk, raised his right hand and took the oath in accordance with the constitution. Mr. Stevenson then delivered his valedictory address.

The proclamation of the outgoing President calling an extra session of the Senate having been read, Vice-President Hobart requested the new Senators to advance and take the oath of office. It was 1:05 p. m. when the last oath was administered, and then the formal exit began, the Supreme judges going first, then Mr. Cleveland and President McKinley, and the other officials following.

THE inaugural ball Thursday night closed the celebration of McKinley's induction into office. The great court of the pension building, in which the function took place, was gorgeously decorated with flags and bunting and forests of tropical plants and potted flowers. The arched galleries were hidden with greens and superb designs in lights and flags. The ball proper opened with the arrival of the President at 9:30 o'clock, and as he entered with Mrs. McKinley and the presidential party the full Marine band announced the arrival with the opening march. President and Mrs. McKinley then headed the grand promenade and made a complete tour of the ball room. This was practically their only public appearance at the function, as they then retired to the suite of apartments set aside for their use, and there received a few friends and the most distinguished guests. As he had not fully recovered from weakness incident to his recent attack of grip, Mr. McKinley was obliged to forego the pleasure of a general handshaking. Vice-President and Mrs. Hobart accompanied the President and Mrs. McKinley, this arrangement having been made to facilitate the reception of privileged guests. The great crush on the floor made dancing an impossibility until a late hour, when the crowd had been considerably reduced.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science have proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. SENATE AND HOUSE.

WORK OF OUR NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

A Week's Proceedings in the Halls of Congress—Important Measures Discussed and Acted Upon—An Impartial Resume of the Business.

The National Solons.

Cuba was again a topic in the Senate Friday, from 1 to 4:30 o'clock; but the debate upon the Sangully and Aguirre resolutions was comparatively spiritless, and resulted in no definite action. The first half hour of the evening session was given to private pension bills, the pension calendar being cleared. Among the bills passed was that pensioning Gen. Cassius M. Clay of Kentucky at $50 a month. At 8 o'clock the consideration of the Indian bill was resumed, the amendment relating to the five civilized tribes being discussed at great length. The amendment as finally agreed to gives the United States exclusive jurisdiction over all civil and criminal cases, abolishing the native courts. Two additional judges are provided for the territory. The bill was then passed. The House passed the Senate international monetary conference bill by a vote of 279 to 3. It was supported alike by Republicans, silver Republicans, gold Democrats and silver Democrats. Bills were also passed to provide for the arbitration of differences between the carriers of interstate commerce and their employes (known as the Erdman bill), and the Senate bill to prevent the importation of impure tea.

There was a majority of three to one against ticket scalping when a vote was taken in the House Saturday on the bill reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Mr. Sherman, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, moved that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill and agree to a conference. The motion was carried and the bill was sent to conference. In the Senate Mr. Daniel presented certified copies of the naturalization papers of Julio Sanguilly, and had them printed, with extracts from the law showing their regularity. Mr. Chandler made a statement as to the Loud bill, saying the committee had concluded that it was impossible to have any legislation on the subject at the present session, and that a commission should be created to investigate second-class mail matter. The usual Sunday quiet of the capitol building was disturbed by a session of the Senate, made necessary to pass the appropriation bills. The attendance of Senators was even greater than that through the week. By a parliamentary fiction the session was a part of the legislative day beginning Saturday, a recess having been taken at 2:30 o'clock in the morning until 3 p. m. The sundry civil appropriation bill received its finishing touches, and was passed. The Senate, by unanimous vote, has added an amendment to the bill, counteracting the President's recent order withdrawing 21,000,000 acres of land from the public domain and establishing it as forest reserves.

When the naval appropriation bill first came up in the Senate Monday afternoon Mr. Chandler stated that he would move later to increase the appropriation for torpedo boats or decrease the number provided. All the other items were agreed to without comment except that relating to cost of armor, establishment of Government armor plant, etc., which occasioned extended debate. The Chandler amendment reducing the price of armor plate to $300 a ton was adopted without a division. Another, to reduce the total of contracts authorized to $2,407,500, to correspond with the reduction per ton, was adopted. The amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to establish a Government armor plate factory at a cost of $1,500,000 if he failed to make contracts was lost. The naval bill was passed at midnight, and although Mr. Chandler tried to call up the international monetary conference bill the Senate adjourned. In the House the bill to prohibit the transmission of detailed accounts of prize fights by mail or telegraph led to a very lively skirmish, in which prize fighting was denounced on all sides. But the bill met with most strenuous opposition on the ground that it would tend to establish a censorship of the press, and was finally sidetracked. A bill was passed to provide for the transmission to Washington of presidential election returns by mail. The bill abolishes the system of messengers now employed.

In the Senate Tuesday the fortification bill was passed, as was also the deficiency appropriation bill, after amendment to keep the $1,310,427 claim of the Southern Pacific Company in the treasury until final adjustment of the Government lein upon that corporation. The House amendments to the international monetary conference bill were agreed to, and the bill sent to the President. The President sent to the House a veto message upon the immigration bill, his principal objection being to the educational clause; the President holds that the worse class of immigrants is not found among the illiterate.

The House Thursday, by a vote of 193 to 37, overrode the veto of the immigration bill. The conference report on the postoffice appropriation bill was agreed to. Then the fight on the naval bill was renewed, the price of armor plate being the matter at issue. The Senate amendments to reduce the price from $563 to $300 and to build three torpedo boats and a practice boat, were agreed to. The Indian bill, District of Columbia appropriation bill, and the sundry civil bill were accepted as they came from conference.

Both Senate and House adjourned without day Thursday. In the Senate agreement was unanimous to resolutions expressing the appreciation of the Senate for the able and impartial discharge of the duties of presiding officer by Mr. Stevenson, and by Mr. Frye, president pro tem. Mr. Hoar announced that the committee of Congress had waited on the President and that he had asked them to convey his congratulations on the close of their labors. There was anxious awaiting for the announcement that the President had signed the remaining appropriation bills. But it did not come. Gradually the identity of the Senate was merged into the more striking features of the inauguration ceremony, and the session came to a close without further legislative business. The general deficiency bill failed in conference, and the agriculture, sundry civil and Indian appropriation bills failed of executive approval. The House was still in the legislative day of Tuesday when it adjourned without day. The closing hours were uneventful. The statement had worked hard all night to get the sundry civil, Indian and agricultural bills to the president, only to have them "pocket vetoed," while the general deficiency bill failed of passage because the House refused to subscribe to the $500,000 of Bowman claims which the Senate insisted upon. Mr. McMillin of Tennessee, with a few appropriate remarks, offered a resolution of thanks to the Speaker for his impartiality as a presiding officer, which was unanimously adopted by a rising vote. As Speaker Reed mounted the rostrum the members rose and cheered valiantly. He acknowledged the warm reception and then delivered his parting address. With a whack of the gavel at 11:56 he then declared the House adjourned without day and the members hurried over to the Senate to participate in the ceremonies there.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Victimized Terre Haute Merchants Get Their Money Back—Fire Does $100,000 Damage to Fort Wayne Property—Charged with Bigamy.

Compel Them to Make Restitution.

Two men, who had credentials from the Commercial Traveler, published in Chicago, to solicit subscriptions and advertising, were taken to police headquarters at Terre Haute, where they refunded money collected from local business men. The latter said they had contributed the money on the representation made by the men that they were engaged in an effort to secure some concession to commercial travelers by the Western Passenger Traffic Association. The men defended their action on the ground that they had promised to give the business men space in the Commercial Traveler. Members of the Travelers' Protective Association took an active part in causing the restitution of the money. The two men had a long petition, signed by prominent business men of the State, addressed to the traffic association.

Big Fire at Fort Wayne.

Morgan & Co.'s wholesale and retail hardware store at Fort Wayne was destroyed by fire Sunday morning, causing a loss of $75,000, with $40,000 insurance. The stock of Nathan & Kirchheimer, wholesale paper dealers, is a complete loss; damage, $12,000; insurance, $10,000. Mrs. Mary H. Williams owned the building, which was insured for $5,000. Rosmary, Geoglein & Co., hardware dealers, suffered from the water to the extent of $5,000 or $6,000; insurance, $1,500. The stock of Julius Nathan & Co., liquor dealers, was damaged to the extent of several thousand dollars; insurance $2,000. The tin shop of A. H. Staub was damaged by falling walls to the extent of $4,000. Four of the five buildings are total wrecks. During the progress of the fire four firemen were at work on the roof of A. H. Staub's store, which is much lower than the building occupied by Julius Nathan & Co. Suddenly the higher wall toppled, and to escape being crushed the firemen jumped from the roof. George Clingman was injured internally and about the spine and may not recover. The others were only bruised.

All Over the State.

Nelson And, a member of the soldiers' home, was run down and killed at Marion by a Big Four passenger train.

John Churchill, aged 68 years, and one of the oldest residents of North Manchester, died suddenly of heart disease.

Frederick Weyerick, aged 60, capitalist and real estate dealer of Milford, was thrown out of his wagon and killed.

J. E. Roehm, for many years in the leather business at Marion, killed himself in the Pan Handle passenger depot.

At Greencastle, Frank Wells pleaded guilty of stealing a horse and buggy, and was sentenced to four years' imprisonment at Jeffersonville.

Bartley Marrer, one of the oldest citizens of Wabash, dropped dead of heart disease. He was 60 years old and had resided there since 1862.

Chester C. Buck, for forty years a member of the banking firm of Buck & Toan, Plymouth, died of heart disease while conversing with a friend. He was 62 years old.

Fifty affidavits will be filed at Anderson against the quart house keepers. This is in addition to the big batch filed against the druggists for illegal sale of liquor. It is said that these will be followed by an equal number against the houses of ill repute for selling liquor. This is the crusade of the Indiana Liquor League, and it is understood such tactics are to be tried over the State. The purpose is to restrict the sale of liquors to saloons.

The largest and by far the most important order of window glass ever sold to a single firm in the United States was disposed of at Muncie by Thomas F. Hart, manager of the Western Glass Manufacturers' Association. The sale disposes of sixty carloads of glass to be delivered at once in one shipment to W. P. Fuller & Co. of San Francisco. It is a supplement to twenty-four other carloads sold to this firm lately for the Pacific coast trade.

Joseph Bishopp, aged 80 years, has been arrested near Anderson for bigamy, the charges being preferred by his fourth wife, who is now residing in the State of Ohio. Recently Bishopp went to Anderson and married Rebecca Shaw. In some manner the Ohio woman found that he had entered the matrimonial state again and she proceeded to immediately bring action against him. He will fight the case. It is somewhat complicated and he claims that he thought he had a divorce from the woman.

The Supreme Court struck a body blow at the liquor interests by holding that a city organized under the general law had the power by ordinance to exclude saloons from the residence parts of cities, even though persons already held licenses from both city and county. The court explains that the license is simply a permit, which may be revoked at any time the public good requires it, and that the power to regulate the liquor traffic is a part of the police right of the city, which cannot be surrendered by any contract which the city may make. The court also holds that the Moore bill passed by the last Legislature giving cities the right to enact such ordinances is not unconstitutional, neither does it conflict with the Nicholson law, and that the residence portion of any city includes any part, large or small, which is principally and chiefly used for residence purposes, families residing and having their homes there, even though a grocery or other business may be conducted there. This ruling will affect every city in the State, many cities having already paved the way for passage of similar ordinances, but delaying action to await the decision of the Supreme Court.

At South Bend, Helen, daughter of John H. Diehl, fell head foremost a distance of three stories, inflicting probably fatal injuries, her skull being crushed.

Several days ago a stranger stepped into a saloon at Indianapolis and invited the crowd to drink, saying he would pay for all they could swallow. William Davenport, 22 years of age, was in the crowd and accepted the invitation and within a few moments took two large drinks of whisky and a glass of beer and fell upon the floor unconscious. He was taken to the city hospital and died without having recovered consciousness.

At Portland, the coroner in the case of Tommy Welch, the Pittsburg burglar who was shot by William Osborne, returned a verdict of justifiable homicide.

The Supreme Court refused to reconsider its ruling in the case of John S. Beach and fellow officers of the Prairie City Bank, Terre Haute, who were indicted for receiving funds knowing the bank to be insolvent. Eleven indictments altogether were returned, and Beach was tried on one and was acquitted by direction of the court. The Supreme Court holds that the court below was in error and that Beach and his fellow officers must stand trial on the remaining indictments.

OLD PEOPLE AND THE GRIPPE

IT IS A MUCH MORE SERIOUS DISEASE WITH THEM THAN WITH THE YOUNG.

A Remedy that May Be Used.
From the Republican, Princeton, Ill.

Among the well-known farmers of Bureau County, Illinois, is William R. Lamb, of Milo, who, with his wife, Mrs. Jane Lamb, is numbered among the pioneer settlers. This family, now well along in years, is the center of a large relationship, and they stand well in the county. Mrs. Lamb, now 77 years of age, has experienced two attacks of the grippe, and her recovery in a comparatively short time has been the topic of much discussion among the people of Bureau County wherever she is known.

To ascertain the facts in the matter a representative of this paper called at their country home, located one mile west of Milo, last Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Fuller, a daughter of Mrs. Lamb, met the reporter at the door and gave him a cordial welcome. At her age Mrs. Lamb quite naturally feels much pleased that she is enjoying such good health as to be able to wait upon her husband, who is now 83 years old and quite feeble. Mrs. Lamb said:

"I had always enjoyed good health during my life until the year 1890. Then I had an attack of the grippe. During the winter of 1893-'94 I had a second attack which left me in a very much enfeebled condition. My lungs and back were weak, and I had a very troublesome cough, which at times was so severe that I thought I should strangle. I tried all the doctors in this neighborhood and some from other towns, but none seemed to give me any relief or even stay the progress of the disease.

"My suffering at times was severe and it was the general opinion of my neighbors and acquaintances that I could last but a few weeks, some thought not more than one or two days. I told my daughter, Mrs. Fuller, that I was satisfied I had the consumption and that nothing could be done for it. She only laughed and said: 'Mother, it can't be that you have the consumption—it may be only a heavy cough. You remember I was reading of some of our friends over in La Salle County the other day who were greatly benefited by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and if you will try them I will have Mr. Fuller buy a couple of boxes when he is in town to-day."

He brought two boxes, and I commenced taking them. In one week I felt much better, and after taking three boxes I felt entirely cured, and am now able to do about as much work as my daughter. Why, the other day when the men came from town with a fifty-pound sack of flour in the wagon, I picked is up and carried it in the house."

Mrs. Lamb further said: "I feel assured that my recovery is entirely due to the taking of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People." Mrs. Fuller and her husband both said they were entirely satisfied that it was Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that had saved Mrs. Lamb's life.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Why They Object.

"Why do your parents object so to Mr. Longstop?

Edith—Mamma objects to his shortcomings and papa to his long stayings.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

THAT SPLENDID COFFEE.

Mr. Goodman, Williams County, Ill., writes us: "From one package Salzer's German Coffee Berry I grew 300 pounds of better coffee than I can buy in stores at 30 cents a pound."

Rope.

A cork-core floating rope has been designed. The inventor claims that his floating rope of one inch in thickness will stand a strain of more than 1,000 pounds. The rope consists of a core of small, round corks, about three-quarters of an inch long, placed end to end, round which is a braided network of cotton twine. This is surrounded by another layer of strong cotton twine, braided in heavy strands, which is about a quarter of an inch thick.

Barbette for a Battleship.

The barbette for the battleship Iowa is the largest ever manufactured in America, and has been more than a year under construction. It consists of nine plates, each weighing 95,000 pounds, in addition to a large turret. The plates are fifteen inches thick and 220 inches wide. The barbette is to be shipped to Philadelphia on a train of cars built for the purpose.

One of Mrs. Pinkham's Talks

Concerning a Mother's Duty to Her Young Daughter. Together with a Chat with Miss Marie Johnson.

The balance wheel of a woman's life is menstruation. On the proper performance of this function depends her health.

Irregularity lays the foundation of many diseases, and is in itself symptom of disease. It is of the greatest importance that regularity be accomplished as soon as possible after the flow is an established fact.

Disturbance of the menstrual function poisons the blood. In young girls suppression develops latent inherited tendencies to scrofula or consumption, and no time must be lost in restoring regularity. Many a young girl goes to her grave because this difficulty has been thought lightly of, and mother has said, "Time will bring about a cure; she is young, I don't worry about her."

Mother, when you see your daughter languid and indifferent to things that usually interest a young girl, when you note that flush on her cheek, that glassy appearance in her eyes; when your daughter tells you that even the weight of her dress waist oppresses her, and that she has terrible pains in her stomach shortly after eating, don't ignore these signs! If you do, you will be following your daughter to the grave, for she will die!

This is gospel truth—she is developing consumption of the bowels!

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the greatest regulator known to medicine. Make haste to use it on the first appearance of the tell-tale symptoms; it will restore all the female organs to their normal condition. Miss Marie Johnson's letter to Mrs. Pinkham, which follows, should interest all mothers and young ladies. She says:

"My health became so poor that I had to leave school. I was tired all the time, and had dreadful pains in my side and back. I would have the headache so badly that everything would appear black before my eyes, and I could not go on with my studies. I was also troubled with irregularity of menses. I was very weak, and lost so much flesh that my friends became alarmed. My mother, who is a firm believer in your remedies from experience, thought perhaps they might benefit me, and wrote you for advice. I followed the advice you gave, and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills as you directed, and am now as well as I ever was. I have gained flesh and have a good color. I am completely cured of irregularity. Words cannot express my gratitude, and I cannot thank you enough for your kind advice and medicine."—Miss Marie F. Johnson, Centralia, Pa.

GOOD LOOKS & PAIN

When you see a "good-looking" woman, you nearly always see a healthy woman. Beauty is really health. It is the attractiveness of face and form that comes naturally when weakness and pain are absent. Sickness and pain drive attractiveness away.

It is difficult to make women believe their tortures can be cured at home. The popular belief is that they must suffer on and on—or go to a physician, and reveal secrets that he ought not to know.

Nine-tenths of women's troubles can be cured without physician's aid.

GUARDING COUNTY BILLS.

Dr. Nusbaum's Bill Goes through in Fine Shape.

Indianapolis News.

The Senate bill introduced by Dr. Nusbaum, of DeKalb county, to regulate the duty of county commissioners and county auditors, and authorizing suits to be brought for the recovery of unlawful allowances, was passed by the House late yesterday afternoon, and is now ready to be sent to the Governor. It is regarded by many as one of the most salutary bills passed this session. The bill, in full, is as follows:

"Be it enacted, that in all counties in this State containing a population of more than fifty thousand (50,000) inhabitants, determined by the census of 1890, the boards of commissioners of such counties shall meet in regular session the first Monday of each month, and in all other counties the first Monday of March, June, September and December of each year.

"The said boards of commissioners of the several counties in this State shall at the first of each regular session, audit the books of the county treasurer and county auditor in their respective counties and compare the allowances made by said board at the preceding session with the stubs of the warrants drawn by the auditor in payment of such allowance, and shall also examine all warrants redeemed by the county treasurer and turned over to the county auditor, and for which he claims credit, with the corresponding stubs, and see that such warrants are properly canceled, so they can not again be put in circulation.

"It shall be unlawful for any board of commissioner of any county in this State, or for any member thereof, to make any allowance or to allow any claim against such county, or order the issue of any county order or warrant for the payment of any sum of money except at a regular session of said board, and it shall be unlawful for any county auditor to draw or to issue to any person any warrant or county order for the payment of any claim against such county except the same has been ordered and allowed by the board of commissioners of the county while in regular session, or by a court of competent jurisdiction.

"No claim shall be allowed by the board of commissioners of any county in this State unless such claim, duly itemized and verified by the claimant, or some one in his behalf, shall have been filed in the Auditor's office of the proper county, and by him placed on the claim docket at least five (5) days before the first day of the regular session of such Board. Any county Auditor or any member of the Board of county Commissioners violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined in any sum not less than fifty dollars (50.00) for each offense, and any such auditor shall be liable on his official bond in double the amount of such warrant so drawn, which may be recovered by any tax-payer of the county on giving security for costs, for use and benefit of such county, and the court trying the same shall allow such tax-payer a reasonable compensation, including reasonable attorney fees, for the trouble and expense incurred in prosecuting such suit, to be named in the order and payable only out of the money recovered.

"Any citizen and taxpayer of any county in this State, at any time within two (2) years after the allowance of any claim, after demand made on the board of commissioners of the proper county and refusal by them, may in his own name, on giving bond for the costs, prosecute and maintain for the use and benefit of such county the proper suit for the recovery of any illegal, unwarranted or unauthorized allowance made by such board, and the court trying the same shall make such person so bringing such suit reasonable allowance, to be named in the order, as will reimburse him for the trouble had and expense incurred in prosecuting such suit, including reasonable attorney's fees, to be paid only out of such money that may be recovered.

"Nothing in this act shall be constructed as repealing Sections 5,763 and 570 of Revised Statutes of 1881 concerning voluntary allowances."

OUR SECOND ANNIVERSARY.

Thursday's Daily.

The Auburn DAILY COURIER is two years old to-day, March 4, 1897. How time flies! But it has been a busy two years, for one who runs a daily paper in a town the size of Auburn, and with a small force of people, has to work, and think and manage. There is no time to watch the flight of the months. They will keep their own records.

As we stated at the first, the enterprise was a venture that entailed some risk and we entered our new field with some degree of anxiety. But the feeling soon passed off, and gave place to one of confidence—confidence over which was no shadow as long as we had the loyal support of Auburn's people. And this, in general, we have had. True, there were a small number who at the outset, predicted a very short life to the daily in Auburn. But they soon saw a possibility, then a probability of its success. And there was a general agreement as to this, unbroken until the late lamented campaign waxed warm. Then there developed a feeling among a very few, that they would prefer to see Auburn fall back into the "weekly list" rather than support a daily that did not take their special view in politics. So a few departed and went down the narrow path that leads backward to weekly newspaperdom. We were sorry to lose them, but could not afford to let our course be controlled by others. We have no harsh words. We are still working for Auburn and its material interests. Our course has met with the approval of the majority of our citizens and we are content.

We have been, in all, as successful as we had anticipated. We said at the start, there would be no profit in a daily. But we are satisfied to have it even self sustaining. This is as much as we had expected. It has also kept up its circulation, and is to-day much greater than when we began. We are glad to note that some of our best citizens have dropped their big city dailies and find that the DAILY COURIER fills the full measure of all their needs just as well. We thank them and thank all who have helped us, and hope this encouragement will continue and increase. And so we enter on our third year, feeling that no promise on our part is necessary to prove to our people, that the DAILY will be loyal to their interests while laboring for the success of its own.

WATERLOO, IND., Jan. 20, 1897.

To whom it may concern;—I have suffered with eczema for four years and had it bad. I tried three different doctors and got no relief. I then called on Dr. Rosenbury and he took my case and I soon got better and still improved, till now I am well and comfortable, and will say that this is given voluntarily for the good of others. I don't begrudge the money I paid him. I am comfortable and well. Yours With Respect,
EDWARD WAREHAM.

A STORY WITH A MORAL.

The most comical feature that has ever come under the writer's observation in modern history was enacted in the little town of C —— not a hundred miles from Auburn.

A man bearing the stamp of a thorough gentleman upon his features, also bearing the name of George, kept a goodly number of chickens, and to the discomfort of his neighbors allowed them to roam at will. They bothered a lady whose patience had become worn with throwing every conceivable object at said chickens, but being unable with combined strength and skill to hit a side of a barn.

But, as "future favors the just," a large Plymouty rock rooster being more bold than his followers, walked into a trap, then Mr. George walked around on his ear—and using such "fowl" language to the "fair jailer," that proved beyond all doubt, he was not the gentleman he seemed. The rooster was kept in confinement until the next day and then "turned out" and went home bearing on his person a warning inscribed on a card. "Keep your chicken at home, we are out of feed. Yours truly."

The warning was not heeded and Mr. Rooster again got into the trap. The experience gave him a severe sore throat, from which his lordship never recovered. Now to cap the climax the lady in question, who it is alleged committed the "fowl" deed, comes forward with the following poem, that fits the case to a paralell:

One time there was an old grey man
He had a great big rooster
That used to roam away from home
And eat things he wasn,t use'ter.
Georgie, Georgie, careless man,
To let your chicken wander
On other people's premises
And fatten on such plunder.

One day the rooster stayed so long
This plainly told the master,
His rooster dear, I'm sad to hear
Had met with some disaster,
Georgie, Georgie, master dear
Quickly to the rescue,
But out of sight, in every plight
No telling where he'd fled too.

Across a lot in eager haste.
The master's step pursuing
The cloud upon his wrinkled brow
Told, that a storm was brewing.
Georgie, Georgie, naugh'y man
You ought not so to talk sir
Too a lady fair with golden hair
And angry so to make her.

"Madam you have stole my cock
I'm sure I heard him crowing
Unless you let that rooster go
To jail you will be goining.
Georgie, Georgie, oh, no, no,
You cannot have your rooster
For I have got himsafe and sound
And now I am the boaster.

Across that same lot the next day
In pride and wondrous showing
That selfsame rooster strutted home
And kept up a constant crowing
Georgie, Georgie, master kind
Come hear and see my collar
So snugly placed around my neck
I can do naught else but holler.

Time wore on, as all time does
That rooster's days to number
Oh, cruel fate, to come too late
His wings were crossed in slumber
Georgie, Georgie, I can't crow
Pride doth within me quail
So eat me up both slick and clean
I'm dead as a door nail

The Early Crow-cuss Is Up.

—Truth.

A Real Will Problem.

A prominent citizen of Fairfield township died lately and left a will, in which he gave his eldest son $200 more than was to go to each of the other seven sons. To each of his two daughters, he gave $80 less than each of the seven sons got. There were a few special bequests given to children by a second wife, that had to be taken from the estate first. Then it was found that only $934.20 was left. What amount did the eldest son receive? What amount did each of the otther seven sons receive? What amount did each of two daughters receive? An answer from some pupil of the common schools, is desired.

—The plan of buying eggs by weigh instead of count, is being agitated by grocers and produce buyers in some towns, and it is said the plan is quite likely to be adopted. It is argued that while the smallest eggs are not supposed to bring as good a price as "regulars" they often creep into a basket full, and when the merchants receive their account of sales from the parties to whom they ship, it is not an uncommon thing to find that some of the crate have been discounted for this reason. One-half regular price is all that is allowed for small eggs by the commission merchants. As the local merchants have at least come out even on the deal, and they say there is no profit whatever in handling the hen fruit, taken year in and year out, it would it would look as if the weight buying system would result in a benefit to farmers. It is a certainty that there could not possibly be any unfairness to either party in the deal. The farmer would get pay for just what he actually had and the merchant would have just what he han paid for—no more and no less. Ex.

COURT

Thursday's Daily.

Sheriff Stroh returned yesterday from his trip to Michigan City where he had taken Borst and Sawvel.

Yesterday afternoon, the grand jury brought in an indictment against Virgil Houser on a charge of petit larceny, the specific charge being the taking of some rings and breast pins. He had already been in jail over a month and when he came in and plead guilty, and threw himself on the mercy of the court, he was given a light sentence and this was suspended during good behavior. He made earnest promises to keep straight and honest hereafter, and Judge Penfield gave him a very feeling and valuable lecture. Virgil and his people have many friends here, who all hope he may profit by the court's friendly advice and leniency. The universal judgment is that his case was disposed of properly, in the interest both of mercy and justice.

The grand jury have been looking up the gamblers and several men who ought to be in better business are said to be caught in the net.

The men now in jail are six in number. They are: Geo. White, not yet indicted, but in jail on charge of robbing a house of furniture in Jackson township; Jink Marsh, of Waterloo, a boy charged with helping to break into a restaurant and stealing some oysters; Newt Penland, who is serving out his fine of $26 0for not supporting the the wife he married; Dan Edgemond of Garrett; who is serving out 60 days for larceny; Geo. Cramer, not indicted yet, but on charge of stealing brass at Garrett; Frank Kare, a tramp hailing from Joliet, Ill., who broke in box cars at Butler.

It is now understood that Mr. Boland will occupy the auditor's office and do the work for Mr. Borst, and therefore for the benefit of the bondsmen and the family. This is right in this case at least. But the new law, that permits the vacating of a county office under such circumstances, is in general, a good one. But it does not apply to this case, as it was passed Saturday after Borst had received his sentence and a law cannot be made to go back and cover a matter done before the law was made. But any case that comes, up after this, it will cover.

Yesterday afternoon there came up one of the cases from Ft. Wayne, that had come here on a change of venue. The Old Pennington Road Machine Co. after being out of buisness, had revived by a new company called the Indiana Machine Co. This company did business awhile, and then to increase their business established a branch concern called the Indiana Road Machine Co. which made road machines only. This company made some money, but all its accounts were kept separate from those of the old, or main company. Then it was concluded to strengthen this new company and enable it to buy out the old or main company. The old company had at the start assumed about $35,000 of the debts of the old Pennington Co. and now had anditional debt of its own. In order to facilitate the combining of the two plants, the old one was put into the hands of a receiver, and its property of all kinds advertised for sale, the sale being set for Saturday of this week, March 13. Those who oppose this sale ,object because the assets of the company now to be sold, have been apprased unimously low, as they believe, and would result in a loss to certain parties Now they bring this suit to have the sale postponed, the present receiver set aside and a new one appointed. Not being able to finish the matter yesterday, they came up and resumed work again this afternoon. Judge Penfield is trying the case.

Friday's Daily.

The grand jury is still at work. Yesterday Frank Dills was before them again, but of course, no one as yet knows what for or what came of it. There is a report that he is going to plead guilty, as the others did.

The Ft. Wayne case spoken of yesterday began again this morning, and is still going on.

There are some things in our recent troubles that are out of the common run, and people keep discussing it. It is the strange and yet commendable course of the unfortunate officials who went to prison. Not one of them, when the investigation had fairly began ever tried in the least to avoid a full investigation or put any obstacles in the way although they must have seen it would certainly involve them in a way they could not escape. Take the case of Mr. Borst, who had all the data in his reach, in his office, yet he calmly gave to the commissioners and expert Ernest, all the incriminary papers they called for—papers that he knew carried with them his own fate. Yet he calmly kept at his desk, working, writing and adding figures till last working day before his sentence. Not one of them tried to escape or to deny his responsibility, and as far as we know, not one of them tried to put the blame on anyone else. And while we are condemning these men for their wrong doing, it would be well to call attention to this one thing in their favor. It proves that no man is all bad and no good. And it forms a strange part of this unfortunate chapter.

Saturday's Daily.

When we went to press yesterday, Treasurer Fair, in charge of a deputy, was seeking bail. There was some disagreement as to the amount required. Some claimed that he would have to give twice the amount of the shortage, and as that was over $10,000, he might have to give about $21,000 bonds. But Mr. Hartman and Mr. Croxton, Fairs attorneys, argued that the bond in a criminal indictment need not cover only the shortage charged against Mr. Fair peasonally, and not that caused by his son. So the bond was finally fixed at $1,000 and L. J. Miller became his bondsman for that amount. We do not know when the case will come up. But business will be lively about the court house on Monday.

The grand jury adjourned Friday evening, to meet again March 24, when they will convene and begin business at the old stand. They have evidently fixed up a number of indictments for minor offenses.

Hon. E. D. Hartman will sit as judge, Monday and Tuesday, and dispose of the state cases, such as violations of liquor laws, gambling, and probably dispose of some of the prisoners in the jail. There will also be some jury cases, as the trial jury will be called in on Monday. There is no court to day, Saturday.

In connection with this raising of orders, we wish to correct, or make plainer, a statement we made in the WEEKLY of March 4. We spoke of the probably raised order of ex-commissioners Platter. It had been claimed that he had at the December term of 1890, received on order for $42 on salary, which was afterwards raised to $92. This was a mistake. The order is for $94.50 and is genuine. Mr. Platter's bill for 26 days service at $3.50 a day is on file. This would be $91.00 and there was also an allowance for something else, which brought the order up to the figure named. His signature on the stub is all right. So there was no crookedness on the part of the officers in that case.

A FROST THAT BITES THE SOUL

(Apoem suggested by recent events)

There came a frost one autumn morn
That covered wold and wood and corn.
The night before congealed the dew,
And chilled the tendrils through and through.

And when the sun lit up the day,
And drove the dark and cold away,
The warmth it shed o'er all the land
Brought hope and grief to every man.

Hope, because some things were spared;
Grief, because so much was sear'd:
For, lo! the Powers that killed the corn,
And turned it black that autumn morn.

Just sombre lined the forest leaves.
And let them hang upon the trees.
To show the world how some things freeze
While other pass the test with ease.

Which shall boast, the wood or corn;
Perhaps the wood this autumn morn.
But when the frosts have keener grown
The leaves themselves will all have flown.

There are black frosts that kill some men;
Temptations power they cannot stand.
The ill that causes them to fall
Would hardly taint some men at all.

But who shall boast—shall you or I?
Are we so sure that in our sky
There is no power to make us fall,
And grieve the hearts of friends and all?

Ah! charity sweet, that never fails,
Come, fill our hearts, and set thy sails,
And carry us all to a higher sphere
Of human love, divinely near.

SAFE BLOWN.

Lagrange County Treasury Robbd of $400.00.

Lagrange Standard.

The county treasury was luted this Thursday morning. The vault door and inside safe were bursted with dynamite. There were two explosions, but the burglars so effectively smothered the first in opening the vault that it was not noticed. When the safe bursted, Dora Crowl and other persons near by were aroused and Mr. Crowl called out Sheriff Kauffman. Soon the local officers were looking for the site of the explosion, but none thought of the county treasurer's office which was generally thought to be secure. All the stores were examined and the alleys searched for thieves.

Sheriff Kauffman held up the freight trains passing through on the G. R. & I. and examined a lot of tramps.

Returning home Sheriff Kauffman went to the court house, and glancing into the treasurer's office, noticed a window raised. Going outside he climbed into the window and found a terrible wreck.

The outside window of the treasurer's room had been reached by a short ladder, the window opened with a crow bar, the lock blown off the vault door and the vault entered, and then the small safe, used by the treasurer to hold amounts, was blown open and made a total wreck, the door being thrown across the room, breaking the plaster on the opposite wall. Papers and bills were blown to attoma and scattered over the floor. About $400, including 4,000 new pennies, were stolen.

Since the above, a satchel has been found near the railroad bridge, containing about 3,000 pennies.

A dispatch from Sturgis reports that a package of pennies was found there, and that two suspected men are being held awaiting our sheriff's arrival.

CIRCLING THE GLOBE

CONCISE HISTORY OF SEVEN DAYS' DOINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World, Embracing Foreign Affairs and Home Happenings of an Important Nature.

END THE WAR.

Such Are Spain's Orders to Gen. Weyler in Cuba.

Crittenden Marriott, the correspondent in Havana, declares that Gen. Weyler has received positive orders from Madrid to end the Cuban war at once, even by going to the extent of selling the island to the insurgents if need be, to accomplish that object.

Gen. Weyler, therefore, set out for Villa Clara to find Gen. Gomez and to undertake negotiations. Weyler himself said that the war would end within three weeks.

General Weyler's orders are, it is claimed, to secure peace at any terms, and he is instructed to offer Gomez bribes, autonomy or the island itself.

Fear as to President McKinley's position is given as a leading cause for the Spanish change of policy.

Cuban Affairs.

A dispatch from Havana, via Tampa, Fla, says:

Reports are received from Manzanillo about another serious engagement near Canto River, in which Gen. Garcia captured from the Spaniards a large supply of arms and ammunition and made 100 Spanish soldiers prisoners.

The situation in the Province of Santiago De Cuba continues to be favorable to the Cubans, and the Spanish columns have practically abandoned active operations in the field. They escort only the convoys with provisions from one fortified town to another, carefully avoiding any fight with the Cubans. Col. Vara Del Rey has reported to Gen. Weyler that it is impossible for the Spanish to move in the province in columns less than 4,000 men strong.

A Double Tragedy.

Stephan Horton, a wealthy farmer who resided in the little village of Rutland, six miles from Mansfield, Pa., is lying dead in his home, while in another part of the house lies the body of his wife. The death of both has been attributed to poison, and the coroner's jury has found that Mrs. Horton administered it to her husband and then ended her own existence with the remainder of the deadly powder.

Jenny Electric Works Burned.

The Jenny Electric Motor Works, at the Panhandle crossing of the Belt Railroad, on the eastern edge of Indianapolis, were entirely destroyed by fire. The company manufactured electric motors. The loss is from 180,000 to 85,000, and includes buildings, machinery and patterns. The total insurance amounts to about $35,000. It is thought that the fire was started by charged electric light wires.

Fire in Chicago.

Fire destroyed the building occupied by John A. Talman & Co., wholesale grocers, at the corner of Michigan avenue and Lake street, Chicago, and damaged the upper stories of the building at 10, 12 and 14 Lake street occupied by Chase & Sanborne's coffee and spice house. Loss of Talman & Co., $400,000; Chase & Sanborne's loss is not heavy.

In Close Quarters.

The commanders of the Greek cruisers, Alphios and Pinios, still in Cretan waters, are in a most difficult position. Their orders are only to retire from Canea bay under protest, and on no account to leave Cretan waters. Their orders are to resist to death any attack upon them. The cruisers are daily expected to be fired upon.

Children Poisoned.

Five children in the family of William Stureman, LaPorte County, Indiana, were poisoned by eating patent pills, which they found during the absence of the parents. Two of the sufferers died, while the others are critically ill. The pills on examination were found to contain a poisonous drug.

Good News for Woolen Mill Owners.

At a meeting held at Louisville of the woolen mill operators of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Tennessee Georgia and Kentucky, it was stated that forthcoming changes in the tariff would enable the mills to run all the year round Queen Exiled.

Ranavalona III, the Queen of Madagascar, who has only held her position nominally since the island was made a French colony, on June 20, 1896, has been exiled to the island of Reunion, a French possession near the island of Mauritius.

Jackson Must Die.

A special from Frankfort, Ky., says: Gov. Bradley has refused to grant Scott Jackson's appeal for clemency.

Carter Harrison, Jr.

Carter Harrison, Jr., has been nominated for Mayor of Chicago on the Democratic ticket, Judge Tuthill, his chief rival, placed him in nomination. Ernest Hummel was nominated by acclamation for City Treasurer.

Double Drowning.

An unknown man and a middle-aged woman, who, it is supposed, were driving from Rome, Ohio, to Port Huron, drove into Bell River near a bridge on the turnpike, four miles northeast of Lenox, Mich., and were drowned.

EASTERN.

Gov. Black of New York has declined to interfere in the sentence of death of Arthur Mayhew, convicted of murdering Stephen Powell at Hempstead March 7, 1896. The Governor will commute to life imprisonment the sentence of death imposed upon William Younga, the Fort Hunter wife murderer, on the ground that Younga, who is weak-minded, was under great provocation at the time of the commission of the crime.

It is probable that the will of the late William Lampson of Leroy, N. Y., by which he left the bulk of his estate, valued at $1,000,000, to Yale College, will be contested. At the time of his death it was supposed that the only relatives were distant cousins in England. However, there are a number of second and third cousins living in Batavia and Medina, who, it is reported, contemplate contesting the validity of the will.

Preparations for the unusual proceeding of obliterating an entire town are nearly completed by the metropolitan water commissioner, to whom has been granted the authority to root out the town of West Boylston, which lies in the midst of a tract of land to be used in the construction of the mammoth Nashua river basin, which is to supply the city of Boston and its suburbs with water. Among the factories affected are those of the Clarendon Mills, which employ 200 operatives, and the West Boylston Manufacturing Company, where a greater number of hands are working.

WESTERN.

An immense packing plant, backed principally by English capitalists, is to be built in Kansas City in the near future. A large European trade is already assured, while at different points through the South branch houses will be established, making one of the most extensive packing firms in the world.

"Shamus O'Brien," the new romantic Irish opera, has made a hit at McVicker's Chicago theater. The company now giving this opera at McVicker's is the one that played it in London a year ago with so much success, and while "Shamus O'Brien" is Irish to the core, it appeals to all music lovers and theater-goers, from its romantic and thrilling story of love and patriotism. It is given with a chorus of sixty voices, all of the original costumes and scenery and an orchestra of twenty-five pieces. The advance sale of seats for the closing week is very large and reservations should be made at once. "The Cherry Sisters" is the next attraction at McVicker's. This is the most successful melodrama of the period, written by Joseph Arthur, author of "Blue Jeans."

A number of people were plunged to death early Wednesday morning in one of the worst railway accidents that has ever occurred in the State of Indiana. The engine and two cars of the Nashville limited on the Chicago and Eastern Illinois road plunged into the White river at a point between Decker and Hazleton. The iron bridge over the stream had given way to the weight of the train. The engineer and fireman and the passengers in the smoking car and day coach lost their lives. The wrecked locomotive and the baggage and smoking cars were buried in ten feet of mud and water. As the large engine reached the structure it tottered and fell. The engine and two cars of the heavy train followed and were precipitated into the deep stream. The six cars which made up the rest of the limited stopped and were torn loose from the front of the train. Engineer Sears had applied the airbrake when he felt the bridge giving way beneath him.

The California State Senate has ordered that A. W. Lawrence, managing editor of the San Francisco Examiner, be imprisoned until he answers certain questions put to him by a Senate committee. The Examiner recently published a sensational story to the effect that members of the Legislature had been bribed to vote for a bill making possible the transfer of civil suits from one court to another when an affidavit is made that the judge who is to hear the case is prejudiced. Both the House and Senate appointed committees to investigate the charges. Lawrence and two of the Examiner reporters refused to divulge the source of their information, claiming that the information has been given under a pledge of secrecy. A. L. Murphy, one of the reporters, was not held, but Editor Lawrence and Reporter L. L. Levings were arrested by the sergeant-at-arms of the Senate and turned over to the sheriff, who locked them in jail. Lawrence and Levings were taken before Superior Judge Hughes, to whom they had appealed, by their attorneys, for a writ of habeas corpus. The writ was granted, and the defendants were admitted to bail in $1,000 each.

Fire drove scores of tenants from the Belvidere apartment house, Chicago, at noon Tuesday. Many of the women and children were barely able to escape with their lives. There was no time to save any of the furniture or effects. The Belvidere was occupied by many families, and there were an unusual number of children in the building. At the hour the fire occurred most of the men were downtown, and in many cases there was none but women and children in the rooms. These were saved only with the greatest difficulty. They were taken from the windows and carried to the ground on ladders supplied by the fire department, the number of fire escapes being insufficient to afford them means of escape before the flames reached them. The panic spread to the entire building and the helpless tenants ran screaming through the halls, imploring some one to save them, while the busy engines outside threw streams of water through the windows and into the threatened rooms. The west side of the building suffered most severely, and the fire was finally confined to that portion, but not until after the tenants of the entire place had been driven from their homes in a panic of fright and with nothing more than the clothes they had on.

WASHINGTON.

The residence of Comptroller Eckels in the fashionable quarter of Washington, near the former home of Chief Justice Fuller of the Supreme Court, was entered by thieves Thursday while the Comptroller and Mrs. Eckels were absent, and valuable jewelry stolen. Among the articles secured by the thieves was a gold wedding ring of Mrs. Eckels. A pearl necklace, four gold bracelets, one small gold watch, a diamond and pearl ring, all belonging to Mrs. Eckels, were taken.

The State Department at Washington has just completed the extensive work initiated by Secretary Olney of collecting and publishing in book form a complete set of reports by United States ambassadors, ministers and consular officers abroad, exhibiting in concise form the financial systems of all the countries of the civilized world, with full explanatory notes by the officials of the effects of the different kinds of money used as standards of value upon the agricultural and industrial population of the respective nations. One volume of this work has already been published, and the second volume is just coming from the hands of the printer, completing the work. The reports have been collated and carefully digested by Frederick Emory, chief of the bureau of statistics of the State Department, which is hereafter to be known as the "bureau of foreign commerce." Nineteen nations are treated in this last volume.

Congressmen and office seekers are having a new experience at the White House. Mr. McKinley has let it be known pointedly, and in a way that cannot be misunderstood, that he is going to make Senators and Representatives responsible for the distribution of patronage within their own States. He has told visiting Congressmen that they must get together and decide among themselves what they want and whom they want to indorse. To one Senator he said: "I do not intend to become involved in any factional quarrels in any State, and if you cannot decide among yourselves which candidates you favor, and reach an agreement, you must not expect me to decide for you." The logic of this is that where State delegations cannot decide in regard to offices the patronage will be very likely to go elsewhere or the incumbents hold on. In consequence of this departure from the White House rule of the last twelve years, State delegations are getting together as they have not been in the habit of doing for many years past and discussing local patronage with a serious desire for results.

FOREIGN.

Havana dispatch: Gen. Weyler has issued an order directing that hereafter all women arrested in Cuba who are called "suspicious" shall be tried by court-martial. While the penalty is not publicly stated, it is supposed if the women are found guilty the death penalty will be imposed. The issuing of this order has been protested against by some foreign consuls. Gen. Weyler says, it is asserted, that the women are hardest to subdue, and that if he had his way he would kill them first and try them afterward.

The reply of Greece to the identical notes of the powers delivered at Athens insisting upon the withdrawal of the Greek troops from Crete and of the Greek fleet from Cretan waters was received at London at noon Monday. The reply of Greece is characterized by four points. In the first place it is conciliatory in tone, fully recognizing the high aims of the powers. Secondly, it offers to withdraw the Greek fleet from Cretan waters. Thirdly, while pointing out that it is impossible to withdraw the Greek troops from the Island of Crete, it offers to place them under the control of the powers to restore order. Finally, the reply meets the statements about the Cretans really preferring autonomy by suggesting that the Cretans be allowed to choose their own government. Advices from Canea, Island of Crete, say: The Turkish officials are allowing the Mussulmans to desecrate the cemetery and monasteries. Coffins are being forced open and remains are being thrown into the fields, the object being to steal the valuables buried with the dead.

News has been received at Rio Janeiro, Brazil, of a serious defeat of the Federal troops by the fanatical insurgents in the State of Bahia Sunday. The news of the disaster was at first denied at Rio Janeiro, and one paper was suppressed because it published bulletins of the battle. It is, nevertheless, a fact that the Brazilian troops fell into an ambush which was cleverly laid by the fanatics, and before recovering from the surprise the Federal vanguard was annihilated and the remainder of the force, as it came up to the point where the fanatics were intrenched, was assailed and suffered very severe losses. Col. Tamarindo, Col. Caesar and several other officers were killed, and 200 prisoners and many officers were wounded. The fanatics captured a number of prisoners, four guns with their caissons and a large quantity of ammunition. The news of the disaster has caused great excitement in the Brazilian capital, accompanied by some disorder. The monarchists were especially the objects of popular wrath and a mob destroyed the offices of the newspaper organs of that party, including the influential Gazetta Jarde. Gen. Arturoscar will succeed Col. Caesar as commander of the Federal forces in Bahia. President Mornes, in regard to the situation in Bahia, said he believed the outbreak was due to political intrigue.

IN GENERAL.

At Lincoln, Neb., ex-Treasurer Bartley furnished a satisfactory bond for $50,000, and County Judge Cochran granted him a continuance until April 19. Attorney General Smyth thinks Mr. Bartley will at that time be ready for trial.

The first hints have reached the public of a vast combination of whisky distillers, now rapidly nearing consummation after having been under way for almost a year. If the plans for it do not miscarry, and there seems to be almost nothing at present standing in their way, it is said this new trust will be the largest, by many millions of dollars, ever undertaken in the world. Beside it, the defunct whisky trust will pale and the sugar trust become a dwarf. It is estimated that at least $125,000,000 will be required to swing the project, for it will purchase or control over 100 distilleries and a surplus stock of whisky that is not a gallon less than 90,000,000. It is said this movement toward a combination originated, contrary to the custom in forming trusts, with the comparatively small distillers in the State of Kentucky. There are over a hundred of them, and during the last few years they have been suffering the greatest embarrassment in consequence of falling prices and enormous increase of production.

Captain John D. Hart, owner of the filibuster Laurada, was sentenced in the United States District Court at Philadelphia to two years' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $500 and the costs of the prosecution. He is to stand committed until the fine and costs are paid. The cost of the prosecution will amount to nearly $5,000. Captain Hart was taken to prison immediately after the sentence was pronounced. Captain Hart is about 40 years of age and has been in the fruit importing business for nearly twenty years. Shortly after the Cuban-Spanish war broke out he leased two of his steamers, the Laurada and Bermuda, to the Cuban patriots for the transportation of arms, ammunition and men to Cuba. Some of the largest expeditions that touched the shores of Cuba were shipped on these vessels, and their departure was due in a great measure to the skillful manipulation of the steamers by Captain Hart. Counsel for Captain Hart have not yet decided whether they will appeal to the United States Supreme Court or present a petition for a pardon to President McKinley.

WAR DOGS MUZZLED.

GREECE'S REPLY TO THE POWERS IS CONCILIATORY.

In Willing to Withdraw Her Fleet from Cretan Waters—But Land Forces Must Remain There to Protect Christians.

Looks Like Coercion.

The reply of Greece to the "identical notes of the powers" has been received at the various capitals, and it proves to be a much less defiant document than was generally expected. The previous declaration of officials at Athens that Greece would refuse to withdraw her forces from Crete has been carried out, but in a way that seems to offer abundant opportunity for advantageous compromise. The demand of the powers called simply for the withdrawal of the Greek troops from the Island of Crete and the Greek fleet from Cretan waters. Greece offers to obey the mandate regarding the fleet, but, although she points out that it would be impossible to withdraw the troops, she expresses a willingness to place them under the control of the powers to restore order. This ought to prove satisfactory to the powers, for it practically makes the Greek troops their own, and, moreover, the reply has a general conciliatory tone that seems to preclude any intention on the part of Greece of resisting the spirit of the powers' ultimatum.

The reply is said to recognize in flattering terms that the powers have been actuated only by high aims, but it makes the suggestion that the Cretans be allowed to choose their own government and thus determine finally whether they really prefer autonomy, as claimed by the powers. It is clear that Greece has succeeded in injecting into a refusal to obey the powers so much diplomatic compromise that her position has been materially strengthened. She has adhered to the only two points she has claimed—the right to have troops in Crete for the purpose of holding the fanatical Mussulmans in check and the right of the Cretans to choose what form of government they will have. The former position she adheres to rigidly, for, since the business of her troops in Crete is only to preserve order, it is naturally immaterial to Greece whether they are under the control of the powers or not, so long as order is preserved. Nevertheless, there is an apparent concession made in the offer to submit to such control, which gives the powers a favorable opening to recede from the letter of their demand.

Regarding the proposition that the Cretans be given the privilege to choose their own form of government, Greece of course can go no further than urge the suggestion. It seems to be an adroit answer, however, to the statement of the powers that Crete really prefers autonomy, for if the powers are sincere in that belief they can have no objection to submitting the proposition to a vote.

The general tone of the reply of Greece shows that the nation has no intention of irritating the powers to the extent of declaring war on Turkey, and that the preparations for conflict have been made doubtless for purposes of defense in case an attempt should be made to humiliate her beyond endurance.

Monday the foreign admirals notified the Greek vice-consul at Canea that he must leave Crete. They also wired to their respective Governments for the dispatch of 600 men to maintain order in the large towns. It is reported that the siege of Candamo has been raised and that the Mussulmans have gone to Palikoua, where they are safe.

Although the danger is not entirely past, it seems fair to assume that this latest European war scare will now gradually fade away into harmless diplomacy.

The House of Commons has adopted a supplementary naval estimate of £500,000, bringing the total expense for the navy during the present year to $22,880,000. This enormous figure is nearly double the cost of the navy fifteen years ago.

MAP OF THE BALKAN PENINSULA, WHERE WAR IS POSSIBLE.

This map shows the former extent of the Turkish dominions, large sections of which were taken away by Europe after the war of 1876. Bosnia and Herzegovina are now administered by Austria and may be considered part of her territory. Servia is an independent kingdom. So is Roumania, made up of the provinces of Wallachia and Moldavia. Bulgaria is a semi-independent principality, with control over Eastern Roumelia, which is still tributary to the Turkish empire. Montenegro is an independent principality. Greece has been an independent kingdom since the revolution of 1821-29. Macedonia, still a Turkish province, though formerly part of Greece, has long been in a ferment of revolt, and now Crete is striving to throw off the Turkish yoke and join herself to Greece. The town of Larissa, in Thessaly, is the rendezvous of the Grecian troops on the frontier, while the Turkish troops are gathering at the seaport town of Salonica, on the Gulf of Salonica.

OVER A BILLION.

Expenditures of Congress Just Ended Reported to Be $1,043,437,018.

Representative Cannon of Illinois, chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, and Mr. Sayers of Texas, who is at the head of the minority of that committee, have prepared their reviews of the appropriations of the Congress just ended. Mr. Cannon makes the total appropriation submitted to the President for his approval at the last session, including the general deficiency, which failed in conference, $518,108,458, or $25,383,276 less than the estimates submitted to Congress by the executive. The appropriations for the first session were $518,845,194, making a total for the Congress of $1,043,437,018, which, he says, is $49,797,812 more than the appropriations for the preceding Congress. The increase, he points out, includes for fortifications, $12,563,467; for river and harbor works, including contracts therefor, $2,476,506; for public buildings, none of which were authorized by the Fifty-fourth Congress, $2,343,394; for the postal service, $11,454,305; for the naval establishment, $8,947,523, and on account of permanent appropriations, mainly to meet interest and sinking fund charges for the bonds issued by the Cleveland administration, $24,983,744.

"The appropriations are," says Mr. Cannon, "in my judgment in excess of the legitimate demands of the public service. But this fact, while greatly to be deplored, is not, in my opinion, properly chargeable to the action of either of the great political parties of the country. It is the result of conditions accruing out of the rules of the House and out of the rules, practices and so-called courtesies of the Senate, together with the irresponsible manner whereby the executive submits to Congress estimates to meet expenditures for the conduct of the Government. If the appropriations made by Congress have been extravagant and beyond the revenues of the Government, how much more so have been the estimates of the executive. The record shows that in no instance during the many years past have the appropriations made by Congress measured up to the full amounts recommended and asked for by the administration. It is said that ours is the only Government in the civilized world wherein the administrative branch apparently shows no degree of responsibility to the taxpayers for its demands for the expenditure of public money, and that ours is the only Government wherein the legislative branch alone exercises the function of duty or check upon public expenditures, without any considerable degree of cooperation on the part of the executive."

Mr. Sayers, in his statement, makes the total appropriations of this Congress $54,197,812 in excess of the Fifty-third Congress, $16,332,470 over the Fifty-second Congress and $7,757,906 in excess of the Fifty-first Congress.

DISTINGUISHED CHILIAN VISITOR

Admiral Montt Is Here Looking Into American Naval Methods.

Admiral Jorge Montt, ex-president of Chili, who is here to look into American naval and military methods, is a quiet man, but an interesting character in many ways. He is not only an able sailor and commander, but he is a politician well fitted to cope with stormy South American affairs. The admiral is just 50 years old. When the Chilian congress decided, in the latter part of 1890, to resist President Balmaceda, Montt was a captain in the navy. On Jan. 6 of the following year the inevitable revolution came along, and Captain Montt was given provisional command of the naval and land forces. Balmaceda killed himself, and Montt was proclaimed provisional president, and in November of 1891 he was regularly elected president. His term of office only recently expired, and he returned to the navy as an admiral. He will make a thorough inspection of Uncle Sam's fighting boats and learn something of the army, after which he will go abroad and pick up all the information on these subjects the foreign powers will let him have.

ADMIRAL JORGE MONTT.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

THE WEEK'S DOINGS IN SENATE AND HOUSE.

A Comprehensive Digest of the Proceedings in the Legislative Chambers at Washington—Matters that Concern the People.

Lawmakers at Labor.

Both Senate and House adjourned without day Thursday. In the Senate agreement was unanimous to resolutions expressing the appreciation of the Senate for the able and impartial discharge of the duties of presiding officer by Mr. Stevenson, and by Mr. Frye, president pro tem. Mr. Hoar announced that the committee of Congress had waited on the President and that he had asked them to convey his congratulations on the close of their labors. There was anxious awaiting for the announcement that the President had signed the remaining appropriation bills. But it did not come. Gradually the identity of the Senate was merged into the more striking features of the inauguration ceremony, and the session came to a close without further legislative business. The general deficiency bill failed in conference, and the agriculture, sundry civil and Indian appropriation bills failed of executive approval. The House was still in the legislative day of Tuesday when it adjourned without day. The closing hours were uneventful. The statement had worked hard all night to get the sundry civil, Indian and agricultural bills to the president, only to have them "pocket vetoed," while the general deficiency bill failed of passage because the House refused to subscribe to the $500,000 of Bowman claims which the Senate insisted upon. Mr. McMillin of Tennessee, with a few appropriate remarks, offered a resolution of thanks to the Speaker for his impartiality as a presiding officer, which was unanimously adopted by a rising vote. As Speaker Reed mounted the rostrum the members rose and cheered valiantly. He acknowledged the warm reception and then delivered his parting address. With a whack of the gavel at 11:56 he then declared the House adjourned without day and the members hurried over to the Senate to participate in the ceremonies there.

The Senate went into executive session promptly upon the receipt of the Cabinet nominations, and as soon as the announcement was made of the appointment of Senator Sherman, whose name headed the list, he was confirmed. It is the practice to refer all nominations to committee, but it was the desire of Mr. Sherman's friends to signalize their regard for him by immediate action. There was more form than reality in the reference of the other nominations to committee. Not one of the committees held a formal meeting, they being polled on the floor of the Senate in every instance. No objection was made in committee to confirmation. While the Senate was in legislative session the credentials of Mr. Hanna as Senator from Ohio, to succeed Mr. Sherman, were presented by Mr. Foraker and he was sworn in by Vice-President Hobart. Mr. Davis was also designated acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations to succeed Mr. Sherman. Beyond the usual notification to the President, nothing further was done.

Most of the new Senators were on the floor when Vice President Hobart called the Senate to order at noon Monday. The other Senators were not so prompt in making their appearance. The galleries, save that reserved for the diplomatic corps, were thronged with curious visitors. As soon as the blind chaplain had delivered his invocation, Mr. Pruden, the President's executive clerk, appeared with the nomination of Oscar A. Janes, of Michigan, as pension agent at Detroit, which was afterward confirmed. The last communication of ex-Secretary Lamont, transmitting certain papers called for by a resolution of inquiry, was laid before the Senate. The Vice President submitted some resolutions of the New York Chamber of Commerce praying for the early ratification and passage of the arbitration treaty. At 12:12 p. m., on motion of Mr. Burrows (Rep.) of Michigan, the Senate went into executive session. The remainder of the session was devoted to executive business and at 1:05 p. m. the Senate adjourned until Wednesday.

There was an unusually large attendance of Senators when Vice President Hobart called the Senate to order at noon Wednesday. The first business was the reading of a letter from Gov. Bradley, of Kentucky, announcing the appointment of Andrew T. Wood as Senator to succeed Mr. Blackburn. Mr. Hoar moved that the Senator-elect be sworn in. Mr. Gorman moved that the credentials of Mr. Wood be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Mr. Hoar did not object, and the credentials were referred. Then Mr. Hoar presented written notice of two proposed amendments to the rules of the Senate of a radical nature. The most important was, according to Mr. Hoar's written notice, "to enable the Senate to act on legislation when it desires after reasonable debate." It provided that when any bill or resolution had been under consideration more than one day any Senator could demand that the debate be closed. If a majority of the Senators so decided there should be a vote without further delay and no action should be in order pending the vote but one to adjourn or to take a recess. The other amendment proposed was to prevent the interruption of the members of the Senate and provided that when a Senator made the point of "no quorum" there should be a roll call, and if the presence of a quorum was disclosed business should be proceeded with. On motion of Mr. Aldrich (Rep.), of Rhode Island, the Senate went into executive session at 12:15. At 12:40 p. m. the special session adjourned sine die.

THE INDIANA SOLONS

There was a whirl of excitement in the House Friday evening when the Speaker intimated that there had been an attempt to bribe one of the clerks, and appointed a committee of investigation, headed by Representative Smith of Tippecanoe. It is practically settled that there was an attempt to tamper with the bill recently passed creating the Lake County Superior Court, the object being to give it concurrent jurisdiction with the Lake Circuit Court. This was the original purpose of the bill, but amendments, both in House and Senate, gave the court limited jurisdiction. Suspicion points to a former member of the House from a northern county as the principal in the attempted bribery. Several of the prominent city ministers appeared on the floor of the Senate to urge the passage of the anti-quart shop bill. The bill was passed and transmitted to the Governor for his approval. The bill requires the venders of liquors by the quart to secure the same license required of saloonkeepers and, in fact, places them under all the restrictions provided against the traffic. Wholesalers, when selling in packages of five gallons, alone are exempt.

Gov. Mount receded from his determination not to accept bills for consideration passed after 12 m. Saturday night, and Monday the general appropriation bill was passed by the Senate and House and transferred to him. The Governor approved the 3-cent fare bill, limited to Indianapolis, and vetoed the county treasurer settlement bill and a bill intended to pave the way for contesting wills by heirs unable to pay costs. Examination showed that the cigarette bill had been tampered with, and the Governor recalled his approval, after which the bill was properly enrolled in both houses. The bill to protect township trustees from school supply sharks also passed, the Governor intimating that it would be acceptable. The Indiana Legislature adjourned at 8 o'clock, after having been in session sixty-one days. Both houses were controlled by the Republicans. Some important measures were enacted into laws, among them being the following: A bill providing for a 3-cent street car fare in Indianapolis; a general medical law patterned after the Ohio law; a law to encourage the establishment of domestic insurance companies; a law abolishing the expense fund and withdrawal charges of building and loan associations; the repeal of the special verdict law; a law authorizing the Attorney General to sue the Vandalia Railway on an old State claim for $1,000,000; a law abolishing quart shops; a law providing for compulsory education; the placing of all the benevolent institutions in the hands of Republicans, and a law providing for the conversion of the Southern Indiana penitentiary into a reformatory on the Elmira plan.

Not "Mountains High."

There are few things of which more exaggerated stories are told by people who honestly mean to speak only the truth than about the height of ocean waves.

The excitement attending a storm at sea is so great that even the coolest observer is apt to lose his power of accurate judgment, and the waves amid which his ship is tossing and plunging impress his imagination as if they were really "mountains high."

As a matter of fact, it is very rare for waves, even in a furious storm, to exceed thirty feet in height. In exceptional tempests they may reach sixty feet.

Doctor Schott, a German savant, finds that in the trade winds the waves average only five or six feet in height.

The harder the wind blows, the faster the waves run and the steeper they become; yet they are never as steep as they seem to be.

In an ordinary wind the slope of a wave is about one foot in thirty-three; in a storm it becomes one foot in seventeen or eighteen.

The expression of great steepness that the waves give to one in a small boat is due to the swiftness of their passage. Only a few seconds elapse while the boat is being lifted from the trough to the crest of a wave several hundred feet in length.

An Odd Custom.

There is a strange custom attendant upon local elections, which has existed in Brown township, Delaware County, Ohio, for the last thirty years. It is that of eating forty dozen hard-boiled eggs on election night at the expense of the successful candidates. Neither the bill of fare nor the number of eggs is ever varied. Each year a committee is selected to secure the eggs and prepare the feast. When the count is finished the eggs are passed around and the banquet begins. The persons who are elected foot the bill. Party feeling never interferes with this part of the election proceedings, and it is an unwritten law that the feast is to be furnished. But one man ever dared to brave popular sentiment and refuse to pay his share of the expense. He had been elected by a good plurality, but was turned down at the next election for no other reason than his want of respect for the custom. The election for the township is held at the little village of Eden, where the greater part of the township is gathered on the night of the feast. No one knows how the ceremony originated.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Burst of Activity.

The Turk, as a rule, is not energetic, but he is capable of sudden bursts of activity. A writer in Cassell's Family Magazine gives an illustration:

He was going home late one night in Constantinople, when a man ran by him pursued by four zaptiehs. Directly they caught the man, they belabored him vigorously with the butt-ends of their guns. The Englishman interfered:

"If he is a thief, why not take him to prison and let him be tried properly? Don't half kill the man without a trial."

"O effendi," said the spokesman of the party, "we don't mind his being a thief. We're only hitting him because of the trouble he gave us to run after him!" And that is an offense which the average Turk never forgives.

Women of the Austrian Court.

The Austrian court is singularly free from feminine intrigue. It is remarkable, too, as the women are more attractive, elegant and brilliant than the ladies of Berlin. The moral tone of the reigning house has not so high a standard as that of Potsdam, yet feminine interference in politics is entirely unknown, and outside of the stories connected with Crown Prince Rudolph's death, there has been no scandal of the kind calculated to impair the prestige of the Viennese court. This is due almost entirely to the example of the Empress Elizabeth, who never meddles in affairs of state.

GETTING TO BE A MAN.

I'm glad my hair ain't yallow,
And all curled up and long;
I'm glad my cheeks ain't dimpled,
And that I'm gittin' strong!
I wisht my voice was hoarser,
To talk like Uncle Dan,
Because I want to hurry
And git to be a man!

I'm glad the women never Come up to me and say:
"Oh, what a purty little boy!"
In that soft kind of way!
I wear big shoes, and always
Make all the noise I can,
Because I want to hurry
And git to be a man!

Onct I tried to chew tobacker,
But couldn't do it quite,
It made me awful dizzy—
They said I was a sight.
But some time, when I'm older
I bet you that I can—
I won't give up that easy,
'Cause I want to be a man!

I've got on pa's suspenders—
Wisht I had whiskers, too,
And that my feet was bigger
And schoolin' was all through!
Wisht Edison or someone
Would come out with a plan
To help a boy to hurry
And git to be a man!

DRAWN TO HIS DOOM.

There was unusual excitement at Fort Clark. Cattlemen, cowboys, horse ranchers, teamsters, soldiers, all moved around in in uneasy, excited way, and threats of violence against some unknown person came fast and furious.

Fort Clark is a frontier post in Southwestern Texas. It was not of so much importance as a town in '69 as it is now; but, civilization not having crept so close over iron rails, it was of more importance as a frontier post. Word had come in that Willie Pray, a sheepherder on Turkey Creek, had been found in his cabin with a gaping knife wound in his breast, and a Mexican woman, whom he had recently engaged to go out to take charge of the domestic arrangements at his ranch, was also discovered with her throat cut.

Whatever was the cause of the double murder was only a matter of surmise, but surmise is generally enough for Judge Lynch. He doesn't waste much time upon quibbles. The matter was argued out in this way:

"Anybody seen any Indians about?" came from a young soldier who stood in a group near Bill Chunk's store.

"'Tain't no Injuns," came from a long-haired hunter, who was seated on a stump mending the cinch of his saddle with buckskin thongs.

"Why, Uncle Bill?" came from several voices.

"Injuns don't knife unless it's for hair. 'Sides that, ef they'd bin around, I reckon that thar jacal ud bin a blazin'. How did this yer news come anyhow?"

No one seemed to know. The report just appeared to spring up without there being any responsible author for it. It started as a rumor, and the story gradually developed until the whole post knew of it and was consequently excited.

"Here comes Jake Breen," said one of the group, "he seems to know as much about it as anybody."

When Jake came up he said he did not know any more than the rest. Someone had brought in the report and he had just heard folks talking about it. He agreed with Uncle Bill that it was not Indians, and, with many oaths, he explained his theory.

"You see, Pray took a greaser woman out there to look after his ranch. Most Mexican women have lovers of their own color. Everybody knows Mexicans are jealous and revengeful. They mostly use a knife, while a white man uses a shooting iron. The report says that both were killed with a knife, which shows that it was done by a Mexican who was jealous of Pray, and the only Mexican we know of about the place is the herder he had looking after his sheep. It looks as if he was the guilty party."

"That's so," said several, "the Mexican must have done it."

"Then what's the use waiting around here? The greaser ain't going to come here and ask us to hang him. He may be around the ranch yet, if he ain't skipped to Mexico. We've got to hang a greaser mighty quick, if we wants to do justice in this matter," said Jake, and the most of those there assembled appeared to agree with him.

Jake was a desperado of the first water, and was necessarily an authority in these matters.

"Whar's the coyote ez brought the news?" said Uncle Bill.

Again there was no answer.

"I reckon we'd better go and see ef they're dead, afore we hang anybody. We'd best go to the ranch and take a look at the late lamented afore we undertake to do anything else. We can take a judge along for convenience, in case we need him. I'm going to the ranch," and Uncle Bill picked up a saddle that lay on the ground near him and started for a pony staked out on the prairie a hundred yards off.

This move of Uncle Bill's appeared to meet with favor in the crowd, and by the time he was on his pony and started toward Turkey Creek he had a party of twenty-five at his back, among whom was Jake Breen.

It was not a long ride to Pray's ranch, and the ponies went on a trot. The way led principally over a rolling prairie, with an occasional motte of live oak or a chapparal thicket to relieve the monotony.

When they had come within a mile of the ranch some one in the cavalcade called out that there was a herd of sheep off to the northward. The company halted and looked in the direction, and, sure enough, on the other side of a slight depression in the prairie was a herd of sheep quietly grazing, but evidently making their way slowly in the direction of Pray's ranch, as a man was apparently urging them on, while a dog was keeping them from straggling.

"That's Pray's greaser now," said Breen. "I know him by his having that dog with him. We'd better get him while we have a chance," and he turned his pony's head in that direction.

"Say, Squire," said Uncle Bill, turning to a bright, intelligent-looking young man riding near him, who got his title by being a lawyer, "'pears like you'd best go along an' see that the Mex don't escape from the hands o' justice," and a sly twinkle came into his eye, as he added: "Seems like a mighty desprit feller, the way he drives them sheep, an' Jake an' the other fellers maybe couldn't handle right alone. I'll take keer o' this cavyard."

So the young lawyer and five others followed Jake Breen in a dash over the prairie to capture the Mexican, while the rest of the cavalcade rode on to the ranch.

Pray's jacal, or hut, was a rude affair, constructed as many of them are in that country, by planting live oak pickets, ten feet long, in an upright position, side by sile, to form the walls, and making a roof of prairie grass thatch. The cracks were stopped with mud, and there was no opening except the door, which furnished all the light and ventilation needed, besides that which came in through the numerous crevices in the rude structure. It was situated in a grove of trees on the banks of the creek.

When the party rode up they found the door of the cabin closed, and not a sign or sound of life anywhere around.

"Hello, house!" called Uncle Bill, "Thar don't seem to be nobody here," he added, and then dismounting he walked up to the door and gave it a push. It opened inwardly, scraping on the dirt floor as it did so, for it hung loose on its strap hinges.

"Well, I'll be derned!" exclaimed the old man as his eyes became accustomed to the dim light in the cabin; "ef it hain't so, fer a fact!"

And then the others crowded up to look in, and see what Uncle Bill had seen; the body of the woman on the floor, near the rear of the room, with her throat cut, and the body of Willie Pray near the door, lying in a pool of blood, which had evidently flowed from a wound in his side.

"Don't crowd that thar door, men, I want ter see," said the old man, as he caught hold of Pray's hand. "That gal's gone, but this here boy seems ter be kinder warm yit. Give a hand, a couple o' yo'uns, an' let's see w'at a leetle fresh air'll do."

They took him up gently and bore him to a grassy place in the shade of some trees. Here they laid him tenderly down upon a bed of blankets, and after moistening the lips with liquor, they began examining the wound.

They had just reached this stage of the proceedings when there was a diversion. It came from the party who had gone off to capture the Mexican. They rode along the unfortunate greaser being tied to a lariat attached to the saddle-bow of one of the men. He was running along uttering protestations, his face actually pale with terror.

"No sabe, senors; no entender, Senor Caballeros."

"Here he is!" called Jake Breen, as the company came to a halt. "We've got the scoundrel."

And then they all crowded up to where the wounded and apparently dead man lay upon the blankets. As the last party came up they approached the feet of the wounded man. The Sheriff led the Mexican up, the others making room for them.

"Stand back, men, an' let us have air. This yer corpse seems to be revivin' some;" and Uncle Bill put his arm under Pray's shoulders to raise them up.

And just then a strange thing happened. The wounded man opened his eyes and stared round in a dazed sort of way. Then fixing his gaze straight before him and raising himself up with his arm outstretched, pointing his finger toward the trembling Mexican, he said in an almost indistinct, hesitating whisper:

"You—you—killed—her," and then he seemed to gasp for breath, but he made another effort and added: "Jake Breen," and then would have dropped from exhaustion if the strong arm of Uncle Bill had not been at hand to ease him gently down.

When the name was mentioned it astonished the men as much as if they had heard thunder from a clear sky. The ones on the outer edge of the circle had not heard the name at all, but had seen the action, and supposed that Pray was pointing to the Mexican and not to the burly figure of Breen, which loomed up behind that unhappy individual. They, therefore, naturally crowded up closer, and their scowling faces boded no good for the descendant of the Aztecs.

Those who were close enough to hear the whisper were so astonished for a moment that they could not grasp the situation. There were two men who did, however, understand what it meant, and when the one, Uncle Bill, looked up to speak the other, Jake Breen, had allowed himself to be crowded out of the circle and was already on his horse.

"He says it was Jake Breen; stop the coyote," called Uncle Bill, and those near to him sprang to their feet for some of them had been down on one knee, some on both, so as to watch the wounded man. Those who understood finally got out of the crowd and by their repeating, "He says it's Jake Breen," got the others to understand.

But those few moments of delay were enough. When Breen saw the finger pointed toward him he knew too well what it meant. He had supposed Pray was dead, and now when he faced the supposed corpse the eyes were open and the lips moved to speak. He had had too much experience in Judge Lynch's court to await further developments. He permitted the other anxious spectators to crowd him out, and he quietly and quickly got into the saddle of the lawyer's horse, which was not only the nearest to him, but the best one in the lot. It was near the corner of the hut that he mounted, and when the others realized the situation he was already started on his way to the southward.

It took only a few moments to have a dozen riders following on the trail, headed by the lawyer on Jake Breen's horse.

"Say, you 'uns!" called Uncle Bill, to those who had not yet started, "'tain't no use fer us to jine in thet thar chase. One had better ride down to Uvalde an' tell the folks, an' one had better go to Clark for a doctor from the post an' an ambulance. The rest can stay here till mornin' an' hear from the other fellers. Thet sun ain't half a hour high, an' w'en she drops yer know hit ends the chase unless they're mighty clost on ter him, ez thar ain't no moon."

What the old man meant was that there could be no chase after sunset. There is no twilight in Texas, and when the sun sets one passes directly from daylight to dark. One might make his way by starlight, but he couldn't follow a trail in the shadows.

The sun rose next morning in a clear sky and soon afterward the pursuing party were up to the ranch.

"Did you get yer hoss, squire?" inquired Uncle Bill.

"Yes."

"Whar'd you find him?"

"Down by Elm Water hole."

"Did you find Jake?"

"Yes."

"Did you bring him along?"

"No; we just left him ther among the trees."

"Well, then, ez everything has passed off so pleasant like, and the doctors thinks the boy kin be moved, I reckon we mought jest ez well go back to Clark."—New York Mercury.

PUBLIC PLAYGROUNDS.

They Are Needed in Country as Well as in City.

Among the many plans which have been suggested in England for commemorating worthily the sixtieth anniversary of the coronation of Queen Victoria in June next, none seems to find more favor than the proposition for a concerted movement for setting aside plots of ground or places of historic interest to be dedicated to the common use and enjoyment of the people.

It is pointed out that this is a plan which will give the people of each town and county a personal interest in the celebration, while it will give them also the feeling that they are sharing in a great national movement. Should this plan be adopted, hundreds of "Queen Victoria" gardens, parks, playgrounds and fields, dotted over the kingdom, may express the popular appreciation of Queen Victoria's beneficent reign, and at the same time confer a great and lasting benefit upon the people.

They have been slower in England than we in this country to recognize the advantages of public playgrounds. The establishment of parks and gardens and recreation-places for the public use is no new thing with us. The movement in that direction is increasing, and many of our chief cities vie with each other in the extent and beauty of their park systems.

There are one or two errors which should be guarded against, however. For one thing, places set apart for the public use should not be too good to play in. Neat paths, closely trimmed sods and signs of "Keep of the grass" do not meet the need. These are all well, but somewhere in the park there should be grass which one can stretch out upon, and ground that the boys can trample over.

Another mistake is that communities do not begin soon enough to set aside land for commons and public grounds. They wait until the pressure of population makes breathing-spaces absolutely essential to the general health. By that time land commands a large price, and the difficulty of securing enough for it within easy reach of the people is considerable.

Playgrounds, too, are needed in the country as well as in cities. It is often assumed in the country that boys and girls have all outdoors in which to play, and that special provision for them is not necessary; but it often happens in rural communities that there is no place in which children may romp freely. They either play in the roads or trespass in private fields and pastures. Rural communities which move in season to secure open grounds for the public use not only provide for the children to-day, but save large expenditure later, when population presses upon them, and land comes to be reckoned at so much the square foot.—Youth's Companion.

English-American Humor.

Many of the "funny men" of the American press complain with apparently good reason of the wholesale appropriation of their jokes by some of the London papers. They assert that it is the custom of these papers, two of them in particular, to clip the best of American witticisms systematically, "Anglicize" them, file them away, keep them until they have grown old, and then publish them as original.

The especially irritating feature of this system is that such jokes often go through the American papers a second time, credited to the English paper that purloined them. Not unfrequently, by the grace of the exchange editor, one reappears in the paper in whose columns it was printed originally. This gives point to a dialogue said to have taken place in the office of an American newspaper recently.

Exchange Editor—Read this. It is from the London Tom-Tits, and it's good.

Funny Man—Yes, it's much better than when I wrote it, four years ago. They have improved it by changing "dollars" to "pounds." Oh, yes, it's good now!

Nelson's Last Entry in His Diary.

Capt. Alfred T. Mahan writes an article for the Century on "Nelson at Trafalgar." The Admiral in person, accompanied by the train of frigate captains, inspected the Victory and her preparations throughout all decks, ample time for the tour being permitted by the slowness of the advance. At 11 a. m. he was in his cabin, when the signal lieutenant, entering to prefer a request of a personal nature, found him upon his knees writing; and it is believed that the following words, with which his private diary closes, were then penned: "May the great God whom I worship grant to my country, and for the benefit of Europe in general, a great and glorious victory; and may no misconduct in any one tarnish it; and may humanity after victory be the predominant feature in the British fleet. For myself individually, I commit my life to Him who made me; and may His blessing light upon my endeavors for serving my country faithfully. To Him I resign myself and the just cause which is intrusted to me to defend. Amen, amen, amen."

That Noise.

"What was that noise I heard before Mr. Stedly went?"

"I don't know, mamma, unless it was the question."

"What do you mean? What has a question to do with noise?"

HELP TO HUMANITY.

THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF THE FORWARD MOVEMENT.

Organization that Is Doing Much to Improve the Condition of the Poor in the Congested and Poverty-Ridden Districts of Chicago.

Seeks to Banish Squalor.

Chicago correspondence:

The Forward Movement recently celebrated its third anniversary at the headquarters of the association on West Harrison street, this city. Addresses were made and exhibitions given by pupils of the different classes. The Forward Movement is one of the most comprehensive and philosophic social movements now being carried on in this great and wicked Western metropolis. The association's object, as stated in its charter, is to investigate and improve the physical, social, intellectual and spiritual condition of those who live in the congested districts of Chicago and other cities.

HALL AT CONGRESS AND HALSTED STREETS.
During the past winter the Association has here given beds to 50,000 homeless.

The charter further states the means and methods to be used in carrying out this object to be: By collecting and publishing statistics bearing on social and industrial conditions; by establishing radiating centers of personal influence; by promoting the application of the co-operative principle, and by such temporary aid as shall tend to make the beneficiaries self-sustaining and self-respecting.

DR. G. W. GRAY.

This association is non-sectarian and non-partisan, depending upon those who are interested in the welfare of humanity for its workers and support. It has already accomplished much that is commendable. It has under its charge a Social Settlement known as the Epworth House, located on Pearce street. The Epworth House represents six or eight workers who devote their entire time to the social, intellectual and spiritual uplifting of the people living on the West Side. The fundamental idea of the work is that of neighborly visitation. Of this Miss M. E. Dix has charge. She devotes her entire time to visiting among the people, ascertaining if any are sick or need comfort or consolation in any way whatever. She has under her supervision several non-resident visitors. A corps of physicians hold themselves ready to attend upon any of the poor who are sick and unable to pay a family physician.

These workers live in the midst of the people to be benefited, come in contact with them day by day, know their needs and minister to them. They do much more than simply dispense charity; in fact, they avoid charity-giving as much as possible, preferring to furnish opportunities for the people to earn what they need. The Epworth House has become the recognized friend of the poor in its section of the city.

The little children from 3 to 6 years of age are gathered into a kindergarten which meets at the Forward Movement Hall, on Harrison street. In order that these children can attend, most of them have to be furnished with clothing, as the parents are not able to provide for them. This work is under Miss Krause, as principal.

KINDERGARTEN IN SESSION.

In Forward Movement Hall are held classes, clubs and meetings of various kinds. On Mondays and Thursdays classes in scientific cooking for young ladies are taught, where these girls can become approved cooks of the highest order. On the first Friday night of each month there is held a general reception for the neighborhood. The second Friday of each month is devoted to a temperance meeting, the third to a stereopticon exhibition, and the fourth to entertainments given by some of the clubs of girls or boys. On Wednesday nights of each week there is a citizens' meeting, at which matters pertaining to the welfare of the community are discussed. On Friday night there is a religious meeting, and on Saturday night a club of boys receive a cadet drill which is very popular. Sunday afternoon is held a Sunday school, and at night Dr. Gray, the founder and present superintendent of the movement, preaches. While these exercises are going on at the hall there are also various clubs, lectures, etc., at the Epworth House.

The district in which the Forward Movement has located itself is unique in its representative character. Perhaps there can be found nowhere else in the United States a more interesting field of study than that section of the city. Here representatives from almost all nations of the earth are to be found. In some parts the language is that of Sweden and Norway, in others Italy, in others Russia, and in many places the English language is almost unknown. One of the great needs of these people is an opportunity for the cultivation of social life, and this, among its other features, is offered by the Forward Movement.

EPWORTH HOUSE.

Capturing a Hawk.

When the Zoo opened for business yesterday morning, Headkeeper Manley stepped from his office and took a survey of the grounds. Almost the first thing that caught his eye was a big bird perched on top of the lion house, and by bringing a field glass to bear upon it, he discovered that it was not an escaped pet, but a wild, red-tailed hawk, and a magnificent specimen. His hunter's instincts were aroused, and he laid a plan to capture it. Getting a steel trap the keeper fastened it on the end of a pole, which he set up on the lawn, in plain view of his intended victim. Then he brought out a live pigeon, tied it to a stake near by, and retired to a distance. Scarcely had Manley gone into concealment before the hawk riveted its attention on the bait. Leaving its high perch, it swooped around and alighted on the convenient pole, preparatory to a final dart at its prey. The instant its feet settled on the trap the jaws closed with a snap, holding it a fast prisoner. Manley ran up, and, releasing the hawk, found it a greater prize than he had imagined. It was one of the largest of its kind, measuring five feet four inches from tip to tip of wings, and a decided acquisition for the Zoo's collection. Many animals and birds have been sent to the Zoo and others have been purchased, but this hawk is believed to be the only wild creature of any account that ever entered of its own accord.—Philadelphia Record.

Too Much Sugar.

It is possible to have too much of a good thing, as a major in the English army found during the Peninsular war. A number of English officers had established a mess in a Spanish village, with native cooks, whose efforts were, on the whole, fairly satisfactory to the keen appetites of the campaigners. They were joined, however, by a cantankerous major, who could by no means reconcile himself to the universal sweetness, caused by the Spanish custom of adding sugar to every dish. He grew desperate after a time, and determined to limit himself to a diet of eggs, cooked in the shell, secure in the certainty that even Spanish hens could not flavor their eggs with sugar.

"Those wretched cooks can do me no harm here," he said, triumphantly.

His triumph was short-lived. The next morning some mischievous subs were at the mess-table before the major, and emptied all the salt-cellars, replacing their contents with powdered sugar. The major soon appeared, and with gloomy complacency attacked an egg, with which, according to his custom, he took a plentiful supply of salt. At the first mouthful his face turned purple with rage.

"Sugar again!" he cried, and rushed off to his tent. Even the hens could not be trusted in this sugar-loving country.

CARDINAL LEDOCHOWSKI.

Said to Have Been Deposed from the Prefecture of the Propaganda.

Cardinal Miecislas Ledochowski, who is reported to have been deposed from the prefecture of the propaganda by the Pope, earned the displeasure of the Vatican by leaning too much toward Germany and too little toward France. His eminence is one of the most prominent of the princes of the church at Rome. He is 75 years old and is a native of Poland, where his family has been an illustrious one for centuries. The Cardinal was given his theological education in a college of the Lagarists at Warsaw and was ordained at the very early age of 18. After that he went to Rome to pursue his studies further and was taken up and advanced by Pius IX., who was very fond of him. Ledochowski was named domestic prelate and protonotary apostolic. Pius confided several important diplomatic missions to the learned Pole. Among them was a mission to Madrid, another to Lisbon, a third to Rio de Janeiro and a fourth to Santiago de Chili. In 1861 he was made archbishop of Thebes, in partibus infidelium, and sent to the nunciature at Brussels, where he remained for four years. In 1866 he became archbishop of Gnesen and Posen, and as the occupant of that see he has the title of the primate of all Poland. In 1874 he was put into prison by the Government of Prussia, and while in the dungeons of Ostrowo he was made a cardinal by the Pope. After his release from prison he went to Rome, an exile from his diocese. He was warmly welcomed by Pius and lived at the Vatican. In 1884 he was appointed secretary of memorials, and in 1892 he was given the lofty position from which he has just been deposed. Although a very aged man, Cardinal Ledochowski is clear of brain and strong of purpose, and his management of the office he leaves to Satolli was marked by great ability.

CARDINAL LEDOCHOWSKI.

A Genius for Friendship.

A genius for friendship, for entering into relations with another, is the rarest of gifts. For the most part we go each our own way and make a virtue of it. The keenly critical nature is seldom the sympathetic or the helpful.

It brings to bear the disintegrating, the analytical, rather than the constructive and synthetic, forces, and is far more apt to commend the unfortunate to the all of Heaven and it is to endeavor to make itself an agency in heavenly work.

A man has involved himself in some unfortunate and exacting circumstances, he has somehow dropped the clue of success, and is groping blindly in the labyrinth; and we remark on his folly, and wonder how he could have done so, and, with a comforting reflection that it is no affair of ours, we leave him to grope his way blindly as best he may.

It is no affair of ours. But is it not? Does not the man or woman who fails to speak the needed word at the right moment, to give the inspiration of sympathy or of counsel, become morally accountable for the failure?

Adding Insult to Injury.

NELSON AT COPENHAGEN.

His Refusal to See the Signal of Recall from Admiral Parker.

Captain Alfred T. Mahan, the great naval tactician, has an article on "Nelson in the Battle of Copenhagen" in the Century. As to the demeanor of Lord Nelson, Captain Mahan, quoting from Colonel Stewart, gives the following description: "When the signal from the London, No. 39, was made the signal lieutenant reported it to him. He continued his walk, and did not appear to take notice of it. The lieutenant, meeting his lordship at the next turn, asked whether he should repeat it (by which, if done, the squadron engaged would retire to the northward). Lord Nelson answered, 'No; acknowledge it.' On the officer returning to the poop, his lordship called after him, 'Is No. 16" (for close action) "still hoisted?' The lieutenant answering in the affirmative, Lord Nelson said, 'Mind you keep it so.' He now walked the deck considerably agitated, which was always known by his moving the stump of his right arm. After a turn or two he said to me in a quick manner, 'Do you know what's shown on board the commander-in-chief—No. 39?' On asking what that meant, he answered, 'Why, to leave off action. Leave off action,' he repeated; and then added with a shrug, 'Now, damn me if I do!' He also observed, I believe, to Captain Foley, 'You know, Foley, I have only one eye—I have a right to be blind sometimes'; and then, with an archness peculiar to his character, putting the glass to his blind eye, he exclaimed, 'I really do not see the signal.'"

Professor Laughton, whose authority on matters relating to Nelson is second to that of no one living, has lately told us in his "Life of Nelson" that this little display was but a joke, Nelson having received a message from Parker that he was to use his own discretion as to obeying the signal. If so, it is not improbable that he had in view the effect of his manner upon the many bystanders who must have witnessed the scene in the midst of a yet doubtful and desperate battle. It is the converse of the outward bearing which he reprehended in the lieutenant. The moral effect of such self-possession is indescribable. The Monarch's midshipman already quoted speaks thus of a wounded and disabled officer on board her: "When the carnage was greatest he encouraged his men by applauding their conduct and frequently began a huzza, which is of more importance than might generally be imagined; for the men have no other communication throughout the ship, but when a shout is set up it runs from deck to deck, and they know that their comrades are, some of them, alive and in good spirits."

As Parker's messenger, Captain Otway, did not reach Nelson until after the signal was hoisted, it is possible the scene witnessed by Stewart occurred before Nelson knew Parker's purpose. Parker's private secretary, who afterward served in the same capacity with Nelson for two years, has also affirmed that there was a previous understanding between the two admirals. The matter is of less consequence than appears, for the supreme merit of Lord Nelson was not the disregarding of the signal, but the sound judgment and tenacity with which he refused to incur the risk of giving ground at that moment. This was wholly his.

Almost War.

"In the Desert with the Bedouin" is a paper written and illustrated by the English artist, R. Talbot Kelly, that will appear in the Century. Mr. Kelly thus describes one of the diversions of the desert: By far the most exciting of their equestrian sports, however, is their jereed, or short javelin, "play." I put play in quotation marks to express the sarcasm of it, for I never saw anything more nearly approaching war in my life. Two friendly tribes meet in a suitable bit of desert, several hundred mounted men representing each tribe, and are drawn up facing each other. Twirling his jereed, the champion of one side rides into the open and in a loud voice and with much eloquence recounts his deeds of valor, and with many sarcasms challenges one of the other side to fight.

On the appearance of an opposing champion in the arena, the first turns to flee, chased by the second, and endeavors to reach his own side before being caught by his pursuer. Should he succeed in escaping, both turn again, and the positions of fugitive and pursuer are reversed, but it always ends in a fierce fight for supremacy in the middle, in which one or the other is generally unseated, often with the accompaniment of a few broken ribs or a fractured arm or leg. Champions being eventually placed hors de combat, the remaining bodies charge at each other and engage, and in the excitement of the moment, when several hundred men and their horses are involved in the scrimmage, the death of several men and horses frequently results before the "sport" concludes with light refreshments and a possible funeral or two.

As I remarked before, this is the nearest approach to war possible, and is almost as exciting for the onlooker as for those engaged. No bad blood is engendered, however, whatever the casualties may be, this being an honorable exhibition of skill, where no malice is borne, and any fatality—"kismet!"

Sing Lee's Asylum.

Sing Lee was an enterprising young Chinaman who conducted a laundry in a small mining camp in Colorado some years ago. His never-failing good humor made him a universal favorite, and on more than one occasion the boys found that he had a ready tongue in his head.

A Presidential election occurred about this time, and one of the boys—an Irishman—remarked to Sing:

"Well, Sing, yez'll have to be goin' to China now. The Irish be goin' to run things here, and they won't have any hathen Chinese around."

Quick as a flash Sing retorted: "All light, me go Ireland. Irish no lun things there."

MOODY, SAWVEL AND BORST

All Assigned to Permanent Positions at the Prison North

Monday's Daily

Dr. Nusbam and H. R. Culbertson returned this morning from Michigan City, where they were yesterday a few hours guest, of Messrs. Moody, Sawvel and Borst, at the prison. It is needless to say that they were pleased to see them. They were all three called into Warden's office and allowed to visit an hour or so. They have been assigned to permanent positions now. D. D. Moody expected to commence work this morning as shipping clerk in the shoe factory. R. Sawvel will remain around the prison awaiting the coming of spring or warm weather, when he will go out on the farm to work, and F. Borst is clerk in the Hospital, his duties being that of putting up prescriptions and also the keeping of the books.

FINED $50, AND THREE MONTH IN JAIL

Was the Verdict the Jury Brought in at 2 o'clock this afternoon against Hathaway.

While Martz was being cross-examined, Mr. Roby was tracing him to different places in Garrett. He kept saying, "I think not" when asked as to drinks in this place or that. Mr. Roby got tired of it, when the witness said, "I know not." Again, he was asked if he had been drinking, and finally, if he was drunk, at a given time. He denied being drunk. Roby said, "You were drunk, weren't you," "How do you know I was drunk, retorted the witness. When Hathaway stabbed him, he said he struck back with a ten-cent buggy whip, and hit Hathaway somewhere. It also appeared that at the time of the stabbing, a Miss Lawhead, the lady over whom they had had trouble was in the buggy with him, Martz. Martz also admitted that he and Hathaway afterwards were over to Auburn together, and had also made a trip to Kendallville together. Miss Lawhead sworn. Was with Martz, the evening of the trouble and when he was stabbed. After being in church awhile, both went out, drove south, then east and met Hathaway with someone in buggy wity him. Hathaway made the remark, Martz had already testified to. When came back past church, Page came out, tried to grab horses, Martz struck horses with whip. Horses started. Hathaway struck Martz once, suppose he had knife. Martz struck back with buggy whip. (Welsheimer made the examination in chief, of this lady. She admitted that Martz, had solicited her company, though this admission was opposed by the other side.) She was asked if Hathaway ever at any time used foul language in her presence. She was not permitted to answer, but she said informally "He did just the same." It appears that at one time, Hathaway had taken her to Hamilton, when asked why she went with him, said she "just wanted to go." This was about two years ago, but she afterwards refused to go with him.

'Squire Gates called. The preliminary examination of this case had been before him, on the 16th of December, next day after the stabbing. He said Hathaway had plead guilty at that investigation. There was quite a squabble over this point also.

This, Wednesday morning, the defense began in the case against Page Hathaway. The state had finished its testimony the evening before. At 10:30 the defense had done, and then Judge Hartman charged the jury. The charge was quite full and was carefully stated for the case is important. If the accused should be found guilty of assault with intent to kill, the punishment is a serious matter. But if he is found guilty of assault and battery only, that is usually a small matter.

Just before two o'clock this afternoon the jury brought in their verdict. It was for assault and battery, and that Hathaway's punishment be a fine of $50 and a term of three months, in the county jail. He was at once taken over to begin his time. The neighbors say both are bad young fellows, and drink a good deal.

COURT

Court convened this morning, but not at an early hour, as there was delay in getting parties together. The trial jury began to gather in as their work was to begin also. Mr. Hartman is judge.

We note a few odd cases disposed of but overlooked in last week's report.

The one against Warren Fee for frequenting a gambling room cost him $20 besides extras.

There was a case against Phillip Waters for violating the liquor law, that cost him $10, besides the usua frills.

Another indictment for grand larceny was found against Ex-surveyor Hook Saturday and he was again arrested, and had to give $1500 bail, A W. Madden going on his bond. We understand the charges against him are for bills he collected against the county where no services had been rendered. We are told he denies the charges and will make a fight.

Mr. Ernest, the expert is to be here again to-day and go into some details he had not had his attention called to fully before. We presume something new had been unearthed by the commissioners in their examinations. We look for new developments.

Tuesday's Daily.

—Mr. Hartman takes to his judicial duties with grace and ease, and work is progressing finely.

The first case in the afternoon Monday, was the divorce case ofe Grtrude vs James McCullough. As there was no defense made, she soon had a judgment rendered in her favor.

The next was a tresspass case before the jury, brought against John C. Sherwood, for tresspass. It was claimed that Sherwood had come on a farm, against the the orders of those in possession of it. E. Sherwood rented the farm to Lorenzo Snyder, and later had deeded it to his brother John C. Sherwood, and had gone to their father's. The two brothers, returned in a day or two, and got a lot of things they claimed, but Mrs. Snyder ordered them away. They returned later, with their father, Wm. E. Sherwood. Mrs. Snyder refused to let them come on the place, and locked the gates. They broke the lock, came in on the premises and got what they wanted. This is the grounds for tresspass. After examining several witnesses, it was learned that the papers had not been properly drawn, and the suit stopped. New affidavits will be made out and the case resumed at some other day.

The jury began yesterday and as at the December term, there was a big lot of men on hand looking for a place on the jury. Only three places were to be filled. At this slow rate, it will take 333 years to pay all those political debts.

TUESDAY

The case against Page Hathaway, came on the first thing. This has been on the docket a term or two, and is on charge of assault with intent to kill. The jury had to be changed a good deal. Charlie Jenkins was sent off because he had been a member of the grand jury that brought the indictment against Hathaway. Other changes were made. Mr. Ben Crew, of this place was put on, but proved to be some hard of hearing Phil Myers was put in his place. Then W. A. Dannells was put off, though no reason was given, and Joe Prosser given his place, but was soon excused, and Wm. Walsworth taken, but did not seem to suit, when Bailiff Crew caught up Alex McClure. Mr. Hart was then excused, and at that moment Mr. Platter brought in Porter Depew. Phil Myers was knocked out and Joe Oberlin took his place, but he failed and Charlie Voss ordered up. Among other things he was asked what lawyers he employed. He created a laugh by saying he had avoided employing any for over 20 years. Sam. Flint was then put out and Dr. Adams took his place. Joe Stafford went off and Perry Fitch was pulled in. This ended it and the "twelve good men and true," stood up, and Deputy Blanche Shilling administered twelve joint swears to them in one sentence. Blanche can swear more gracefully than any man in Auburn. We give this fight over the jury in full, so it can be seen how a struggle over a jury is considered an important matter. The attorneys on each side think they can see an advantage or a disadvantage in having this or that man on the jury. The Prosecutor read the indictment that on last December 15, Page Hathaway stabbed with his right hand, Andrew Martz, intending to kill. Also that Page Hathaway had at that time, stabbed said Martz, with his left hand. This double charge was to "catch the coon comin' and goin'." They had trouble over a girl, and Page got mad, used bad language in her presence, Martz get her good will, and went with her. December 16, they were coming from church, Hathaway came out, and stabbed Martz while the latter was in his buggy, coming home. The first witness was Dr. Thomson of Garrett. He had dressed Martz' wounds. Is a graduate of the University of Michigan About Dec. 15 Martz called on him. Found a cut in the abdomen near the navel, about half an inch deep and an inch or two long. Was over a vital point, the intestines. There was a good deal of fighting over the question of letting the doctor say how much deeper the wound would have to be, in order to be fatal.

On cross examination, but few new facts were brought out. The Doctor admitted that intestines could be cut or torn, and yet life be saved. Prosecutor Davis said, this was no doubt true, but that Page Hathaway couldn't do it. Page couldn't save a man's life after cutting his bowels open. And Mr. Roby said. "Well Doctor, you saved this patient, didn't you?" The Doctor nodded assent. Both points called out large smiles.

Andrew Martz called. Knows Page Hathaway had been at church and was going south. Page came along in a buggy, and used vulgar language. Page grabbed the horses, I whipped him up, but Page, caught buggy with left hand and struck me with right hand right in abdomen. I got away and drove to Thomson's office in Garrett. My lines were long and were doubled on my lap and the knife cut them nearly off between my hand and body. Cut through vest, pants and shirt. (Here the jury, witness, Judge and attorneys went out into jury room to hear the things Hathaway had said that were too bad for the audience to hear.) They soon came in, with the remainder of their blushes, showing in their faces, and work went on. Adjourned till afternoon.

AFTERNOON.

Before the jury had assembled to begin again, the case against Sollenberger of Garrett, came up. He admitted stealing some brass fixtures, etc. belonging to the B. & O. road at that place He had sold it for old junk at Ft. Wayne. His father testified the young man would be 21 next May. In view of previous good character he was given a nominal punishment and sentence suspended during good behavior. He made a promise to reform, and on such promise was allowed to go free. He and young Cramer were both in the same stealing case, and it looks as if his case would decide Cramer's.

D. Hook was fined $20 for keeping a gambling room After some other informal work, the jury came in and the Hathaway case went on.

TRAGEDY AT FT. WAYNE.

Will Colerick, one of the brightest of Ft Wayne's young attorneys committed suicide last Thursday night. He had called on the young lady, Miss Mae Hall to whom he was engaged, and it is supposed they turned on the gas, and may possibly have also taken poison. They were not found till Saturday morning, when he was dead, but the lady showed signs of life and at last accounts is still alive, though not able to give any account of how it happened. It all may have been accidental, but that is altogether improbable. But no one can assign any cause for suicide as both were popular young people, and never had any trouble as far as now known. If the lady recovers she may give some explanation.

McKINLEY WOOL TARIFF.

We have often had fun whith republican editors about the deadly effects on sheep breeding, of any low tariff, and how a return to a McKinley wool tariff will set sheep to breeding, world without end. Now we know we were right. Yesterday Simon Rohm reported that on March 7, four of his ewes dropped a total of thirteen lambs, all within five hours Ten are now living. The ewes are merino and the sires are southdown. And a neighbor of his, Mr. Gray, reports four ewes that had twelve lambs, of which eleven are living. Who says that McKinley can't legislate into the fold as many lambs as you want. Send in your orders to Washington, D. C. and you will get your work done while you wait.

No Room for Doubt.

Proof, yes overwhelming proof can be furnished of the excellent curative qualities of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. "I caught a cold which led to a cough and pain in the chest. (pneumonia?) I bought Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, and after taking one bottle of it, the cough began to disappear; when I finished taking the second bottle I was cured. Gustav Thurmaster, 49 Hickory St., Cleveland, O." Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup costs but 25 cents. Take only Bull's.

FITZ WINS

In the Fourteenth Round He Does Corbett.

Time in the big Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight was called at 12:07, and the two bullies were, a few moments later, in the ring. There is about two hours difference in time between this place and Carson City, Nev. In the fifth round Corbett drew first blood. In the ninth round Fitzsimmons struck Corbett below the belt and was called down on it.

In the 14th round Fitzsimmons struck Corbett with right hand swing in neck and won fight.

UNFAIR CRITCISM.

The Silver Dawn probably has some personal feeling against commissioner Hague, but this is not a very good time to indulge in either personalities or politics. Matters are bad enough, without lugging in useless side issues. It attacks Mr. Hague as if he were the only member of the Board who could be blamed for not discovering these continuing forgeries long ago. What has become of the responsibility of Mr. Lockwood, who was in the office the three years before Mr. Hague began? Mr. Hague has served but two years and three months, and it is claimed that the past two years, but little of the dirty work was done. Whether this last statement is true or not, we should not forget there were two other commissioners. From the north district were Mr. Hoffelder and after him, Mr. Bateman. In the southeast district Mr. Henderson held the office till Mr. Gunsenhouser succeeded him last fall. These men are all considered honorable men and careful in dealing with county affairs. But why should they not divide the blame, if any? Let us be reasonable in this exciting time. The business of DeKalb county has been large and varied and the hand of almost every man who has dealings with the board, was reaching out for spoils. The Board were honest men. They believed their fellow officers and assistants, the auditor, treasurer and deputies were honest men, and they naturally gave them their confidence as they had to have their assistance in doing the work. Who would have thought of watching any of the men now known to be guilty? The Board may have been over confident in the honesty of the officials, but nearly every man in DeKalb county was in the same mind. The Board has its own duties to perform for which they are responsible. The other officers have theirs. But when settlements are made by any officers, it is their duty to see that all is right. Yet it is always possible to deceive the board as was done at Fair's first statement. If the officer has used $1,000 he can get it from some source for a few days and so settle O. K. and no commissioner can know it, unless by accident. The sessions of the Board are crowded full of pressing and important business, in each item of which the county's interests are at stake. They see to it that every bill presented is correct and for real service or value. If correct, they allow it. Then the auditor draws the order. If he draws it wrong, how can the board know it, as they never, under the old law, saw any order after it was issued. Of course the new law directs that they go over the books of the auditor and treasurer to see whether all is right or not. And even this might not discover a bad order issued by the auditor when he and the treasurer were working together, as many of these bad orders are not on the record. But if there is any carelessness, let us be fair, and divide the blame, among all who were too confiding. This would take in all the other members of the Board for the past six years, and the people at large over the county. It may look now, as if anyone could have found out the rascality. But it must not be forgotten, that the first raised county order, was discovered only by the merest accident. Fair's accounts were short, and in looking them over, an order to a juryman, for services, was found to be $119. The finder knew that no juryman ever received that much. An investigation showed the order raised from $19. Then the Board began looking the matter up. And in the face of of public opinion and public belief, the Board found some of its most trusted helpers, were forgers. And now every body can see how easy it was. Anyone can lock the door after the horse is stolen. And those who are disposed to blame the Board, should give them the credit for good work done, as soon as they found things were wrong.

TRANSFER OF PRISONERS

Will be a Unique Event in Criminal History of the Country.

The law converting the prison south into the Indiana Reformatory, goes into effect April 1st, says the Indianapolis Journal. Upon this date all prisoners over thirty years old and those convicted of taking life will be transferred from Jeffersonville to Michigan City, and all those under thirty in the prison north not convicted of manslaughter or murder, will be taken to Jeffersonville. A special train will be employed for the purpose, and, though the boards have not yet arranged the details, it is probable that the train will start from Jeffersonville taking the older prisoners north one day and return, carrying the younger ones the next. It will be a unique occasion in the criminal history of the country, for no such wholesale transfer of criminals for a long distance has been made. The train will carry from Jeffersonville 285 men, and, if the federal prisoners are also transferred, this number will be increased by seventy-six Returning from Michigan City the train will carry about 310 men back to Jeffersonville. A joint meeting of the two prison boards will be held in the near future to complete details.

The train is already being prepared by the Pennsylvania Company. Old coaches are taken for the purpose and the windows are being heavily barred and gratings fixed for the doors. Whether, or not the men will be ironed to the seats has not yet been determined but all will be handcuffed. A small army of guards will accompany the train, and it will bristle with Winchesters. The prison authorities do not anticipate any outbreak, and will endeavor to make arrangements so perfect that there will be no opportunity for trouble

THE COUNTY DEBT.

The Dispatch says the county debt is $94,000, other papers put it at $98,000 as still others at $110,000 to $120,000. The Dispatch is probably, the nearest on the right track. But even its figures are misleading, for at this time, no one knows exactly what it is. The Dispatch has we suppose, got a list of outstanding orders, and these may possibly foot up to $94,000. But who can say how many of these orders are good and how many are bad? And if we know how many are bad, how do we know how many of the bad ones have been made good? And again suppose those orders are all good in which case they would represent so much debt. Then in order to know what our real debt is, we must know how much money we have on hand. We may have on hand quite a large sum, as no county orders have been in to be redeemed for some time, and will not likely be till we have found out which are genuine and which are not. Again taxes are coming in now every day, and the first installment will all be in by the middle of next month. Of these taxes, there may be available enough to pay $30,000 of the orders named, which if all were genuine, would reduce that $94,000 of orders, down to $64,000, and throwing out bad orders might reduce it still more. But then, on the other hand, at the very time this amount of $94,000 in orders was reported the Board of Commissioners was in session and allowing many new orders thus increasing the amount of debt. Many changes may occur between now and June, when the annual debt statement is made.

NEW TAXES TO BE PAID.

A Man's Life Insurance Policy is Now Subject Taxation.

Kendallville Daily Sun.

When the township assessors start upon the annual spring visit this next month they will carry instructions to do something that has never been attempted before in Indiana, and authority for which was denied the state tax by the legislature.

The new form of blank prepared by the state tax board of tax commissioners will be in the hands of assessors very soon now, and one of the instructions is that every man carrying life insurance, shall be required to state the surrender value of the policy, which value is to be assessed. There are hundreds of men here, carrying life insurance, and if the action of the state board stands, all must pay on the surrender value. Most of the endowment policies have a cash surrender value. For instance if a man is carrying a twenty-year endowment policy for $2,000 and has been paying premiums for twelve years, his policy would have a cash surrender value of $700 or $800. Under the instructions of the board this amount will be listed. The impression prevails that the order will be resisted.

RESOLUTIONS.

Adopted at a meetiug at Fairfied Center Monday Evening March 15.

Recent developments present to the tax payers of DeKalb Co., a fact which for a long time has been a suspicion in the minds of many, that dishonesty was being practiced by certain of our county officials. The fact of our tax levy being so much higher than that of adjoining counties. Our county debt increasing, and no special improvements of material value being made, gave just cause for suspicion, and now that our suspicians are proven facts, through the work of investigation that has been instituted.

THEREFORE RESOLVED, that we the taxpayers of Fairfield township do heartily endorse the work of investigation which has brought to light certain criminal acts and practices, and to condemnation of a part of the perpetraters thereof, and further believing that as yet only a partial exhibit of the villainous doings has been developed, we ask that the good work now commenced be continued as far back in the records as the records develop dishonest practices though it may go to a period beyond the legal recovery of money or criminal punishment of the offenders, and that the expense of investigating be paid out of the funds of the county, and that if any one guilty escape by statute of limitation let the odium attach to them while living and to their memory if dead, it would be only their just due. And those who have been honest in their ministrations would stand vindicated by such investigation.

RESOLVED, that we demand the bringing to justice all the guilty parties, when it is in the power of the court to do so, and that all monies unlawfully withheld from the county be restored to the treasury of the county.

RESOLVED, that we hereby pledge ourselves not to hereafter support for any office, any man who is shown to have intentionally defrauded the tax payers, nor for any man who has or may hereafter contribute to the concealing of the dishonest practices, or that will in any manner tend to the defeat of justice being meted out to the guilty.

WATERLOO OPERA HOUSE.

Last night was opening night at the Waterloo Opera House, and together with many others from Auburn, we witnessed the first entertainment. The Opening company was "The Bowery Girl," quite a different company and play, from what many had expected, for both play and company were good, though from the name, many had supposed it would be a poor piece. Those who had held to that view were surprised, for the company is a strong one and the play good. Of course as the name would suggest, a wild, slangy bowery girl as the central figure. But there is nothing rough or disgusting about her. She is the typical New York Bowery Girl, and that is all. The rest of the company were excellent, including the Dago and his wife, the Tammany Irish politician, the German, and the other Bowery characters. The child who had such a large part to do, was an actress of ability though so young. She will be a leader some day. The songs and dances were excellent—above the average, and the scenery was fine and varied enough to suit all parts of the story.

As to the audience it was a very large one, for all the citizens and many from the surrounding country had turned out to help make the opening night a financial success. And there were quite a number from other points.

The Building is the new brick structure just completed, and is a very convenient room for the purpose. It is seated with the best of opera chairs, everything modern and new. The entire seating is on the one floor, and one plan, with regular rising slope from the stage to the rear of the hall, but all of the same style of seats. The scenery is fine and new, showing several lovely views, and all worked by improved devices.

The lighting, both for hall and stage, is by electricity, and was a success, though many thought that for the first night there might be a failure, and were a little nervous. So when one of the scenes required the stroke of general darkness—a lightning change—many thought the expected accident had come, and kept saying, "I told you so." But in half a minute the full light returned and all was serene. Everybody could see then what had happened.

The lights were under control of Alt Moody, of Auburn, one of the best practical electricians in the country. All the elaborate system of stage lighting with its intricate wiring and lightning changes, are of his invention and arrangement. They do him great credit.

The music was good. It was furnished by the Wolfensperger Mandolin club, of Auburn, acting as orchestra. The persons are; Prof. C. W. Wolfensperger, leader; E. C. Sheets, violin; Cliff Caldwell, violin; James Elridge, piano; Miss Mary Baldock, guitar; Mrs. E. C. Sheets, guitar; Mrs. M. B. Willis, mandolin. Prof. W. has a well established reputation in this line, being one of the ablest musicians in this section.

Altogether, Waterloo's opening evening has been a marked success, but of course there are always some who are not pleased with a show, and this is no exception.

NEW TARIFF.

The Times-Herald says "the new tariff law will put our industries on a paying basis," which if true, means that prices will be higher, the rise being caused by the high tariff. So, the first step in the new administration is to raise the price of the things we buy. The original McKinley bill had this very effect. But the Times-Herald makes a plain mis-statement when it says, "The McKinley bill reduced revenue without creating a deficit." The writer knows that the reason the McKinley bill did not create a deficit was because of the vast surplus left in treasury by Cleveland's first four years Every year of the McKinley law, this surplus got smaller, till it was wiped out and Secretary Foster got plates ready to print bonds on, to borrow money to replace the shrinking revenues. But as the Harrison administration would last only a month longer it was left over for Cleveland to do. The Wilson law produces more than did the McKinley law.

OBITUARY.

Dorcas Adam was borp in Wayne, now Ashland County, Ohio, Jan., 16, 1821. Died March 11, 1897, aged 76 years, 1 month and 25 days. She was married to Alexander Provines, Oct. 24, 1841.

To this union were born 9 children 6 sons and 3 daughters, of whom 6 survive her and were all present. The oldest and youngest died in infancy.

April 26, 1853, they settled on farm in Jackson township, DeKalb Co., Ind. where she resided until death.

They settled in this county when it was new where she endured the hardships of a pioneer mother.

Nearly 40 years, while attending services at Evangelical Lutheran church located near Jackson Center, she was converted and became a member of this church under the pastorage of Rev. Wm. Waltman. Later when this church disbanded she united with a church of the same faith located at Spencerville, she remained a member of the Spencerville class until the organization of the E. L. church at Auburn. She then transfered her membership and became charter member of the Lutheran church at that place, where she remained a member until her death, ever exemplifying her faith both by precept and example.

She leaves her aged husband, 4 sons, 2 daughters, 27 grand children, and 10 great grand children and many relatives and friends to mourn her death. Her character is exemplified in the life she lived.

Marbles may forget their message to mankind.
But in our lives alone our mother lives enshrined

Thus: ends the life of anothe pioneer. The funeral services were conducted from the Grove Bethel church last Saturday March 13, at 10:30 a. m. Interment took place in Evergreen cemetery. J. D. Brosy officiating.

—Mr. Boland and Dr. Nusbaum returned this morning from Michigan City, and Sheriff Sroh returned last night. Mr. Sawvel and Mr. Borst did not enter the prison till about one o'clock Wednesday. None of the men have been assigned to any department of labor as yet. D. D. Moody was yesterday assisting another convict to put up some electric light wires, though this is not a permanent job. They will not be assigned for a week or so. The cells in which they were assigned had no extras and Messrs. Boland and Nusbaum went up town and bought for each of them a mattress, pillow, wash bowl, pitcher and such things as they were allowed to furnish. The fact that arrangements are being made to remove some prisoners to Jeffersonville prison, is the reason that these men have not been assigned to their departments.

—George Braun, of Waterloo, began work at the Hebel meat market, Monday. He is a son of H. E. Braun, the veteran butcher of that place, and brother of W. L. Braum, who was in Auburn several years ago, but now in Angola. George is an accomplished meat cutter, and is always popular with his patrons.

Notice of Settlement.

Drs. Nusbaum & Sparling desire and must have a settlement of all accounts due them on their books. A liberal deduction will be made to those who attend to this promptly before the accounts are turned over to a collector. 4-7

FITTING UP NEW ROOMS.

Dr. Nusbaum is fitting up a part of the rooms formerly occupied over Hebel Bros store as well as those lately occupied by Attorneys Roby & Link. He will engage in special treatment of the eye, ear, nose and throat. In the treatment of the above he has become quite a specialist and he no doubt will have plenty of work. The fine suite of rooms will be especially furnished for the treatment of these four important parts of the body. We hope he may be eminently successful.

—Mr. and Mrs. Rohm enjoyed an old fashioned belling last night at the home of the bride's mother

—The Cedar Chapel Sabbath School and Epworth League raised about $6.00 last Sunday which will be sent to the India sufferers. The church at that place is in quite a prosperous condition.

A bill resembling the one introduced by Senator Rinear to have janitors in country schools at a salary of ten cents a day has been passed by the Indiana senate. There are several meritorious points to the bill. It will save country school ma'ams some hard work and will enable some poor scholars to defray their expenses during the time they are attending schools. It is the relief from hard work to the pretty school ma'ams, however, that would secure our approval of the proposed bill, despite the fact that it would take about $10,000 out of the state school fund.

—The Kansas legislature has a bill pending to prohibit the ladies from wearing corsets, and although the measure is not yet a law, there is said to be already an army of applicants for the position of inspector to see that the law is enforced.

The orignality of some of Indiana's legislators has again made itself conspicuous by the introduction of a bill to exempt blind persons from taxation. The author of the bill thought to define clearly what is meant by "blind persons." There are hosts of wealthy men in this state who seem to be blind in regard to the extent of their riches when the assessor calls on them.

—An exchange says: A young lady had a beau who was in the habit of calling at her home six nights in the week and staying so late that he became a nuisance. The other night as the clock struck 11 she gave him a pencil and paper and told him to make eleven ciphers in a straight line and draw a perpendicular line down from the right side of the first and a line up from the right side of the fourth, down on the right side of the fifth, up from the right side of the seventh and eighth and down from the right side of the tenth, the lines to be an inch in length. She then told him to read what he had written. The hint was most startling, and the young fellow has not been seen since.

—Garrett Herald:—The AUBURN DAILY COURIER was two years old Mar. 4. We are glad to know that it has been reasonably prosperous. It is a hard struggle to publish a daily in so small a town as Auburn, but Bros. Barns & Lochner, have demonstrated that it can be done.

—Congressman J. M. Robinson, of this district has left for Washington to attend the special session of congress which convenes next Monday. Mr. Robinson will acquaint himself thoroughly with the business methods of congress and will become one of its most valued members. He is in every way equipped for the duties of the position and will look after the best interests of the people in the national legislature.

—The DAILY COURIER makes daily visits to F. A. Borst and D. D. Moody in Michigan City.

—Eugene Kinney was here from Hamilton yesterday on some business He says the people in that vicinity can scarcely realize the fact that their old neighbor and friend Mr. Sawvel has been sent to the prison.

—S. V. Cogswell, of Pleasant Lake who has been visiting Oscar Klink returned to his home last evening.

—The circulation of the DAILY COURIER now reaches over 500 copies each evening. Advertisers are reaping the benefits.

—Chris. Ashelman has been back here a few days on some matters of business, as he usually is about twice a year. His family are well.

—Jim Lewis and wife went up to Pleasant Lake last evening, where they will remain a few days wit Mrs. Lewis' mother, Jim also has a job of tinning there.

—D. R. Best, of Angola, member of the law firm of Best, Bratton & Yotter, of that place, was in attendance at court here yesterday. For several years Mr. Best has owned an interest in the Steuben Republican and written the editorials for that paper, but he has recently sold the same to his partner O. F. Rakestraw and will hereafter devote his entire time and energy to the practice of his profession.

—G. W. Stahl, is recovering slowly from his recent illness, though quite weak yet.

—Dr. J. W. Squires of Churubusco, was in town yesterday. He reports the severe illness of D. W. Nickey, a prominent citizen of that section and brother of A. B. Nickey.

—Flossie Leasure, of Angola, went home last evening after a visit of a few days with Roe Tefft and other young friends.

—Mrs. S. C. Snyder and son Ora, and Mrs. Charles McClellan and son Charlie, reached home early this week, from their trip to Washington to see the inauguration.

—Mrs. Ed. Ross is home from her recent visit with her brother, Hon. F. B. VanAuken at Pleasant Lake. She reports his sick son greatly improved.

Saturday's Daily.

—The ladies of the Eastern Star gave a nice literary and musical entertainment at their hall last evening. They had a limited number of invited friends to enjoy it with them. There was a bright little play, produced by the younger members, which created a great deal of amusement. Mrs. Cuppy and Morris Widney sang, while Flora Hoffman was accompanyist. They concluded with a very enjoyable lunch.

—The new liquor law doing away with what are called "quart shops" or, "barrel houses," will of course affect the sale of liquor by drugstores. But it does not prevent them from filling the prescriptions ordered by phyticians, as heretofore.

—The hearse for the funeral of Mrs. Alex Provines, to-day was fitted up with a four-horse team on account of the terrible condition of the roads. And another strong team took out the big cement box or vault in which the coffin will rest.

—Our big woodpile is quite handy just now. Many people are short on wood at present, and the bad roads prevent more of it coming to town. So we have been "dividing," with them.

—Charles L. Buss, of Dist. 3, Grant township has sent in a solution of our "Will Problem." He says the eldest son received $289,42; each of the other sons, $89,42; each of the two daughters, $9,42. This is substantially correct. It is an actual transaction, being the Hovarter Will, in Fairfield township.

—The members of the Knights of Pythias of this city are looking forward with great interest to the coming convocation of the Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan to be held at Goshen on the evening of March 25th. Those in attendance at the meeting in December last have not forgotten their reception and will also attend the next convocation in company with several tyros who will become votaries. Al-Shia Temple No. 67. of Goshen, has the honor of being the first in the state.

—Fremont Smith came near being seriously hurt Friday. He was helping at the Andrew Smith saw-mill for a few minutes, running the cut off saw, when his hand came in contact with the saw and the three first fingers on his left hand were cut and torn. Two of them were injured at the joint and may be stiff when healed. Dr. Vesta Swarts, dressed the wounds. Mr. Smith thinks he will not volunteer to help at a sawmill again, in a hurry.

Monday's Daily.

—The legislature passed a new law, by which prison labor, will probably cease, as it makes it unlawful to manufacture any common articles in prison. In other words, the taxpayers will be called on to work a little harder, save a little more, in order that, prisoners may be maintained in idleness. We confess we don't see the good of such a law.

—The city of Indianapolis has adopted the Philadelphia system of city numbers. Each block is given 100 numbers, so that in going one way from the starting point, six blocks, the numbers would be in 600 etc. They reckon east and west of Meridian steeet, and north and south from Washington street. The plan is very simple when once familiar.

It will interest you to read Schaab & Bros. advertisement on first page of this paper.

—There were 157 pupils who took the February examination for common school graduation as follows: Jackson 15; Concord 38; Newville 3; Stafford 4 Wilmington 7; Union 7; Grant 8; Keyser 8; Richland 17; Fairfield 22; Smithfield 11; Franklin 9; Troy 8. Add to the above the 23 applicants for teachers' license and Superintendent Merica had 180 sets of papers to grade this month. Besides these papers, there were the settlements with the 19 corporations and the reports to the various companies of the quarterly sales of text-books, holding examination and various other office work; so if teachers are a little late in receiving their report they may know the reason.

—Ex-Congressman J. D. Leighty was in the city to-day. He is to be the next pension agent at Indianapolis.

—It is now high time for Harpers' Weekly and others of that sort who aided McKinley, to begin to be frightened at the prospect of a high tariff. But as that was the only thing they had any reason to expect from republican success, we do not see what they have to complain of. If they are as smart as they think they are, they knew this all the time.

—Wm. McIntyre took a walk down to the residence of his son, Henry, on Sunday.

—There came near being a fire in the upstairs rooms back of Billy Edgington's barber shop Sunday morning. A chimney burnt out and the wall paper over the flue caught fire. No damage was done though the scare makes Billy Edgington feel quite a bit older.

—Mrs. Garside, of Edon, O., mother of Mrs. Dr. Willard Swarts, was brought to Auburn Saturday evening over the Wabash and is now receiving treatment of Drs. Swarts at the Sanitarium. She was accompanied by her daughter who will remain here and assist in caring for her mother.

—Now let people get ready for the effect of the new tariff law that is to be pass this week.

—All imported tobacco lying in bonded warehouses, is being taken out now and the duty paid on it before the new McKinley law goes into effect, which will make the duty much higher. About one and a quarter million dollars in duty was taken in in one day last week.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way, often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

—Mrs. Annis Cowan returned Saturday from her business trip to New York City, of two weeks. We presume she has procured the latest styles and goods. On her way home she stopped off at Washington but only remained there a short time. She then came to Cleveland, where she visited the wholesale millinery houses. She informs us that her purchases for the spring trade were bought at a sacrifice by going in with several other dealers. On the small items of ribbon alone, she will sell this season at less than she paid for the same goods last season. Watch for her ad. to-morrow. On her return to Auburn she stopped off at Fostoria, Ohio, and Mrs. Holler and her little daughter came back with her for a visit with the friends here.

United States Consul Jernegan of Shanghai, China, reports that in 1896 American lumber to the amount of 13,000,000 feet was imported into that country. He says that the eastern portion of China has been completely denuded of timber, and hence the demand for lumber from the United States. The Chinese people are also adopting the American style of houses.

The new woman in Moscow is far in advance of her sisters in other countries. Two girls in that city were recently arrested for strangling an old female miser and taking her money. On their trial they explained very ingenuously that they committed the crime "in order to provide themselves with funds for traveling abroad to complete their scientific education."

The smallest inhabited island in the world is that on which the Eddystone lighthouse stands. At low water it is thirty feet in diameter; at high water the lighthouse, whose diameter at the base is twenty-eight and three-quarters feet, completely covers it. It is inhabited by three persons. It lies nine miles off the Cornish coast and fourteen miles southwest of Plymouth breakwater.

The Montgomery, Ga., Monitor says Jacksonboro is a thing of the past and attributes the decline of the place to a visit many years ago of Lorenzo Dow, the eccentric Methodist preacher. The tradition is that he was scoffed at by the natives and, being much discouraged, he walked upon a bridge spanning Beaver Dam Creek, near by, and brushed off the dust of the place from his feet, then departing the town. From that time the town is said to have begun to wane.

Alejandro Ruiz, a Mexican antiquarian and traveler, whose collection of antique curios, paintings and carvings fills a private museum at his home in Pueblo, Mex., at the age of 70 years is learning the English language as a means of occupying his time. He has traveled in almost all parts of the world, collecting whatever of interest was old. He has been an intimate friend of President Diaz since long before the time of his elevation to the chief magistracy of Mexico, and the president visits him whenever he travels through Pueblo.

THE PIN.

Small, but an Imperative Necessity to Convenience and Comfort.

In England the ordinary domestic pin had become in the fifteenth century an article of sufficient importance to warrant legislative notice. An act of Parliament, passed in 1843, prohibited the importation of pins.

As a necessity of the toilet, pins were introduced into England in the latter part of the fifteenth century by Catherine Howard, Queen of Henry VIII., who received them from France.

Very good pins were made at this period of brass, but a large portion of them were made of iron, which were lanched and sold for brass pins.

In order to prevent this imposition upon the good people of England, Parliament in 1843 passed an act providing that "no person shall sell any pins but such as shall be double-headed and have the heads soldered fast to the shanks of the pins, well smoothed, the shanks well shapen, the point well rounded, filed, cantered and sharpened."

England depended on France for its supply of pins until 1626, when John Tilsby introduced the manufacture into Gloucestershire.

His business grew to such an extent that he is said to have given employment to about 1,500 persons; at any rate, his pins—Stroud points, as they were called—gained a high reputation. In 1636 the manufacture was introduced into Bristol and Birmingham, the latter place ultimately becoming a center of the industry.

Pins in America made their first appearance during the last century. In 1775 a prize was offered to the colonists of Carolina, who introduced the first native pins and needles.

During the war of 1812, when, owing to the restrictions upon commerce the price of pins rose to $1 a paper, the manufacture was actually started in the United States, but does not seem to have met with success, as the enterprise was soon abandoned. The industry was not fairly started in this country until the year 1836.

The early pins in this country were made with globular heads of fine twisted wire, made separately and secured to the shank by compression from a falling block and die.

These old pins had the misfortune of often parting with their heads. It was to overcome this difficulty that the attention of the early inventors was directed. The solid-headed pin in common use to-day took the place of the old form about 1840.

Patti's Diet.

It would scarcely be exaggeration to say that some considerable credit in the matter of Mme. Patti's success is due to her very skillful cook, who has attended her now for many years past. Many singers get extremely fat, but Patti has kept her figure all through her thirty-eight years of professional life. Her cook is said to be in his own way a perfect genius. Some years ago, when Patti and her husband were occupying a suite of rooms at the Midland Hotel, I well recollect one of the items on her daily bill of fare. It consisted of a jelly made out of no less than eighteen pounds of the best meat procurable.

A Proper Protest.

"Sir!" he shouted, "do you realize that your actions place me in a bad light before the public?"

Though overcome with confusion the property man managed to get the glare of the calcium on the center of the stage, where strode he who had just spoken.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Politics of the Day

REPUBLICAN GLOOM.

At the very outset of the McKinley administration the Republicans, who understand the signs of the times, are despondent, for they see quite clearly that hundreds of thousands of those who voted their party ticket four short months ago are already convinced that they were deceived, and that never before has the tide of popular opinion turned so quickly against the victors in a political contest as it has since last New Year's day. There are dozens of Republican Senators and Representatives in Washington to-day who feel certain that if the election of last November were to be held over again now the result would be different. The only consolation that those on the winning side can find is that the people cannot turn them out by to-morrow.

Not within the memory of the present generation has a party assumed power in this country under such discouraging circumstances as the Republican party is doing now, and this in spite of what was claimed at the beginning of winter as the most magnificent victory ever achieved in a free nation! There is none of the enthusiasm among the masses that was both predicted and expected, and there is scarcely any of that hopeful feeling that the promises of the campaign will be realized, and that the man who is now President is really the advance agent of prosperity. On the contrary, the suspicion is already widespread, and is growing in strength every day, that he is merely the weak representative of a gang of corporation sharpers.

Those Democrats who were led away from their old party affiliations know now, since McKinley spoke his piece from the gaily-draped stand at the Capitol, that their one idea of "sound money" has no place of honor reserved for it in the President's mind. He has proven that their hobby never received serious consideration, and that while he may feel sorry for them for being duped so easily by his partners, he is not going to pay further attention to them. In fact, like the ordinary vender of a gold brick, he wants to create the impression that he never had any dealings with them.

McKinley's Financial Utterances.

McKinley's inaugural utterances on pretty much everything excepting the need of re-enacting his "tariff for monopolists only" are oracularly indefinite, and in many cases even confusing and contradictory, thereby confirming the opinion of those who regard him as a man lacking that breadth of mind and wide information which should characterize the occupant of the Presidential chair.

It is impossible, for instance, to get any clear idea of his meaning when he says in regard to the money of the country that it is all good now, but that it should be "put on an enduring basis, not subject to easy attack nor its stability to doubt or dispute." How can it be "all good," as he says it is, if it is not on an enduring basis, and is subject to easy attack? Does he know what he means?

Then he says that the several forms of our paper money offer a constant embarrassment to the Government, "and a safe balance in the treasury." In this last part of the sentence he probably means that it is "a danger to a safe balance in the treasury," but why should it be so if it is "all good?"

He talks of getting rid of the gold reserve in the treasury, and yet he declares that until the advent of international bimetallism "the value of the silver coined and of that which may herafter be coined, must be constantly at par with gold by every resource at our command," and that "the credit of the Government, the integrity of its currency, and the inviolability of its obligations must be preserved."

Here is a declaration that he is in favor of redeeming the Government's obligations of all sorts in gold, of keeping on a par with gold, and at the same time in favor of doing away with the gold reserve! Even the former spook advisers of Lyman J. Gage, the national banker whom McKinley has put in charge of the Treasury Department, could not put forth a worse hodgepodge than this.

Whether McKinley is for the bankers' plan of converting the non-interest-bearing greenbacks into interest-bearing Government bonds and turning the entire business of issuing paper money over to the national banks, does not appear, and it is extremely doubtful whether he has any opinion on the subject. He seems indeed to be a tariff monomaniac.—New York News.

Bryan's View.

His (the President's) promise to endeavor constantly to secure international bimetallism is a rebuke to those who think that the gold standard should be maintained because of its merits. The system which is so bad as to justify an early and earnest attempt to get rid of it cannot be defended. But his declaration that, bad as it is, it must be endured until help comes from abroad, will be discouraging to those who have ceased to expect that international co-operation can be secured through persuasion.—William J. Bryan in New York Journal.

Too Much Like a Coronation.

To sensible Americans the gorgeous military and civic pageant attending the inauguration of President McKinley arouses feelings of regret and depreciation rather than admiration and enthusiasm. It indicates an unhealthy drift from the democratic simplicity which was the characteristic feature of our republican institutions and the outward expression of a fundamental principle of free government.—St. Louis Republic.

Privilege Inimical to Prosperity.

What the country needs and must have is general prosperity and not a specific thrift for the few to the detriment of the many. All men, and all corporations who invest their money in legitimate enterprises for industrial purposes, are entitled to fair and reasonable profit on their investments, but no man or set of men should be permitted to use the legislative and executive departments of the Government for their specific benefit.—Dubuque Times.

The Fifty-Fifth Congress.

The present United States Senate consists of 90 members, and of these 48 are classed as Republicans on all questions but that of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, 37 as Democrats and 7 as Populists. There is consequently a clear majority of Republicans on all ordinary political issues and that party cannot shirk any responsibility for the management of the country's affairs for the next two years at least, as they have a clear majority in the House of Representatives of at least fifty over the combined opposition of Democrats, Populists and Fusionists.

In the Senate the straight-out Republicans number 42, while there are six classed as Silver Republicans. The Democrats who stand squarely on the national platform of the party adopted at Chicago last year muster 29 in the same body, the other 6 being classed as in favor of gold and against the free coinage of silver at the declared ratio of 16 to 1. The 7 Populist Senators are, of course, silverites, so that on the silver issue the Senate stands: For free coinage—Democrats, 29; Populists, 7; Republicans, 6—total, 42. Against free coinage—Republicans, 42; Gold Democrats, 6—total, 48.

The Silver Republicans and Gold Democrats in the Senate just balance each other, and the dominant party can, therefore, always muster a majority whether the question to be voted on is a purely party one or a financial one.

The House of Representatives, which is classified as consisting of 204 Republicans, 122 Democrats and 30 Populists, Fusionists and Silver party men, with a vacancy from one of the Missouri districts. Even if all the Populists, Fusionists and Silverites were to combine with the Democrats and vote against the Republicans, the latter would still be in a large majority.

The Republicans must, while the Fifty-fifth Congress lasts, be held responsible for all the legislation enacted. They have no excuse for shirking any of it.

McKinley and the Civil Service.

The great questions agitating the mind of the average Republican politician at the present time is whether McKinley will enforce the civil service law or not. If he does the "pickings" will be unpleasantly restricted. An appreciation of this fact was recently manifested in Congress when a general assault on the civil service policy was made. Mr. McKinley is on record as an adherent of the civil service theory.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Don't Forget This.

In the midst of all this triumph of one party, and this elevation of its chosen leader, it is curious to remember how narrow was McKinley's majority over Bryan. A change in the votes of twenty thousand citizens would have put the Democratic candidate where the Republican is to-day and changed the whole course of the history of this continent. No man should forget that.—New York News.

Exchange Comment.

Somehow or other Marcus A. Hanna has a grip on the neck of the new administration that means submission or protruding tongues and purple countenances.—Vincennes, Ind., Sun.

During the campaign, it is said, Mr. McKinley greeted 1,000,000 persons. Notwithstanding his impaired health, a large proportion of this 1,000,000 insist on greeting him again in order that he may be enabled to perceive their fitness for places under the new administration.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Mr. Alger, the gentleman with a plethoric purse who is to be Mr. McKinley's Secretary of War, has arrived in Washington, and declares that the financial situation can be materially improved by the passage of a tariff bill. Mr. Alger's views have been thoroughly Cantonized.—New York Journal.

The old McKinley tariff reduced the revenues of the country and the Republicans promise that the new McKinley tariff which they hope to enact will increase the revenues. A McKinley tariff is apparently a magician's bottle out of which you can get any kind of liquor you call for.—Buffalo Courier.

There are still a good many Republicans, who, like Grosvenor, cannot understand why Democrats should be allowed to hold office under a Republican administration, and they promise to make life pretty uncomfortable to Major McKinley when the flowers of spring begin to bloom.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The suggestion of a mugwump organ that Vice President Hobart should reform the United States Senate is impracticable. Mr. Hobart will be too busy taking care of his coal trust. If he has any desire to reform things he can begin at home, where his efforts will be less dangerous and more effective.—Kansas City Times.

In the recent investigations of the coal trust it was admitted that the price per ton had been advanced $1, but without any increase of pay to the miners. The increase in price was accomplished by four successive advances of 25 cents each "in order to obtain a fair remuneration," in which nobody shared but the trust.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The true way in a time of profound industrial depression to help distressed business is to lighten the burden of taxation by cutting down taxes to the limit of a safe economy and by cutting down expenses to the measure of revenue. But the Congress has not even considered a decrease of taxes, and only one man in Congress has labored effectively to cut down expenditure.—Philadelphia Record.

THE BUBONIC PLAGUE.

ONE OF THE MOST VIRULENT DISEASES KNOWN.

Possibilities in Glass Tubes that Are in a Laboratory in Brooklyn, N. Y.—Germs Withstand an Extraordinary Degree of Dry Heat—Hard to Kill.

Scourge of Bombay.

If the contents of half a dozen innocent-looking glass tubes in the Hoagland laboratory, Brooklyn, N. Y., were permitted to escape, the most virulent disease known to modern science would be liberated, and, according to the most conservative authorities, a plague of frightful character would be inaugurated. The minute bacilli of this awful sickness do their work with such quickness that, within a day or two, in almost every case, the stricken being dies in fearful torture, and so fatal is it that 95 per cent. of infected persons are doomed from the instant it strikes them.

Every one has heard of the frightful ravages of the bubonic plague in Bombay and adjacent seaport towns, but, aside from its name and a suggestion from its terrible fatality, little or nothing has yet been published about the real nature of this sickness, which, in its mortality and pestilential tenacity, far outstrips any other disease known to modern medicine. Whether or not the present bubonic plague is identical with the plague, or black sickness, which ravaged all Europe in the sixteenth century, is a matter not yet absolutely determined.

Certain it is, however, that it is more apt to develop and increase, when once introduced into those places where filth is abundant and where starvation reduces the resistive power of the individual. Climate does not appear to be deterrent to this disease, for we find it has its habitat in the cold, mountainous regions of Northern India and Southern Russia, as well as in the almost torrid zone of Southern India and China. What gives rise to it? What are its symptoms? How do individuals contract it? How does it travel from place to place? How can we guard against infection?

STOCKING AN INCUBATOR WITH PLAGUE GERMS.

These are pertinent questions and well worthy of serious consideration, when we reflect that this dread disease may at any moment invade the United States. In 1894 Kitasato, an eminent Japanese bacteriologist, went to Hong Kong to investigate the cause of the plague which was then raging there. In examining persons sick of this disease and the bodies of those who had died of it, he discovered in their blood and in the suppurating lymphatic glands a micro-organism of germ which he was able to isolate, cultivate and study. With this germ he was able to produce the disease in otherwise healthy animals and to recover the germ from their tissues.

The term "bubonic," coupled with the name of the disease, indicates its influence upon the lymphatic glands. The intense inflation of these glands is one of the prominent symptoms of the sickness. The glands are located in the armpits, thorax, groin, neck and abdomen. They inflame, swell and suppurate, causing the most excruciating agony in cases where the patient survives long enough for this stage to be attained; but the poison is so virulent that in many cases death ensues before the glands have time to become thus affected, so depressing is this action upon the nerve centers which regulate the heart's action. The general symptoms, therefore, in brief, may be noted as fever, depression, swelling and suppuration of the lymphatic glands, and, in a vast majority of cases, an agonizing death.

The work room of the Hoagland laboratory contains perhaps thousands of these plague germs, but all so carefully sealed and so delicately handled that the danger of their ever escaping is reduced to a minimum. In sterilized beef tea and other similar media these germs are grown and cultivated. The bacteriologists are testing them every day, and in every conceivable manner known to science, bent upon determining the most effective method of disinfection. No amount of cold within the radius of our climate affects them, and they live indefinitely in clothing or upon whatever substance they chance to find lodgment until such time as they may be communicated to a living being, when they develop and spread with frightful rapidity. It has been found that the usual fluid disinfectants, such as are applied to cholera germs, for instance, are by no means certain death to the bubonic plague germs. Sulphur, which is much used in disinfection, can not be relied upon when dealing with these plague germs. Bichloride of mercury or corrosive sublimate kills them if used at sufficient strength, but this is not always practicable. Moist heat at 60 degrees centigrade (about 140 degrees Fahrenheit) kills them, but they live in dry heat even at a higher degree.

BIG MORIARTY MONUMENT.

Heaviest Block of Granite Ever Transported by Rail.

A few weeks ago mention was made of the colossal mortuary monument to be erected in a cemetery at New Orleans, La., by Mrs. Daniel Moriarty, formerly of that city, now of California. The stones were quarried and cut at Barre, Vt., and recently were loaded on specially constructed cars and started on their journey south.

The base for this mortuary pedestal is the largest surface stone ever transported by a railroad, its total weight being 80,000 pounds. It is fourteen feet square, and has a capacity of 100,000 pounds, and has an opening in the floor of deck 3 feet 6 inches wide by 16 feet 2 inches long. The base of the stone is suspended edgewise, and through the opening it comes very closely to the roadbed, the distance therefrom being only 8 inches, while the top of the stone is 14 feet 10 inches above the rails. The cost of the car was several times that of an ordinary freight car.

The foundation necessary to bear the great weight was recently completed, and rests upon piles driven to the depth of 50 feet. Above is a mass of concrete masonry 6 feet thick and 30 feet square. Upon this solid bed will be placed the first course of granite, consisting of two blocks 30 feet long, 8½ feet wide, and 1 foot thick. These will inclose the base stone on two sides, while two stones 13 feet long will inclose the ends. Above the great base stone will be another monolith nearly as large as the first, and then a third, each one weighing over 25 tons. These will be capped by a die eight feet in height, and six feet square, with polished panels. At each corner of the die there is a polished column, with Corinthian capital, and then come four beautiful statues in Westerly granite.

GREAT BLOCK OF GRANITE.

NOTED RUSSIAN COUNT.

Michael Muravieff Made Minister of Foreign Affairs for Russia.

Count Michael Muravieff, who has recently been made Minister of Foreign Affairs for Russia, belongs to one of the oldest and most powerful families of Russia. The Muravieffs, or Murajeffs, were brought forward by Catharine II., and members of the family have distinguished themselves in Poland, Turkey and China. It was Muravieff Amurski who forced the navigation of the Amur and seized that territory, finally annexing it to Russia by treaty with China. This in 1858. In 1855 Gen. Muravieff, surnamed Karski, made prisoners of Gen. Williams and his staff at Kars on the capitulation of that citadel. The new minister is the grandson of the Gen. Muravieff who suppressed the Polish revolution in 1863 as governor of Lithuania. His father was Governor of Kovno. The Count was educated at Heidelberg, and learned to speak German and French fluently. Unlike many noble Russians, he is a master of his own language. In 1864 he entered the service of the ministry of foreign affairs. His first diplomatic mission was as secretary of legation at Berlin. Later he went in the same capacity to Stockholm, and next to Stuttgart. In 1874 he was appointed secretary of the legation at the Hague. In 1880 he was sent to Paris, in 1884 to Berlin, as councillor of embassy, and in 1893 he was made minister to Denmark. While in Berlin he acted as temporary ambassador during the long illness of Prince Orloff and created no end of comment by his very manifest French sympathies. This offended the Germans, and it is said that he left Berlin without having received the usual decorations. Muravieff is a reserved, haughty man, but thaws rapidly to those who believe in his hobby—homeopathy. He not only admires that school of medicine, but understands its practice thoroughly. His elevation to the ministry of foreign affairs is considered a remarkable advance in life for one of comparatively youthful age.

Prolonged Considerably.

"Do you think that it prolongs a man's life to be insured?"

"Yes," replied the man who had just been interviewed by an agent, "it does something toward keeping him from being talked to death."—Answers.

"Do you pray for your dear teacher often, Tommy?" asked the visitor to the school. "Yeth, thir," replied Tommy the truthful, "whenever thee whipth me I pray for the devil to git her!"—Cincinnati Tribune.

A LETTER TO WOMEN

From Mrs. James Corrigan.

For seventeen years I have suffered. Periods were so very painful that I would have to go to the doctor every month.

He said that I had an enlargement of the womb, and told my husband that I must undergo an operation, as I had tumors in the womb, and it was a case of life or death.

I was operated upon twice, but it did not seem to do me any good, it made me very weak. I was troubled with the leucorrhœa a great deal.

I also suffered with the sick headache, vomiting spells, backache all the time, terrible pain in my left side, chills, loss of appetite, and could not sleep nights. After taking several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, some Liver Pills, and using your Sanative Wash, I recovered.

I can eat well, and every one that sees me tells me I am a different person. I can do all my own work, sleep well and feel well. I am growing stronger every day, and am able to go out and enjoy a walk and not feel all tired out when I return, as I used to. I doctored for sixteen years, and in all those years I did not feel as well as I do at the present time. I wish that every woman that is troubled as I was, would try that medicine. Oh! it is so good to feel well, and it is all owing to Mrs. Pinkham's kind advice and medicine. —MRS. JAMES CORRIGAN, 284 Center St., Jamaica Plain, Mass.

A Future Ellen Terry.

Richard Mansfield has discovered a girl in whose bosom burns the fires of dramatic genius, and he has the graciousness not only to say that she will some day make a great actress, but that she may become to him what Ellen Terry is to Sir Henry Irving.

This from Mr. Mansfield means much. He has never been noted for his lavish commendation of the work of his fellow-artists, and when he condescends to voluntarily rise and remark that a second Ellen Terry is on the horizon it means that the recipient of the compliment must indeed have more than ordinary talent.

Alice Pierce is the name of the young woman who has won such high praise. She is a mere slip of a girl, just past her sixteenth birthday, and hails from Troy, N. Y. On the stage she looks the child she really is. Her slim, gaunt, undeveloped figure, with its serious face and big, piercing eyes, by no means reveals the fires that are beneath.

Her early paths in the dramatic art were not different from those of ordinary beginners. Amateur theatricals, little plays at school and similar entertainments served to awaken in her a desire to do something serious. Mansfield's company was in the city one day, and she went to his hotel and told him of her ambition. The famous actor must have been in a particularly gracious mood, for he listened to her reciting and then offered her a place in his company.

She has advanced with marvellous rapidity, and in his New York production of "The Merchant of Venice" was cast for the part of Jessica. She has played the part before during the present season, and the dramatic critics have taken to her most kindly.

Mr. Mansfield personally coaches her in her work, and he certainly would not make the prediction he did unless the prospects held out rosy promises for its fulfilment.

A Land of Windmills.

Great flapping sails all over the land make Holland look as if flocks of huge seabirds were just settling upon it. There are said to be at least ten thousand of these windmills in Holland. They are employed in sawing timber, beating hemp, grinding corn, and many other kinds of work; but their principal use is for pumping water from the lowlands into the canals, and for guarding against the inland freshets that so often deluge the country. Many of the windmills are quite simple affairs, but some of the new ones are admirable. They are so constructed that by an ingenious contrivance they present their fans or wings to the wind in precisely the right direction to work with the requisite power.

Skating to some is elating,
And sometimes quite elevating.
When you strike a snag imbedded in the ice;
All at once your left foot fails you,
And its hard to tell what ails you,
Still you wonder how it happened quite so nice.

To go floating like a feather,
O'er smooth surface when the weather
Is frigid enough to freeze a hitching post;
Makes rare sport that suits full many,
But for me I don't want any
And will give my share to those who like to boast.

It is nice to be a skater,
But to cut the alligator
Is not near so grand by half as figure eights,
And to sit down unexpected,
In a manner unaffected,
Is a trick quite easy done with any skates.

industrious agriculturists, laying out their fields on the sides of the mountains with great skill and irrigating them with artificial canals. In addition, they excel in iron working, and their arms are exquisite specimens of metal work. Their chief weapon is the kris or kreese, peculiar to the Malays. This, a kind of dagger or short sword, they ornament with carved handles, while the blade is of exquisitely graceful design.

They still retain some of the primitive weapons of ancient savagery, among which the most formidable is a sword wrought from the blade of a swordfish. The base is cut smooth for a handle, while the blades have the sharp natural teeth of the natural

FIREFLY LANTERNS.

Twinkling Feet Illuminate Attractive Bicycle Paths.

Genius has given fashionable folks a new plaything with which to amuse themselves. It is in literal obedience to the biblical injunction regarding a lamp unto the feet, for that is exactly where the new light is to be worn. It consists of a tiny lantern with sides of very stout glass, mounted upon a stirrup which straddles the foot of the user, a tongue resting on the toe of the foot, and acting as a part of the support.

There are several means of furnishing light for this curious lamp. Electricity and oil are the most common. The former is likely to be the most popular method from the fact that there is no danger of grease leaking out upon the shoe. A tiny storage battery has been constructed to be used in furnishing the light. It is ordinarily carried in the pocket, and a flexible wire, insulated and covered with chamois skin, passes from the battery and through the pocket down to the lamp into the foot. In this way a bright light is secured, the little battery furnishing sufficient electricity for a walk of half a dozen hours.

The half-dollar is 1 3-16ths of an inch in diameter.

State Bread.

Americans are sometimes accused of having too great a fondness for hot bread, and are told that stale bread is wholesome. If that is true the Assyrian loaf that was recently discovered by a French explorer ought to be a particularly desirable bit of nourishment.

It is supposed to have been baked somewhere about the year 500 B. C., and was in excellent condition when found. He who should be fortunate or unfortunate enough to partake of that loaf, ought not to be troubled with indigestion. It is sufficiently stale to suit the most rigid upholder of a careful system of diet.

The bread is bun-shaped, and was found wrapped in a cloth in a tightly-sealed sarcophagus.

Some decidedly ancient loaves were found a few years ago at Pompeii. An oven, well-preserved, was unearthed, and in it were resting several charred loaves, upon which the baker's name was still plainly to be seen.

The bakers of Pompeii made their loaves round, with indentations that permitted them to be broken into eight parts. Similar loaves are baked in the present day in Calabria and Sicily.

He Took the Joke.

A good story is told of a certain prominent railway director, who is equally renowned for his ability to take or make a joke. A railway employe, whose home is in the country, applied to him for a pass to visit his family.

"You are in the employ of the company?" inquired the gentleman alluded to.

"Yes."

"You receive your pay regularly?"

"Yes."

"Well, now, suppose you were working for a farmer instead of the company, would you expect your employer to take out his horse every Saturday night and carry you home?"

"No," said the man promptly. "I would not expect that, but if the farmer had his horses out and was going my way, I should call him a mean fellow if he would not let me ride."

The employee came out three minutes later with a pass good for twelve months.

A COUNTERFEITER CAUGHT.

The Police of Syracuse Make an Important Capture.

On Monday, the 15th, Harold Marquisee, of Utica, N. Y., was arrested in Syracuse, N. Y., on a warrant sworn out by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., charging him with forgery. On the 15th of December Marquisee visited a photo-engraver in Syracuse, saying he was the representative of the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., and arranged for the making of a full set of plates for the direction sheets, labels, etc., of the famous Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. News of this reached the home office, and no time was lost in arranging for his arrest when he should return for the plates. He returned on the 15th and was accordingly arrested and is now in jail in Syracuse awaiting examination, which occurs on March 2.

This arrest proves to be an important one. In addition to various plunder, such as medical books, typewriters, rugs, etc., found in Marquisee's trunk when arrested, the police also found counterfeit coin both in the trunk and on his person; and in a search of his apartments at Utica found a complete outfit for counterfeiting, consisting of crucibles, bellows, nickel, lead, bismuth, antimony, a small blacksmith forge, a charcoal furnace, and several plaster-of-paris moulds. The United States marshals want him just as soon as the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. are through with him, and, no doubt, he will be sentenced for a long period.

In selecting Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for his counterfeiting operations, he showed his knowledge of the proprietary medicine business; for these pills are in such great demand that they are easily sold at any drug store in the United States. His scheme was to work the country druggists and sell his imitations at a discount of from 2 per cent. to 5 per cent., explaining the reduced price by the fact that he had picked them up in small lots and at a discount from dealers who were overstocked. By working fast and making long jumps, he would have secured many hundreds of dollars in a short time. The proprietors of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are most fortunate to have caught the rogue before he had fairly started, and to have thus kept these spurious goods out of the market.

To the Pyramids by Rail.

There is to be a railroad direct to the Pyramids. The government has granted a concession to the Cairo Tramway Company to make a line to the Pyramids and to fill up the Khalig canal running through Cairo. The latter scheme will remove one of the causes of malarial fevers.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

But also appeal to a means of relief of the torture—if physical—which produces the groan. Rheumatism is a prolific source of agony in its acute inflammatory or chronic forms. But it may be annihilated at its birth with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which, unlike the poisons in minute doses often prescribed for it, is perfectly safe. In malarial, kidney, bilious, dyspeptic or nervous ailments the Bitters is a certain source of relief.

A Pretty Custom.

Japanese children are rarely allowed to keep caged pets; and there is a pretty custom that teaches them that the gods have a tender care of the lower orders of creation. Old women with imprisoned birds stand at the entrances of the temples, and by giving a "sen"—a small coper coin—to one of them a child, on his way to recite his prayers, is at liberty to ransom a feathered captive. The little ones take infinite pleasure in watching the pretty creature in its aerial flight to liberty, and this small act of benevolence is supposed to incline the god favorably towards the child.

"When I Saw —your advertisement

I thought that it was probably like the announcements of many other makers of harvesting machinery—big blow and little show; but I'm ready to surrender; go ahead, gentlemen, you're all right; I bought one of your binders last season and it is equal to any claim you ever made for it."

This is the condensed essence of what Mr. Thomas Carney, of Washington Court House, Ohio, has to say about the McCormick Right Hand Open Elevator Harvester and Binder. The claims made for McCormick Machines are strong claims. That's because

McCORMICK

Machines are so constructed that strong claims for them are justified. The machine you want will cost you more than the other kind, for the simple reason that it is worth more; that's all — there's no other reason — and in the end you'll be glad you paid the difference, because there's nothing cheaper than the best.

REASONS FOR USING Walter Baker & Co.'s Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

"Cleanliness Is Nae Pride, Dirt's Nae Honesty." Common Sense Dictates the Use of SAPOLIO

Bubbles or Medals.

"Best sarsaparillas." When you think of it how contradictory that term is. For there can be only one best in anything—one best sarsaparilla, as there is one highest mountain, one longest river, one deepest ocean. And that best sarsaparilla is——? .... There's the rub! You can measure mountain height and ocean depth, but how test sarsaparilla? You could if you were chemists. But then do you need to test it? The World's Fair Committee tested it,—and thoroughly. They went behind the label on the bottle. What did this sarsaparilla test result in? Every make of sarsaparilla shut out of the Fair, except Ayer's. So it was that Ayer's was the only sarsaparilla admitted to the World's Fair. The committee found it the best. They had no room for anything that was not the best. And as the best, Ayer's Sarsaparilla received the medal and awards due its merits. Remember the word "best" is a bubble any breath can blow; but there are pins to prick such bubbles. Those others are blowing more "best sarsaparilla" bubbles since the World's Fair pricked the old ones. True, but Ayer's Sarsaparilla has the medal. The pin that scratches the medal proves it gold. The pin that pricks the bubble proves it wind. We point to medals, not bubbles, when we say: The best sarsaparilla is Ayer's.

"For a long time," said the farmer's wife, "I suffered from gastric troubles and dyspepsia. After all my meals I experienced a disagreeable, heavy sort of feeling and oftentimes in the morning my tongue would be coated; in fact, this would be the case for whole days at a time. I had recourse to the whole category of correctives, aperients, laxatives, etc., but the relief I found was only temporary. Indeed, in most cases, after I had taken them for any length of time, the early efficacy seemed entirely vitiated. I had so often seen in the advertisements of the statement, one gives relief, that at last it so impressed itself upon me that I decided to give them a trial. A trial was entirely convincing and in a short time I was well. While I have now no regular use for them I always keep them on hand, to be used in case of emergency."

BOTH DEAD.

(Fort Wayne Journal.)

AVILLA, IND., March 11.—(Special)—The two children of John Sheets, of Swan township, this county, were fatally burned this morning. The parents left the house and during their absence the children, aged respectively six and twelve years, procured the oil can, pouring the liquid over the floor and then igniting it. The children were enveloped in flames, and before their cries brought help, portions of their bodies were burned to a crisp.

A True Remedy

W. M. Repine, editor Tiskilwa, Ill., "Chief," says: "We wont keep house without Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Experimented with many others, but never got the true remedy until we used Dr. King's New Discovery. No other remedy can take its place in our home, as in it we have a certain and sure cure for Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, etc." It is idle to experiment with other remedies, even if they are urged on you for just as good as Dr. King's new Discovery. They are not as good, because this remedy has a record for cures; besides is guaranteed. It never fails to satisfy Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store,

MINISTERS ATTEND A PLAY.

Monday, Feb. 15, was set aside by Charles Frohman and his manager, C. B. Dillingham, of the Garden theater, to give a special performance of "Heartsease" (by courtesy of Henry Miller and his company) to the clergymen of New York.

The theater was closed to all except the clergy, and no seats were sold. The box office men and ushers were dressed in long black coats and black ties, and the playhouse, with its strange audience, had every appearance of a church.

There were 1,062 ministers and friends present, including a number of ministers from New Jersey. The only denomination that sent regrets was the methodist.

COMMISSIONERS' COURT.

Soon after the December regular term of commissioners' court, the vast amount of work resulting from the investigations going on, compelled the Board to call regular sessions ot various times. The special session in February was a long one, and much important business was done.

The bridge letting we have already published, but it may be of interest to our readers to know some details as to abutment work. W. E. Ruple, as stated then got the abutment of stone to build. The following prices show how the bids are let and what he got.

Grafton Sandstone at $6.76 per cubic yard.

Excavation, dry, at 20c per cubic yard.

Excavations, wet, at 50c per cubic yard.

Timber foundations oak, at $22 per M.; Other than oak at $18 per M. Piling, oak, at 35c per lineal foot: Other than oak, 30c per lineal foot.

In the course of the complicated matters arising from the county troubles, various improvements in the management of county business were suggested by the Board, and several new rules were ordered spread on the Record. Among these are those directing that a separate account be made of orders drawn on separate funds, for the business of that fund, such as for ditches, for court, etc, etc. These orders and the the records there are to show numbers beginning at No. 1 and running on from that. And the treasurer must not pay orders that are not so registered and recorded in the proper account. Everyone can see that these are very wholesome rules.

MRS. JAHNS.

This matter was also disposed of. Old Mrs. Jahns, having no one to support her, and not wishing to go to the County Home, she made a very sensible arrangement with the Board that her property, a house and lot in Auburn should be used to support her. So she deeded it to the county, and the county hired Elmer Miller to take care of her till her death and pay her funeral expenses, so that the county would be at no expense. This Mr. Miller did, and after her death and burial, Mr. Miller came before the board, and showed that all legal requirements had been complied with, and the county now gives him the propreryty. It strikes us that this is a very sensible way of doing some of these things.

The Concord Regulators reported the election of J. W. Koch as a constable for said body.

F. A. Borat was allowed $300 on his salary for the past quarter, and the balance was continued for the benefit of his bondsmen.

It was ordered that County Attorney J. H. Rose, file a claim against F. E. Davenport, who is assignee of J. L. Davis, one of Coffinberry's bondsmen.

Wm. H. Ryan was refused a liquor license in Jackson township for two years, his application having been remonstrated.

The treasurer made a report of an error in the report of that office at the December session. It had shown that Sheriff Stroh had $163.33 more in the treasurer's hands, than was really the case. This had been drawn by Stroh, constituting an over draw. It was ordered corrected on the books and that amount transferred to the county fund.

The claims of J. H. Krontz for surveyor's services, and of Frank Scholes as assistant, were continued.

A. Bartels wasmade superindtendent of the County Asylum for another year beginning April 1, 1897.

J. D. Myers, inspector of the Southwest precinct of Union township, reported that more votes were cast there at the last election than is allowed by law. This matter was continued to the June session.

Robert H. Rose was appointed a constable of Keyser township.

J. H. Rose, county attorney, was directed to begin suit against J. M. Hook late surveyor of the county, to recover any money due the county.

Who Can Measure

The influence of the mother! It shapes the course of unborn generations—goes sounding through all coming ages and enters the confines of Eternity.

With what care, therefore, should the Expectant Mother be guarded, and how great the effort be to ward off danger and make her life happy.

"Mother's Friend"

Allays Nervousness, relieves the Headache, Cramps and Nausea, and so prepares the system that Child-Birth is made easy and the time of recovery shortened—many say "stronger after than before confinement." It insures safety to life of both mother and child. All who have used "Mother's Friend" say they will never be without it again. No other remedy robs confinement of its pain.

"A customer whose wife used 'Mother's Friend,' says that if she had to go through the ordeal again, and there were but four bottles to be obtained, and the cost was $100.00 per bottle, he would have them." GEO. LAYTON, Dayton, Ohio.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY,
Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia.

Yesterday, Wednesday, after the Hathaway case was finished, various miscellaneous matters came up and were disposed of, and will be reported in their proper place.

Then the case against Jink Marsh came up. It appears that Jink and some other young fellows in Waterloo had a hankering for oysters, and one night, they broke into the rear of Jule Denison's restaurant and took out a can or two of them, which they went off somewhere and ate. All the rest of the crowd seem to have slid out of danger somehow and left Jink for a scape goat. He has now been in jail about two months, and his case not reached till now. When court adjourned last evening, several witnesses had testified, and then the rest was left till the train came in from the north this forenoon.

When the case started up again Mr. Cox, the night watch in Waterloo, was put on the stand. He saw some young fellows coming across from Denison's restaurant with something that looked like a bowl and went to McDonald's office. He said Sherman Edge was one them. He saw Denison's partition door open, by looking in at the window. He discovered at about 8 o'clock, that some one had been in. Cross examination by Phillips. I came on street about 7:30. Witness was made to give a detailed account of the various directions he had gone over the town, in watching the various streets and locations. This detailed account of his journeying over town, took up half an hour or an hour of valuable time. This course is taken so often that a part of every term is wasted on trifles. Next witness was ——— Zerwes. He told who had been with him that evening. They went to church and when they came back found the company partly still there, and they now had some oysters, etc. They got back from church about 8 and staid till 9 There were also cigarettes in the room. He went home and left others there. The room is a back room. Wm. X. X. McDonald took the stand. Knows Jink Marsh and Sherman Edge, and that Denison's store was broken into. Had had talks with Jink about the matter. Mr. Lunchford (Jink Marsh) knew I was prosecuting attorney. I did not go to him first. He spoke of fixing the matter. I said under the circumstances I could give no advice. He said he and Edge went out and got some oysters. He said Edge got them in Denison's, but he waited for Edge to go. Was not in the act of taking the oysters, Now, he wanted to fix it up. Wanted me to donate some money to help pay for the oysters. I gave no money. I asked why he did it, Jink began to cry. I sent to Denison as to what they had said. Lunchford said he would go out and raise money. At another time he said he did not think they could convict him, as there was not enough proof. Cross examination by Rose. The second time I talked with him about it, Edge was along, Jink said he felt bad about it, and cried. The testimony was about the same as on direct examination. I do not know who helped raise money or help fix it up. The thing occurred Sunday evening. It seems that Lunchford, Edge, Zerwis, Watkins, and others came to witness' room, and that it was in his room or office. He was asked where he went when he left the room, but refused to answer. And when asked if he was in a condition to know whether there was any cider there he refused to answer but soon afterwards volunteered to say he was all right at that time. He then explained the relation between his office, and the other rooms around it, and especially as to a room used by both him and Earl Abby, in which this party had met. Jink claimed that he and Edge went there together and Edge handed the oysters out. As he had before said Jink told him that he was not present when the oysters were taken. Rose wanted him to explain. He got very angry and stood up and said he did not propose to be insulted. In the sparring between him and Rose, he said Rose was getting too childish. It appears however, that on one occasion Jink told him one story, and at anothers meeting told a different one. This explanation would have prevented any trouble between Rose and himself, both attorneys, had either thought of it. Witness had gone at one time to where Jink lived, but did not tell Jink to run away. Edge had asked me to go with him to see Jink. Edge left in a day or so, and has never been back. He refused to answer several questions but his assistant Prosecutor Davis wanted him to answer. The Judge said he need not answer. Afterwards, the Prosecutor asked some similar questions but Rose objected. Here the state "rested."

The defense began by calling Dr. Darby. Never heard anything against Jink. The attorneys got to disputing over the witness and the Judge made him leave as other witnesses were in a hurry to give testimony and get home, and he wanted to hurry up the G. T. Abby was the next witness. Said never heard Jink's character brought in question till this case came up. Earl Abby is my son. He went south last December, and last heard from him in Nashville, Tenn. F. W. Willis sworn. Knows Jink Lunchford, and his reputation. Thinks he has lived as well or better than any other boy in the community. But he remembers that Marshal Frank Fisher had arrested him a time or two, once for a provoke or simlar offenses. Never till this occasion, heard his character seriously questioned. J. D. Campbell's testimony was about the same.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

The first witness for the defense, after afternoon, was, Wm. Basset.

Went into Denison's next day after trouble. Saw Cox there. Here arose a dispute over Cox, and he was recalled, and after explaining, Bassett was recalled, and said that Cox had given as a reason for not knowing of the robbery, that he was at church, and had not supposed there was danger of stealing so early. Lunchford was then put on the stand. Been in Waterloo about two years, my father is Charles Lunchford, now living in Kentucky. He went to McDonald's room that Sunday about 5:30 p. m. He told who were there off and on that evening, naming about the same as others had. They had cider to drink, McDonald left the room about 7:30. He told of the occurrence. Edge went out; but soon came back without oysters. He said would go and get some. I had no money. Edge went over behind Den'son's, and oysters were there, I told him not to tey, and went off and left him. When I got to top of stairs, saw Edge coming up stairs. We cooked them in McDonald's office. Found out next day, that Edge had stolen them. Have now been in jail 57 days. Edge had asked him to chip in and help pay for the oysters as the boys had done. Went to Phil Plum for some money, but got none. Then to Tracy Little who lent him a dollar, which he then paid over to Edge. (In this case, the state was represented by Prosecutor Davis, Mr. Welsheimer and Mr. McDonald. J. E. Rose and C. M. Philips were for defense. Lunchford it seems has been know as "Jink Marsh") He admitted he had gone to the back of the restaurant to see if could get oysters in the ice house. Found none in ice house, but Edge said he could get some by getting into Denison's rear room. Told Edge not to do that, and went away and left Sherm Edge to go his own way. Later, Edge came up stairs with a pan of oysters, and the crowd cooked and ate them. (His cross-examination by Davis was long and severe. But he seemed to adhere to his original story.) He said McDonald told him to skip out now while he was a free man. But he had said on direct examination that McDonal had said he had no advice to give, as he, McDonald was prosecutor. B. B. Long was called. Knows Lunchford. Do not feel like answering, as to his reputation for honesty. Never heard anything bad of him. Have heard a number of people speak well of him before this matter came up. Charles Righby DeLong sworn. Did not get much out of him.

Frank Fisher called. Has been town marshal of Waterloo five years, but am now a collector. Has known Lunchford ten years. State had called him. But as he was not allowed to testify, the state "rested" again. The case was finished in time for the attorneys to make their pleas, and the jury was charged and retired to their room about five oclock. At about 8 in the evening they had agreed on a verdict of "Not guilty."

FRIDAY MORNING.

The first cases that came up, were criminal ones, with Judge Penfield presiding. Frank Kane the tramp who looted the Lake Shore cars at Butler, plead guilting and got two years in the pen. Geo Cramer, for robbing the B. & O. supply stores at Garrett, of a lot of brass fixtures and selling them in Ft. Wayne plead, not guilty, and C. M. Brown was assigned as counsel for him. He will stand a trial. He and Sollenberger did the stealing, and Sollenberger was brought up a few days ago and let off on a promise of good behavior. It is the belief of many that Cramer made Sollenberger help do the stealing.

After the criminal cases were disposed of came up before the jury the case of Aultman & Miller Co. vs J. N. Cole. Several changes were made in the jury, before they could get to work. It was quite a struggle to get twelve farmers who were not prejudiced for or against a certain make of binder, and this suit was on the sale of a binder to J. N. Cole in Newville township. Mort Wilson admitted he was friendly for the "Champion, the best harvester made" This raised a laugh. Cole's attorneys were Baxter & Brown; and for the Buckeye Co. were Roby & Shuman.

The substance of the testimony is that Cole bought of the agents, Boozer Brothers, of Waterloo, a Buckeye binder which was sent to St. Joe about May of '96, and that soon after it came, he came to town and said he had concluded not to take a binder, but preferred to buy a buggy. The machine has never been unboxed but lies now at St Joe. As he had refused to take the machine, the company sued for the price given in the contract. At noon they adjourned to one o'clock.

THE CHICAGO RECORD CASE.

While the case over Jink Lunchford was going on in the court room, before Judge Hartman, Judge Penfield was trying an important and very unusual case in the consultation roon just east. It appears that in the summer of 1895 two men, Lane and McCullough, started a dental office in the central, business part of Chicago, and went to the office of the Daily News and Daily Record, and made a contract for advertising. The space they wanted was quite small—would be small for us here,—and was to be "from 10 to 30 lines of agate type." It was to be run at 18 cents a line each issue in the Record and at 30 cents a line, each issue in the News, as the News has a larger circulation. And in case cuts or other displays were used, there was to be an additional charge of 50 per cent. The firm went out of business in about three months, having paid the News-Record, $384 on their advertising. But the total bill as figured by the News-Record bookkeeper who was present at the trial, and by the attorney for Victor F. Lawson, owner of the News-Record, who was present and managing the case, was over $1600. A. J. Baxter, of Butler, was attorney for Lane & McCullough, and made a strong plea for a reasonable construction of the bill, which he claimed was too high. But the contract was very plain, and there was no way out of it. So, the Judge, after taking out the payments already made, and giving the dentists a per cent. off, allowed in the contract, but not considered till it came into court, gave the News-Record a judgment for the balance, $1180. It was one of the most interesting cases, we have heard for a long time. It makes a printer crazy to think of $1,600 on a 2-inch ad. three months. Lane is now a druggist in Butler, and that accounts for the suit coming here.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, and Commerce, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

FAIRLY WHIPPED.

Corbett Has No Grievance to Offer for His Defeat.

The other evening Corbett went with his wife, his mother and his brother Harry to the Orphem, San Francisco. There was more or less of a demonstration for a time by the audience, which broke out in vociferous applause just after the curtain went down on Barney Fagan's act. John Morrisey called Corbett to the stage to respond to this popular clamor for him. "Ladies and gentlemen," Corbett began, "I thank you kindly for this greeting. I can assure you that nobody knows how badly I feel to night. All I want to say is that Wednesday when I stepped into the ring I was in perfect condition. Mr. Fitzsimmons is a wonderful pugilist and whipped me fairly and squarely. All I ask of the American people is to let me have one more chance at Fitzsimmons."

Presidential Appointments.

The President has sent to the Senate the following nominations:

Powell Clayton of Arkansas, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Mexico.

William W. Osborne of Massachusetts, Consul General of the United States at London.

John K. Gowdy of Indiana, Consul General of the United States at Paris.

Joseph H. Brigham of Ohio, to be Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

Perry S. Heath of Indiana, to be First Assistant Postmaster General.

Henry L. Marindin, an assistant in the United States coast and geodetic survey, to be a member of the Mississippi River Commission.

Sylvester Peterson of Minnesota, to be Register of the Land Office at Crookston, Minn.

Three American Citizens Released.

Secretary Sherman announced with a good deal of satisfaction at the Cabinet meeting Saturday that three more American citizens had been released by the Spanish authorities, viz: Charles Scott, Eben Venero and Theodore Vives. Scott's case was interesting from the fact that Consul General Lee made it the basis of his inquiry as to whether war ships were available for Havana in case the authorities refused to grant his demand that the men against whom the evidence to support the charge of conspiracy, it is said, was merely that he was in possession of Cuban postage stamps, if he was not immediately placed in communication with the outside world.

Austrians Sink a Grecian Ship.

The Austrian gunboat Sebenico has fired upon and sunk near Candia, a Greek vessel loaded with provisions and munitions of war which were intended for the Greek forces in Crete. It appears that the Sebinico, while watching the Greek ship, was fired upon by a party of insurgents. To this the Austrian warship replied by sinking the Greek craft and firing on the insurgents.

Against Prize Fight Pictures.

Representative Lamont of Cook County, introduced a bill in the Illinois Legislature prohibiting the exhibition in the State of Illinois, of pictures of the Fitzsimmons-Corbett prize fight at Carson, Nevada. The bill provides severe penalties, not only for those who show the pictures, but also for persons attending performances, at which such pictures are displayed.

Anti-Eggs Legislation.

W. H. Morgan has introduced a bill in the Kentucky Legislature making it a high crime and misdemeanor to interrupt public speakers by throwing eggs or other missiles, or felony, if injury is done to the speaker. Mr. Morgan had in view the treatment of Carlisle at Covington, and Lewis in his congressional race.

Collision in San Francisco Harbor.

San Francisco special: The river steamer Sunol, bound from this city to Vallejo, collided in the bay with the bark Olympia, bound in from Philadelphia. The Sunol turned bottom side up and sank. The crew and passengers were picked up by boats from the Olympia and other vessels near at hand.

Trouble in Tennessee.

A special from Knoxville, Tenn., reports a terrific conflict between whitecaps and an official guard over the jail containing three of their members at Sevierville. Wires were cut and details unobtainable, but several deaths are believed to have resulted.

Pingree Out.

The Supreme Court of Michigan has decided that the office of Mayor of Detroit became vacant when Hazen S. Pingree took the oath of office as Governor of Michigan on January 1. A new election must be held to elect a new Mayor for Detroit.

Samuel E. Mores Robbed of $30,000.

A special from Washington says: Samuel E. Morse, who is now Consul General in Paris, has made a report to the State Department of the doings of his former deputy, to whose wiles he seems to have fallen an easy victim. The report shows that he was robbed by his deputy of not less than $20,000, and perhaps as much as $30,000, during the last three years. Clyde Shropshire, a bright young fellow from Rome, Ga., was appointed Vice Consul General soon after Mr. Morse took charge of the Consulate.

EASTERN.

W. S. & F. Cordingly, manufacturers of wool and merino goods at Newton Lower Falls, Mass., have begun this week to run their factory night and day to keep up with a large number of orders which have been received. The factory has been running on short time for two years and up to the present has been in operation only three or four days a week.

The cloth weavers employed in John and James Dobson's big mill, at Philadelphia, who struck about ten days ago, because of a 10 per cent. reduction, returned to work Tuesday, a satisfactory agreement having been reached with Mr. Dobson. The feeders who went out at the same time, because of a reduction of $1 a week, are still out. They were offered a return of one-half of the reduction, but refused to accept it.

Frederick Franks shot and killed his son William, aged 9 years; shot and badly wounded his daughter Amelia, aged 5 years, and then turned the revolver on himself, sending a bullet into his breast near the heart, at his home in Philadelphia Wednesday morning. Franks and his daughter were taken to a hospital, where the father died a few hours later and little hope is given for the recovery of the child. It is believed the man was suddenly seized with a fit of insanity.

Charles H. More & Co., Montpelier, Vt., have opened their granite manufacturing works after a shutdown since September. This is the largest granite manufacturing plant in Vermont, and when running full force employs 300 men. Operations are to be resumed in the American sugar refinery in Brooklyn, which has been shut down for about a year. Over two hundred men have been put on the night shift and 300 more will be given work. The Havemeyer refineries increased their force of workmen by employing 200 men.

Tip, a monster elephant which has been shown throughout the country for many years past, was put to death by strangulation at Bridgeport, Conn. While the brute's feet were chained to stakes firmly driven into the ground, men with block and tackle drew a rope taut about his neck till he was dead. The operation was completed in thirteen minutes. Tip had developed vicious tendencies, and his death was determined upon in order that he might have no opportunity to kill his keepers or people visiting the show. He was given poison, but without marked effect.

WESTERN.

The immense wholesale dry goods house of Ely, Walker & Co., at St. Louis, the largest in the city, was destroyed by fire Monday night. The loss will reach over $900,000 on Ely, Walker & Co.'s stock and $200,000 on the building.

Cheyenne, Wyo., dispatch: The cold weather of the last few days has been very disastrous to range stock. Reports give news of many losses. Sheep are thin and weak. The snow is deep and crusted. Cattle and horses are suffering, with small losses. On the Upper Platte ranges wolves are becoming very troublesome, in some cases killing full-grown steers.

An autopsy has disclosed the fact that Private Gollie, who dropped dead at Cheyenne, Wyo., when scuffling with Private O'Shay at Fort Russell recently, died of strangulation. In the scuffle O'Shay gave Gollie an upper cut on the jaw which knocked him over backward and caused a piece of meat which he had in his mouth to become lodged in his windpipe, choking him to death.

Mrs. Clara Omo, a Western "cowboy," who claimed to have killed five men during her career, is dead at her home in Perry, O. T., aged 56 years. She was a Miss Martin and was born in New York City, moving to Eldorado, Kan., with her parents when a child. Her most desperate encounter took place in Little Blacktail canyon, near Butte, Mont., in February, 1890, when she killed Ed Smith. Smith found the woman alone and fought her with a hunting-knife. Mrs. Omo used a pistol.

Fire destroyed the five-story brick building at Lake and Michigan avenue, Chicago, occupied by the John A. Tolman Company, wholesale grocers, Friday night, causing a total loss of over $400,000. Spectators who thronged the narrow streets in the vicinity from 6:45 to 10 o'clock were treated to a fusillade of small explosions, due to the bursting of thousands of cans of preserved fruits. The losses by fire are approximately as follows: John A. Tolman Company, wholesale grocers, $300,000; Chase & Sanborn, coffees, Boston, Mass., stock damaged $50,000, principally by water; McCormick estate, building, $50,000; Joseph A. Kohn, building, $5,000. All fully insured.

Frank Butler, alias Ashe, alias Newman, now at San Francisco, the accused murderer of Captain Lee Weller, Arthur Preston and Charles Burgess, has decided to give up his fight against the efforts of Australian police to secure his extradition from this country. He gives as his reasons for this action that he has no hope that the United States Supreme Court will reverse District Judge Morrow, and he cannot stand the cost of carrying the matter to the court of last resort. Butler says that ultimately he will have to go on trial for his life, and the sooner the thing is over the better it will be for him. He will go back and face his accusers and depend upon the loopholes of the Australian criminal laws for his escape from the gallows.

Postmaster Hesing of Chicago has resigned. His resignation was forwarded to Washington Monday, to take immediate effect. Candidate Hesing has devoted his every energy to the fight for the Mayor's chair and the postoffice will presumably be in the hands of Col. Hubbard, his late first assistant. The vacancy may be filled by the appointment of a Republican at any hour. From this time on till the close of the polls election day Mr. Hesing will exert every influence and exhaust every power at his command in his race for the position of chief executive of Chicago. Frederick F. Stoll, general superintendent of the city delivery department of the postoffice, Wednesday tendered his resignation, to take effect immediately. He has already taken active control of Mr. Hesing's campaign, and has started on a career which he hopes will result in success for his chief. Mr. Stoll was formerly a business partner of Congressman William Lorimer. He is a Democrat.

The Missouri Pacific passenger train, north bound, which left Kansas City, Mo., at 9:15 o'clock Sunday night, was wrecked at Wolf Creek, Kan., one and one-half miles east of Hiawatha, at midnight by running into a bunch of horses. The engineer and fireman were killed, express messenger, baggageman and conductor badly injured and three passengers hurt, one of them severely. The killed: Ed Nye, engineer, Kansas City, aged 40 years, leaves wife; Patrick Connor, fireman, 32, Kansas City, leaves wife and three children. The injured: John H. Meyers, conductor, Kansas City, slightly injured; Jack Appleton, Kansas City, slightly injured; H. A. Kemp, express messenger, badly scratched and bruised; —— Meadows, traveling man, Atchison, Kan., two legs broken; L. F. Bacon, Kansas City, traveling passenger and ticket agent of the Santa Fe, slightly injured. Two other passengers, names unknown, were badly bruised. The train consisted of engine, baggage and two chair cars and one sleeper, and carried a light load. All except the sleeper were overturned. The engine turned over on Engineer Nye and Fireman Connor and crushed them to death. The passengers managed to escape with comparative ease, but it was some time before aid from Hiawatha was received for the injured. Engineer Nye was one of the oldest engineers in the service, having been on the road for fourteen years.

SOUTHERN.

D. F. Block & Co., cigar and tobacco dealers of Dallas, Texas, have failed. Liabilities, $11,320.71. Ike Maas, of Dallas, was named as trustee. The creditors are principally Dallas, New York and Cincinnati houses.

Judge Goff has appointed Z. T. Vinson receiver for U. B. Buskirk, merchant and timberman of Logan, W. Va. Assets, $125,000; liabilities unknown. This is a result of the recent failure of the Sliger Lumber and Manufacturing Company.

At Dover, capital of Stewart County, Tenn., the jail was destroyed by fire early Monday morning. Four prisoners, one white man and three negroes, were the only occupants of the building at the time. The white man escaped, but the three negroes were so badly burned that there is no trace of their bodies.

Nearly two thousand homeless and half-starved persons, rescued from the overflowed districts of Eastern Arkansas, are being cared for in Memphis, Tenn. The citizens' relief commission is practically backed by unlimited capital, merchants, bankers and corporations having subscribed great sums of money to prosecute the work of rescuing the inhabitants of the territory forty miles north and an equal distance south of Memphis. The first loss of life has been reported, a whole family of five negroes having been drowned at Marion. Sensational reports of wholesale drowning at Nodena, Ark., are denied by steamer hands fresh from the scene.

FOREIGN.

It is officially announced at Rome that the result of the conference of the powers Sunday is a definite agreement not to reply to the Greek note, but to issue orders to the foreign admirals to establish an immediate blockade of Cretan ports. This was the view of Russia at the outset.

All the admirals, except the French and Italian commanders, have been ordered to immediately blockade the principal Greek ports, especially the Piraeus (the port of Athens), Syra and Volo. An ultimatum was forthwith addressed to Greece by the admirals of the foreign fleets.

The judgment of the United States Circuit Court, in awarding a verdict allowing the government to recover $9,847 from Francis M. Rhodes of Hannibal, Mo., which, it is claimed, he received by fraudulent representation, was affirmed by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis. The government alleged that it had been induced to pay Rhodes this sum as a pension upon his representation that he contracted catarrhal ophthalmia, a disease of the eyes, while engaged as a soldier, while, in fact, he was so afflicted before he entered the service. Rhodes was a private in Company K, Forty-second Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Infantry.

The Echo de Paris says it understands that Italy is on the eve of ceding to Great Britain the Island of Pantellaria, sixty miles southwest of Sicily and about half way between the coast of Africa and the Sicilian coast, in exchange for the Island of Perim, off the Arabian coast, in the Strait of Bab El Mandeb and at the entrance of the Red Sea. The Island of Perim, belonging to Great Britain, is a bare rock about five miles long, on which turtle shells are taken, whereas the Island of Pantellaria has an area of fifty-eight square miles, a population of about seven thousand, produces fine fruits and has a convenient port, Oppidolo, at its northern point. Situated about thirty miles from Sicily, almost in the middle of the main thoroughfare of the Mediterranean, Pantellaria, now an Italian convict depot, could be converted into another of the strongly fortified British stations. Under the circumstances the Echo de Paris expresses the hope that the powers will interfere and refuse to permit the transfer of the islands referred to.

IN GENERAL.

Chemists have recently made actual diamonds, comparable in every respect—save one, that of size—with nature's most valued product. But the crystals so manufactured, while true diamonds, have been so microscopic in proportions as to be of no commercial value. Now, however, United States Consul Germain at Zurich reports to the State Department that E. Moyat claims to have discovered a process by which diamonds of larger dimensions may be produced. In principle his process is similar to one already used—that is, to crystallize carbon out of iron and steel by means of high pressure and high temperature.

The steamer Ville de St. Nazaire, belonging to the French Line to the West Indies, sailed from New York March 6, for Port Au Prince, Maya Guez, etc., with thirty-seven persons on board, and has not since been reported. She was a bark-rigged screw steamer of 2,640 tons register. The New York World Thursday morning has a story that the schooner Hilda came into port Wednesday bearing with her a story horrible even in the annals of the Atlantic Ocean. She carried in her cabin four passengers whom she had picked up in a boat Monday, ten miles off shore. When Capt. Berri, the first to recover, was able to gasp out some words, he said: "There were thirty-seven souls on that boat when we abandoned the St. Nazaire. Of all those men and women, we four are the only ones left alive. The others starved or were frozen where they sat. They died in all ways. They sunk, dropped off one by one, except where they were mad, and then some jumped into the sea and ended in that way. The captain was the first to go. The men were quiet enough mostly, until they saw the women die; then they seemed all at once to get raving, stark mad. All are here now. One, my comrade, Dr. Maire Stants, our engineer, and Tagardo, first mate."

JAMES J. CORBETT, EX-CHAMPION. ROBERT FITZSIMMONS, CHAMPION.

FITZ WINS THE FIGHT

KNOCKS OUT CORBETT IN A LIVELY BATTLE.

Cornishman Is Loudly Cheered—Big Crowd Is Present—Estimated that at Least $500,000 Was Staked on the Result of the Contest.

Fought Fourteen Rounds.

Robert Fitzsimmons defeated James J. Corbett in the fourteenth round in the contest at Carson City, Nev., for the pugilistic championship of the world. The decisive blow was a left swing on the pit of Corbett's stomach. He fell on his face in the center of the ring and was unable to regain his feet in the specified ten seconds. The Californian seemed to have a shade the better of the battle up to the last round. He had Fitzsimmons weak in the sixth round, but failed to finish him. Four thousand people were present. The day was clear and beautiful and just right for the kinetoscope.

The result of the battle came like a bolt of lightning to Corbett's friends, who deemed him literally invincible. The kinetoscope should net $100,000 to each pugilist, in addition to which Fitzsimmons receives the purse of $10,000 and Corbett's side bet of $5,000. There were about twenty women present. Fitzsimmons weighed 167 and Corbett 183 pounds.

Time was called at 12:07. The lanky pugilist refused to shake hands with Corbett. The opening sparring was cautious, but the Cornishman soon began to force Corbett, trying a left swing.

For thirteen rounds the two men swayed and shifted pythonlike around the white rosined floor, watching each other like two great eagles. Then the bell clanged for the fourteenth, and up they came again, light-footed, wary and aggressive. Fitzsimmons was bleeding badly at the mouth. Four thousand spectators roared around the ringside like a troop of lions. Hundreds of men became hoarse and hysterical with howling.

A dozen more women sat shivering and pale-faced with excitement in the rear seats. All but one. The wife of the tall Australian sat directly behind his chair, near the corner, and to one side of his throng of seconds, who fanned and rubbed their man between rounds throughout the battle. Mrs. Fitzsimmons was also pale-faced, but she sat Spartan-like behind her husband. Every time the bell ended a round she arose to her feet and spoke encouragingly to her panting husband preparing himself for the next round. There is another panting man opposite, but he bore no visible marks of the punishment he had undergone.

Fitzsimmons' small, ferrety eyes twinkled in his pink and apelike face like little bits of shiny glass as he swayed up to Corbett for the final round.

Champion Is Fallen.

Corbett darted forward and drove his long left in Fitzsimmons' stomach. The latter grunted and swung back with three hard raps on the Californian's jaw. The finish followed, like a thunderbolt. Fitzsimmons sprang forward with a great right-handed smash over Corbett's heart. The blow would have finished an ordinary man. It only staggered the tremendously muscular fighter. That momentary stagger, however, was sufficient. Fitzsimmons rushed in with a left flush in the pit of the Californian's stomach. Down went the big fellow on all fours, like a stricken beef. All his grand strength had vanished. Fitzsimmons, with his face still contorted in that red and featureless smile, stepped away at the order of the referee, who sprang between them. With a roar like that of a whirlwind 4,000 spectators sprang to their feet, turning over chairs, crashing over boxes and pouring flood-like down the yellow pine slope stoward the ringside.

It is estimated that not less than $500,000 changed hands all over the country on the result of the fight. Most of this money was wagered at Carson City, New York and San Francisco. Corbett wagered nearly $5,000 on himself in addition to the stake of $10,000 a side. Fitzsimmons did not bet any money, for the reason that he had none to bet. His stake money, even, was deposited by two New York and one Detroit sporting men. Martin Julian, his manager, is financially as bad off as his brother-in-law.

The fight was for a purse of $15,000 and a wager of $10,000 a side, the winner to take all. It was announced for the championship of the world, but as the championship of the world has never been technically held by one man, the title is not generally looked upon as settled by the fight.

GRANT'S TOMB READY.

Mausoleum Vies in Grandeur with Those of Great Kings of Old.

In Riverside Park, New York, will be witnessed on Tuesday, April 27, one of the greatest civil and military displays in the history of the world. The demonstration on land will be accentuated by a naval display on the river, 130 feet below, the like of which has seldom been seen in any part of the world.

On that day, the seventy-fifth anniversary of the birth of Ulysses S. Grant, the magnificent mausoleum erected to perpetuate the memory of the great Union general will be dedicated. The New York Legislature already has designated it to be a State holiday, and, by the plans which are now under way, it will be a national holiday as well in fact if not in law.

It has taken twelve years to bring about the erection of a tomb for the soldier-statesman that would be accepted as a fitting acknowledgment of a nation's debt to a nation's hero. The magnificence of the pile on which the finishing touches are now being put in Riverside Park is a sufficient answer to the cynical. One republic, in one instance at least, has proved itself not ungrateful, and all the world is expected to bear witness to the consummation of the proof.

It is expected that President McKinley, Vice-President Hobart, Speaker Reed, the TOMB OF GENERAL GRANT.

Governor of every State in the Union, the representatives of every foreign nation at Washington, the United States Senate, the House of Representatives, the State Legislatures and the heads of the principal public organizations of every character in the United States will participate in the dedicatory ceremonies. The Federal troops, the National Guard from a score of States, the North Atlantic Squadron, together with many vessels from the navies of foreign nations, will join in the demonstration. Already those in charge feel safe in predicting that more than 250,000 men, including thousands of soldiers who followed Grant to victory thirty-two years ago, will seek places in the parade.

The new Grant tomb has been erected at a cost of $600,000. It faces to the south, and stands directly in front of the temporary brick tomb in which the remains of Gen. Grant were placed nearly twelve years ago. The new structure is of granite, so light in tone that, in a strong sunlight, it is not distinguishable from marble. Architecturally it presents the features of treatment found in the Pantheon in Rome and in the tomb of Napoleon at Les Invalides, Paris. The structure, it is declared by critics, will bear favorable comparison with the tombhouse of Napoleon or that of any other modern warrior or statesman.

FOR MAYOR OF CHICAGO.

Carter Harrison II. Is the Candidate on the Democratic Ticket.

Carter Harrison, the Democratic nominee for Mayor of Chicago, is 37 years old.

CARTER HARRISON.

He was born in the Harrison homestead at Clark and Harrison streets. He attended the public schools. He was taken to Germany and put into the gymnasium of Altenburg. This preparatory course fitted him for college, and he graduated from St. Ignatius, Chicago, in 1881. He studied law two years at Yale. He practiced five years after 1883, and formed a real estate partnership with his brother until his father bought the Chicago Times in 1891. He filled nearly all the managing positions on the paper until the sale in 1894. His family consists of Mrs. Harrison, Carter III., who is a romping boy, and Edith, the baby.

Long Distance Rider.

Fred Schinneer, the winner of the six-day bicycle race in Chicago.

Eli Isom and Henry Frazier, who live on Rockhouse creek, Ky., quarreled over Polly Lewis, a young woman with whom both were in love. They agreed to settle their difference with revolvers at twenty paces, and in the duel which followed Isom was killed. Frazier was unhurt and escaped to the mountains.

BISHOP B. W. ARNETT.

Presented McKinley with the Bible on Which He Took the Oath.

Bishop B. W. Arnett of Wilberforce College, Ohio, who presented President McKinley with the beautiful morocco bound Bible which he kissed on taking the oath of office, is one of the leading lights of the African Methodist Episcopal Church in America. The bishop's son, Henry Y. Arnett, took a leading part in the late campaign. He was chairman of the Afro-American League of Ohio, and did splendid work among the colored people of his State. The Bible was given to President McKinley by the Afro-Americans of Ohio. It is bound in crushed blue leather, the covers lined with satin and the edges gilded. There is a gold plate on the first cover with an appropriate inscription. The book was opened, and as the new President kissed it his lips met this verse: "Give me now wisdom and knowledge, that I may go out and come in before this people: for who can judge this, Thy people, that is so great?" It is the tenth verse of the first chapter of Second Chronicles, and contained, certainly, a very fitting sentiment for the occasion. The volume was opened by Clerk McKenney without reference to any especial place, and the providential or accidental selection of the verse in question was as happy as any that ever befell Haroun al Raschid and his Koran. It is the custom for the Supreme Court to furnish the Bible for the presidential swearing in, and this Bible and the one used by ex-President Cleveland have been the only exceptions to rule. The little red Bible used by Mr. Cleveland was given him by his mother when he was a boy. The book used by President McKinley will be valuable to him as a souvenir.

AMBASSADOR TO ENGLAND.

Col. John Hay Chosen by President McKinley to Succeed Mr. Bayard.

Col. John Hay, who will go to England as United States ambassador for the McKinley administration, is already well known in that country by his famous books, "Pike County Ballads," "Little Breeches," and other works from his pen. But although his chief claim is as a writer, the colonel is a pretty good statesman and an excellent diplomat. For four years he was President Lincoln's secretary, except for the time he spent in the army, which, although it was short, was sufficient for him to become a major and a brevet colonel. He was secretary of legation at Paris and at Madrid and later was charge d'affaires at Vienna. He is erudite, suave, polite and skilled in the understanding of even small things—qualities that go far toward making up the diplomat. He studied law, although his life has been mainly given to literature.

COL. JOHN HAY.

Col. Hay is 59 years old, and lives in Washington. Col. Hay has been actively interested in politics since 1875. He was assistant Secretary of State under President Hayes.

M'KINLEY ON TARIFF.

HE TERSELY TELLS THE NATION'S TROUBLES.

Says More Revenue Is the Paramount Necessity—Imposts at Seaports the Favored Way of Raising It—Urges Congress to Act.

His First Message.

The message sent to Congress by President McKinley Monday was as follows:

To the Congress of the United States: Regretting the necessity which has required me to call you together, I feel that your assembling in extraordinary session is indispensable because of the condition in which we find the revenues of the Government. It is conceded that its current expenditures are greater than its receipts, and that such a condition has existed for now more than three years. With unlimited means at our command we are presenting the remarkable spectacle of increasing our public debt by borrowing money to meet the ordinary outlays incident upon even an economical and prudent administration of the Government. An examination of the subject discloses this fact in every detail and leads inevitably to the conclusion that the condition of the revenue which allows it is unjustifiable and should be corrected.

We find by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury that the revenues for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, from all sources were $425,868,260.22, and the expenditures for all purposes were $415,953,806.56, leaving an excess of receipts over expenditures of $9,914,453.66. During that fiscal year $40,570,467,98 was paid upon the public debt, which has been reduced since March 1, 1889, $259,076,890, and the annual interest charge decreased $11,684,576.60. The receipts of the Government from all sources during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, amounted to $461,716,561.94, and its expenditures to $459,374,887.65, showing an excess of receipts over expenditures of $2,341,674.29.

Since that time the receipts of no fiscal year, and, with but few exceptions, of no month of any fiscal year, have exceeded the expenditures. The receipts of the Government from all sources during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, were $372,892,498.29, and its expenditures $442,605,758.87, leaving a deficit, the first since the resumption of specie payments, of $69,803,260.58. Notwithstanding there was a decrease of $16,769,128.78 in the ordinary expenses of the Government as compared with the previous fiscal year, its income was still not sufficient to provide for its daily necessities, and the gold reserve in the treasury for the redemption of greenbacks was drawn upon to meet them. But this did not suffice, and the Government then resorted to loans to replenish the reserve.

In February, 1894, $50,000,000 in bonds was issued, and in November following a second issue of $50,000,000 was deemed necessary. The sum of $117,171,795 was realized by the sale of these bonds, but the reserve was steadily decreased until on Feb. 8, 1895, a third sale of $62,315,400 in bonds for $65,116,244 was announced to Congress.

The receipts of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, were $390,373,203.30, and the expenditures $433,178,426.48, showing a deficit of $42,805,223.18. A further loan of $100,000,000 was negotiated by the Government in February, 1896, the sale netting $111,166,246, and swelling the aggregate of bonds issued within three years to $262,315,400. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, the revenues of the Government from all sources amounted to $409,475,408.78, while its expenditures were $434,678,654.48, or an excess of expenditures over receipts of $25,203,245.70. In other words, the total receipts for the three fiscal years ending June 30, 1896, were insufficient by $137,811,729.46 to meet the total expenditures.

Nor has this condition since improved. For the first half of the present fiscal year the receipts of the Government, exclusive of postal revenues, were $157,507,603.76, and its expenditures, exclusive of postal service, $195,410,000.22, or an excess of expenditures over receipts of $37,902,396.46. In January of this year the receipts, exclusive of postal revenues, were $24,316,994.05, and the expenditures, exclusive of postal service, $30,269,389.29, a deficit of $5,952,395.24 for the month. In February of this year the receipts exclusive of postal revenues were $24,400,997.38 and expenditures, exclusive of postal service, $28,796,056.68, a deficit of $4,395,059.28; or a total deficit of $186,061,580.44 for the three years and eight months ending March 1, 1897. Not only are we without a surplus in the treasury but with an increase in the public debt. There has been a corresponding increase in the annual interest charge from $22,393,883.20 in 1892, the lowest of any year since 1862, to $34,387,297.60 in 1896, or an increase of $11,493,414.40.

It may be urged that even if the revenues of the Government had been sufficient to meet all its ordinary expenses during the last three years the gold reserve would still have been insufficient to meet the demands upon it, and that bonds would necessarily have been issued for its repletion. Be this as it may, it is clearly manifest, without denying or affirming the correctness of such a conclusion, that the debt would have been decreased in at least the amount of the deficiency, and business confidence immeasurably strengthened throughout the country.

Congress should promptly correct the existing condition. Ample revenues must be supplied not only for the ordinary expenses of the Government but for the prompt payment of liberal pensions and the liquidation of the principal and interest of the public debt.

In raising revenue duties should be so levied upon foreign products as to preserve the home market so far as possible to our own producers, to revive and increase manufactures, to relieve and encourage agriculture, to increase our domestic and foreign commerce, to aid and develop mining and building, and to render to labor in every field of useful occupation the liberal wages and adequate rewards to which skill and industry are justly entitled.

The necessity of the passage of a tariff law which shall provide ample revenue need not be further urged. The imperative demand of the hour is the prompt enactment of such a measure, and to this object I earnestly recommend that Congress shall make every endeavor. Before other business is transacted let us first provide sufficient revenue to faithfully administer the government without the contracting of further debt or the continued disturbance of our finances.

GRANNY'S MESSAGE TO JACK.

You're writing out to Jack to-day
Because his birthday's come,
And I must send to him, you say,
A message straight from home.
Dear boy! If I could just sit down
And take his hand in mine,
Instead of putting all my love
In one poor little line,
But write out clear, and let it read—
"To Jack, away from home,
Granny says get ready
For the kingdom come."

You're smiling, daughter, as you write,
But Jack won't smile that way;
His mind will just go tilting back
To thoughts of yestedray,
Before he got so great and tall,
And oh, so very wise,
When he was granny's white-haired boy,
A-dreaming of the skies.
So write out clear, and let it read—
"To Jack, away from home,
Granny says get ready
For the kingdom come."

Somehow the letters that we get
Don't seem to come from him;
And often when I've read them through
My poor old eyes are dim.
He talks too much of worldly things—
Our Jack was never proud—
Of men of wealth, of power and fame,
And going with the crowd.
So write out clear, and let it read—
"To Jack, away from home,
Granny says get ready
For the kingdom come."

[illegible] his birthday calls for more
You th[illegible] such a simple line;
Than a[illegible] are those who love him less
Nay, there [illegible] wishes fine.
To make h[illegible] from a faithful heart;
My words go f[illegible] true and warm;
They're tender, [illegible] in them, too,
With loving wisdo[illegible] harm.
To keep my boy fro[illegible] it read—
So write out clear, and [illegible] ome,
"To Jack, away from [illegible]
Granny says get ready [illegible]
For the kingdom co[illegible]

I'd like to see him as he reads,
His bright eyes brimming o'er,
And good thoughts rising white and strong,
To be forgot no more.
Heaven will be nearer to his heart
Than it has been for years,
For he will read in that one line
My love, my hopes, my prayers.
So write out clear, and let it read—
"To Jack, away from home,
Granny says get ready
For the kingdom come."

THE SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST.

Jim threw another log on the campfire, and the blazing circle of light grew to its old dimensions. We could see the stars dodging back and forth behind the tops of the pines, and the lone coyote who had a monopoly of noises down the gulch was indulging us with a temporary rest. The patriarch occupied the seat of honor, a camp stool, and the rest of us were ranged on a tree trunk.

The patriarch looked at me. "I'll do you the favor," he said, "of filling my pipe with your tobakky. Speakin' of sea yarns, that story of Jim's about the icebergs that hunted in pairs, keepin' a keen lookout to squeeze a ship caught without a breeze, while the polar bears sat by and laughed, was tol'bly good, and the one you told about the thing that could stand on its head on the floor of the ocean and flap the face of heaven with its tail, was purty fair, yes, purty fair. But they war just yarns, plain yarns, neatly unraveled. And that makes me think of what old Absalom Biggs used to say: 'Always tell the truth, my lad, if you're a master smart hand at it.'

"Absalom had a distant relative—he lived in Nantucket, and his brother was anchored in Jamaiky—who bought and sold everything, from queer shells to queer money. His brother was a smart man, nigh as smart as Absalom himself, and he might have lived to be a great one if they had given him plenty of rope. As it was, he war a leetle too high-strung to make a success of life. It's queer how the furriners acquire all of our improvements, even the art of lynchin'.

"Absalom was master and sole proprietor of the good old tradin' brig, Keep Mum. They war two of a kind, Absalom and the brig. Absalom wore a suit of homespun that hung on him like a sail wrapped around a windmill, and the brig was all right if she was only as black as she was painted, for she needed sprucin' up badly, but they war both hard to beat in their deceptive lines, I reckon. The Keep Mum was one of the best of her kind that ever faded out of sight of a revenue cutter, and Absalom was entitled to a patent right on lots of the tricks of his trade. He was a quiet kind of man, though he had a good command of language, resultin' from hard study of circus posters when he was a lad, and the Keep Mum sailed so stilly that the wind couldn't whistle through her riggin' even.

"Now, Absalom was a temperance man from principle and interest, though he wasn't particularly religious and worshiped nothin', so far as I know, except savin's banks. 'Never taste the intoxicatin' cup, young man,' he used to say; 'you might miss a chance to make a dollar.' But just the same, after his brother came aboard at the end of my first trip to Kingston, bringin' with him a mysterious air (kind of strongly scented), Absalom loaded the Keep Mum up with rum. And such rum! In barrels, with rusted hoops and cobwebs clingin' round 'em, they hoisted it on board. The pirates that hid it a century before stored nothin' weak, and every year added to its strength. Our second mate, who was a man of much liquid experience ashore as well as at sea, took a cargo of one cup. It was just three days before he could navigate, and—would you believe it!—for two weeks after that whenever he dreamed of that rum at night he'd wake up in the mornin' tipsy.

"Absalom was a man who glanced over newspapers from curiosity and read trade journals for profit. So I knew somethin' extremely uncommon was up when he spent a whole forenoon porin' over a newspaper, with his elbows on the table and his fingers clutched in his hair; and when I heard him chuckle, I was interested. Absalom Biggs never wasted a chuckle. I heard him say, as he went out of the cabin: 'They're strong in the body, but weak in the head.'

"Of course, I picked up the paper. It told a story of an awful tribe of cannybals who resided on the west coast of Afriky. It seemed they war a tribe of reg'lar bunko-steerers, for all the missionaries who went there war invariably taken in. Then the Queen of England sent down a gunboat, and the captain of the gunboat sent a man with a white flag and a proclamation in violent language to these cannybals. But there was some misunderstandin' about the matter, for the cannybals ate both the gallant tar and the proclamation. It hurt the captain's feelin's very much, so he landed most of his force and went after the heathen. Alas! he didn't know 'em. I disremember all of the affectin' lines the poet larryate wrote about 'em, but the centerpiece of the work run somthin' like this:

"'They war an awful hungry lot,
And havin' nothin' much to do,
Invaygled the tars—the sun was hot—
Into a nice, seclooded spot.
Then ate that gallant crew.'

"Her Majesty missed a reception on account of that, and the foreign secretary missed two first-class races. Then a cruiser went down there on business, but the captain, not bein' onto his job, was shortly on the rocks, and when the men swam ashore, the heathen met 'em with a hearty reception. And it was awful annoyin' after that to the people on the English boats that went sailin' by to see them savvidges a-sittin' on the rocks and sunnin' themselves, dressed in British naval uniforms and sarcastic smiles. And the foreign secretary had taken to his bed. So the papers said.

"'We sail for London to-morrow,' said Absalom Biggs, who was standin' in the doorway with his hands in his pockets. All the information you ever got out of Absalom about his business was volunteered, so I saved my breath by askin' no questions. We sailed with fair weather and a good breeze. All the way over Absalom didn't do anything but walk the deck with his hands in his pockets and a commercial expression on his face. Did I tell you [illegible] didn't unload that rum? [illegible] reached London and Absalom "We [illegible] store suit to go up to put on [illegible] retary. He put one see the for[illegible] his boot and leg of his trou[illegible] he says, one inside, 'for [illegible] don't kn[illegible]' how the foreign [illegible] secretary ha[illegible] You see, Absalom B[illegible] gs could ca[illegible] water on both shoulders [illegible] about as well as anybody. We had to [illegible] about twenty secretaries and assistan[illegible] secretaries, and every blessed one of 'em had an objection, but Absalom outmaneuvered all of 'em. The foreign secretary was sittin' in a chair as if it had been built up around him. 'What do you want?' said he, lookin' at his watch. 'Permission,' says Absalom, 'to catch Wally Bo Logn and his cannybals.' 'You have it,' said the secretary, 'and if you are successful her Majesty will be pleased to extend to you her grateful thanks and gracious commendation.' 'And what might that combination be worth?' asked Absalom Biggs. 'Ten thousand pounds,' said the secretary, shortly. When we had a note to that effect we left.

"So we sailed down the African coast with a cargo part of rum and part of water. We had no firearms. 'Ammynition,' said Absalom, 'costs money.' I didn't understand his plan. Once after a trader had tried to do business and Wally Bo Logn at the same time with rum, but that sly old chap ate the trader first and drank his rum afterward. 'Business before pleasure,' remarked Wally Bo Logn.

"We went inshore at night by the dark of the moon and while the heathen was sleepin' we lightered that rum to land. And then at daybreak we stood off. There along the beach, stood barrel after barrel of rum. And every barrel had a spigot and a bright new tin cup, chained fast, 'for tin cups cost money,' was what Absalom said.

"The heathen came down to look at the brig and speculate about the chances for breakfast; the tin cups caught their eye, and then, pretty soon, the rum caught them. Absalom stood on the upper deck and watched them: 'They're strong in the body but weak in the head.' Then he went down below and read his 'Pilgrim's Progress' and 'Guide to Wealth.'

"In the afternoon Absalom Biggs surveyed the scene again. He seemed kind of pleased. And, finally, when Wally Bo Logn got his marine cap jammed down over his eyes and his lieutenant's sword tangled up with his legs and sat down to unmix himself, Absalom ordered out the boats. 'Take care of all of them that can't take care of themselves,' kindly said he. By nightfall we had all the heathen carefully stowed below.

"'These are your instructions: Keep the brig out of sight of land until further notice.' And Absalom went back to his 'Guide to Wealth.'

"We sailed up and we sailed down. We tacked this way and that, and roamed around at our own free will. One more order we had from Absalom: 'All you need give the savvidges is plenty of water and room to play. No rum,' he added, absent-mindedly, 'for rum costs money.' And then I heard him chuckle again and say: 'They're strong in the body, though weak in the head.'

"Well, we went on a-sailin'. And Absalom consulted me just once more. 'What do you know about 'rithmetical retrogression?' he asked me. I was young in those days—almost young enough to know everything—and, havin' the cannybals on my mind, I answered up smartly: 'The water is a leetle brackish, but the harbor is fair and there are plenty of palms. It hadn't any inhabitants the last time I was there.' 'Never mind,' he said; 'if you take 760 and divide it in two, and then every four days cut your figgers down one-half, how long'll it be until you have only one?' Bein'a little weak on figgers, I said nothing. And then he fell to cipherin'.

"After that Absalom didn't seem to take any interest in our cargo. He usually stayed in the cabin and read. And the Keep Mum kept sailin 'on, sometimes toward the pole. It didn't seem to make any difference to Absalom whether her canvas from skysails to courses was spread to a spankin' breeze or flapped idly in a dead ca'm.

"But finally, one day after he had held a deep consultation with the almanac, our course was laid for London. The morning' we went up the Thames Absalom's interest in our cargo came to life. He lifted up the hatch, careless like, and after a bit Wally Bo Logn's black head appeared. Now, through livin' with and on missionaries Mr. Bo Logn could speak English. 'We're goin' ashore,' said Absalom. 'To eat?' asked Wally Bo Logn. 'Yes,' replied Absalom, and Wally nodded his head. So we disguised him with a linen duster that fitted him rather soon, and added some other clothes by way of adornment; then up went we to the foreign secretary. Between you'n me, he's a better man to do business with than the lord high admiral, not havin' so many titles. The first assistant to somethin' stood in the doorway with his nose tilted skyward. 'We've business with the secretary,' said Absalom. 'And what might your business be?' said his highness, with considerable scorn. 'Eat,' said Wally Bo Logn, and he smiled at him with his meet-you-at-the-messroom smile, and his highness just shrank into nothin'. Then we steered for the secretary's office, and found him at home with the same big chair around him.

"'What do you want?' he said, frownin'. And then Mr. Bo Logn and the secretary sized each other up, for they war two of a kind.

"'Allow me,' said Absalom Biggs, 'to introduce to you Wally B. Logn, king of the Guinny cannibals.'

"'And where are the rest of the tribe?' asked the secretary, impatiently.

"Then Absalom drew himself up to his full height and made his best, best bow. 'They're strong in the body though weak in the head. They're in him,' said Absalom Biggs."

Just then the waiter at the cookhouse sounded his sheet iron supper call and the patriarch rose stiffly, scraping his pipe. "It's supper time, boys," he said.—San Francisco Argonaut.

FOUGHT FOR A CRUST.

Starving Gerhardt Oechsle Steals that He May Be Put in Jail.

Without having had a morsel of food for five days and almost famished and crazed with hunger, Gerhardt Oechsle the other night fought with a lodger in the Cottage Grove avenue police station at Chicago for the possession of a piece of bread.

Desk Sergeant McKinzie happened to make his appearance in the cellroom at the time, and though he tried his best he could not overpower the prisoner, who held on to the bread and litterally [illegible] it down his throat. "Give that [illegible] his bread back," commanded the ser[illegible] "Your supper will be here in a few [illegible] you will get all you want to eat.

"I can't help it," replied the prisoner, "I haven't eaten a thing since Thursday."

The answer astonished even the police officer, hardened by experience to tales of want. He hastened to the nearest restaurant and within a few minutes returned with a tray loaded with a supper. It was a sight worth watching the way Oechsle made the meal disappear. He did not stop to masticate the food, but devoured it with the ferociousness of an animal.

Oechsle broke into jail to get something to eat. He is a stalwart young man, 26 years old and a roofer. He has been out of work several months, and said he was not able to beg enough food to keep him from starving. From Thursday to Monday, he declared, not a crust of bread had passed his lips. He wandered the streets during the day and slept in hallways at night, tired, worn and hungry.

He resolved to get food. He broke into the house of Fred Veneble, 2219 Wabash avenue, and stole a broken bicycle which had not been used for five years. Then he walked down the street and waited for an officer. Detectives Culhane and O'Connell saw him and he told them at once he had stolen to get food. The police doubted the prisoner's story at first. It was not until he had been taken downstairs and had fought for the loaf of bread a lodger was eating that they were convinced of the truth of his statement. The owner of the wheel declared he would not prosecute Oechsle.

Second Story Show Windows.

A new feature of commercial enterprise is the second story show window. This is not only made possible, but imperative on account of the loop of the elevated roads, and already many of the down-town merchants are fitting out their second story windows in resplendent style. As the trains wheel around the vast loop the eyes of the ladies are cheered and gladdened by the sight of handsome cloaks marked down from $12 to $11.99, and furs, ribbons, bonnets, dresses and marvelously beautiful wax women attired in queenly robes stare in on them from the second story windows all along the route.

This will eventually be more a branch of down-town display than it is now, but even now the greatest care is taken to make the display as complete as it is on the ground floors at present. A trip around the loop will soon be a swing around the circle of what interests the shopper and bargain hunters and the down-town merchant on the line of the elevated who has no second story window display will have no need of clerks, for his store will be deserted.

Stores are being remodeled on the second story to admit of better displays and the second story show window has come to stay with us in the utmost splendor and sumptuousness.—Chicago Chronicle.

Realism in Literature.

"The movement for realism in literature has given to the best current fiction a verity and value as a reflection of the times that the novels of no other era possess," writes "Droch" in the Ladies' Home Journal. "This is not saying, by any means, that our novelists are greater than any of previous epochs. But never before could a reader of fiction accumulate a vivid, true and varied picture of so many sides of human nature, so many conditions of actual life. It therefore broadens the horizon of a judicious reader in a way that books of travel never did. It ought to, and often does, broaden the sympathies of the reader, so that the prejudices of class and nationality are broken down, and there is a more charitable judgment of human nature which can't help being 'different.'"

American Feet Are Small.

American women will be gratified to learn that an experienced Parisian saleswoman considers that after the women of Madrid, Peru and Chili they have the smallest feet of any nation in the world. The best shaped feet in Northern Europe are in Sweden.

EARLY DAYS OF OIL.

BEGINNING OF PETROLEUM DAYS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Growth and Collapse of the Tremendous Boom that Followed—One Resident Who Objected to the Greenish Scum and Left for Canada.

The First Strike.

The story of the discovery of oil in Pennsylvania and the stirring incidents connected therewith is an interesting chapter in the country, with which our readers are undoubtedly familiar. But there are many facts of interest prior to the boring of the wells that are known to but few.

COL. DRAKE.

It is related of a discouraged pioneer resident of what afterward became famous as the Oil Creek regions that his interest was sufficiently awakened by reports, which reached him in some way, of possibly rich deposits of coal oil across the Canadian border, to cause him to leave Oil Creek and repair to Canada. One of the objectionable features of the farm he left, according to the story, was the oozing of a greenish scum to the surface of the streams, so much that at the point where his horses and cattle drank it was necessary to construct a surface dam, in order that the animals might drink without being compelled to dip through the noxious deposit floating on the surface of the water. This floating substance was of an oily nature and long had been used in the war paints, rites and medicines of the Indians of the region, from whom it derived its name—Seneca oil. No thought, however, of the immensity of the supply of the multiplied uses to which it might be put was entertained by any one. The oily wealth the restless settler sought in Canada failed to materialize at that time.

Meanwhile, in the form of the despised scum oozing from the old Oil Creek farm he had deserted, it was making the effort nature afforded to force upon the world more fitting recognition of the volume and value of it stored in the hidden natural reservoirs from which it came. This oil found its way to the surface at various points along the [illegible] creek flats, notably in the vicinity of [illegible] mill of Brewer, Watson & [illegible] the lum[illegible] south of Titusville, Co., [illegible] perhaps a m[illegible] put upon Eventu[illegible]ally a high value [illegible] medicinal purposes, and the [illegible] it for me[illegible] principally by the process [illegible]ering of it[illegible] from the water with blankets—became [illegible] quite a profitable business. It also had [illegible] limited use as a lubricant, and a more [illegible] limited use as an illuminant in its crude [illegible] state.

In the days just prior [illegible] to the discovery of oil the Oil Creek [illegible] valley, from Titusville southward to the Allegheny River, or to the present site of Oil City, a distance of about twenty miles, was practically uninhabited. Titusville was a little lumbering village. It was not until 1857 that it was believed that oil existed in sufficient quantities for commercial purposes, and in that year drilling through rock was begun at Titusville under the direction of Col. Edwin L. Drake, who had been a railroad contractor at New Haven, Conn. His salary was to be $1,000 a year and the company had provided him with $1,000 with which to begin the work of sinking a well. The little village afforded but few of the necessary equipments for the work, and the funds were soon exhausted. The company, losing faith in the enterprise and becoming indifferent, failed to advance Col. Drake more money. It was then the latter's troubles began. The drillers he had engaged failed to appear. This was due in part to the report spread over the regions that Drake was crazy in believing that oil would be found by drilling into the rock. But his faith on this point was unshaken, after his study of the salt wells and other investigations of insanity, only served to intensify his determination to demonstrate that the theory was correct. It was not until the middle of June, 1859, that he was able to proceed with the well, and then only from outside assistance.

The First Completed Well.

On Saturday, August 28, 1859, the drill at the shallow depth of 69½ feet, about 35 feet in the rock, dropped into a crevice as the day's work was being finished, and the tools were pulled out until Monday morning. The following day, Sunday, the senior driller, "Uncle Billy" Smith, strolled down to the well and saw what seemed to be oil within a few feet of the top. He dipped an improvised bailer into the well and it came up filled with petroleum. Thus was the first oil well conceived and completed. It was not the first artesian well in which oil was found, but it was the first well sunk for oil.

The period in which the high-tide mark was reached in the regions, in the volume of business, in interest and population, was in the six years following Col. Drake's strike. The climax of that period found 100,000 people in the regions which had been practically a wilderness but a few years before. Though the striking of the Drake well caused feverish excitement at once, an immediate influx of people to the regions and sent skyward the value of lands along the creek, there was a bar to the boom in the limited means for storing and marketing the product. Within three years the supply so much exceeded the demand that the price dropped from 50 cents a gallon to 10 cents a barrel. There were three big wells at this period, which averaged 2,500 or 3,000 barrels a day and several hundred small ones. For lack of storage and shipping facilities a great quantity of oil was wasted. In 1862 a small lake of petroleum was kept between the big Fountain and Empire wells and many a boatload was procured at 10 cents a barrel. In the years 1864 and '65 the boom reached its climax and then began its rapid decline.

NEW AMUSEMENT FOR CHILDREN

A Parlor Merry-Go-Round Which Is Operated by the Foot.

The newest and most popular amusement or game for children is a parlor merry-go-round or carrousel, which is operated by the foot like a bicycle. It is a tiny arrangement, made in two sizes, a ten-foot circle or a fourteen-foot circle. The smaller ones have four seats, but can be arranged with four more, thus seating eight little ones at a time. For ordinary use the smaller ones are popular, the additional seats being adjusted when a larger party wishes to ride. It is noiseless, strong, and handsome, made of hard wood, steel, and iron. The wood is natural oil finish, and the metal parts painted black or bronze. It can be taken apart or put up in five minutes without any tools, and one, two, three, or four can ride it. It runs either forward or backward with equal ease.

While it is made expressly for the house, it can be taken out of doors or to entertainment halls, and in case of warm weather a canopy can be had of either size to protect the children from the heat of the sun. As children are always attracted by a merry-go-round, this one, on a small scale for the home or lawn, will prove exceedingly popular.

The Polar Snow Cap of Mars.

We have received the following information from America: "A telegram received at Harvard Observatory on Jan. 11 from Lowell Observatory, now located near the City of Mexico, says that a rift has been observed since Jan. 7 in the north polar cap of Mars in longitude 40." This "rift" is probably similar to those observed at the opposition of 1894, in the southern cap. [illegible] of Pickering, with a [illegible]-inch telescope, found one in M[illegible] of W. H. [illegible] 22, crossing the cap from lon[illegible]ude 330 to 170. This grew considerable in size, measurements made on June 6 and 15 indicating a width of 100 and 350 miles respectively. Mr. Douglass also during the same month, June 10, detected a second and third rift, the latter running from longitude 170 to 90. The sequence of phenomena observed seems to indicate that they are due to the lower levels at the poles being uncovered; in this way, as the snow melts, the bare ground is exposed, appearing dark in contrast to the snow still lying on the more elevated heights. Their broadening is then a natural result of the departing snow, and indicates that the polar cap is at that time in a far advanced state of disintegration.—Nature.

The Vendish Tongue in Germany.

Consul General De Kay writes for the Century a paper on the Serbian Swamp Vendland under the title of "An Inland Venice." Mr. De Kay says: These people speak German to the lordings as we pass Vendish to our boatman; but the Vendish is disappearing because, for the sake of the army, its teaching is discouraged. Throughout all this district, far over into Saxony, only a few churches still offer sermons in the old tongue. Yet if the Vendish tongue disappears the names of places will tell the tale, even as such names in Brandenburg and Saxony still do. Dresden, Leipzig, there are Vendish words—or call them Slavic, with the broader term that now means the race. And hereabout are Cottbus, Vetschau, Muschen, Brahmow, Babow, Dlugy, Raddush, Leipe, Lehde, Byhleguhre, Straupitz and Lubben. And the fliesses that wind or shoot straight in and out of forest and cleared fields retain Vendish names: Mutnica, Blushnitza, Rogazo, Zschapigk, Polenzo-Grobilitzo, and Nabasatz. Efforts have been made to give German names to many of them, but country people everywhere are great holders to precedent, and the people who stick so tightly to their old costume are not going to give up their place names without a struggle.

To Revolutionize Can-Making.

One of the pioneer fruit-canners of California has just perfected an invention that will revolutionize the can-making industry. His machine can be operated by a child. It is fed at one end with sheets of tin of the proper size, and it turns out at the other end sixty-four cans of any size every minute. At this rate the machine will produce 38,400 cans in ten hours. All the joining of seams and soldering is done by parts of the machine. With a number of these machines one factory would be able to supply all the cans used on that coast for fruit, vegetables and salmon at one-tenth of the present cost.

Very few people realize the solemnity of attaching their signature to a note.

LIGHT AND HEAT ABUNDANT.

And at a Cost that Even the Poorest Can Afford Details.

Fancy lighting a six-room dwelling house with the finest illuminating gas known for about 60 cents a month, and at the same time free from the regular visits of the meter-man. Imagine, if you can, heating a fair-sized room with a globe that can be moved from place to place and not give the slightest odor nor be the least bit dangerous, for about 2 cents a day when the weather is so cold it has to be burned all the time. Fancy doing the cooking for a large family for about 30 cents a month and without any more trouble than an ordinary gas stove gives. Truly this seems like some Utopian dream, but in fact is one of the assured possibilities of the near future. And this will all come about through the production of the wonderful substance known as calcium carbide.

It is less than two years since the discovery of a means of manufacturing this valuable material, and during that time hundreds of men have been at work in all parts of the world trying to find methods for its practical production. From all that can be learned this has been found in San Francisco.

Calcium carbide will yield the finest illuminating gas known, and at about one-tenth the cost of common coal gas. It can be produced in a generator no bigger than a wash tub in quantities sufficient to light a large-sized dwelling. Such an apparatus costs only a few dollars, and is beyond the possibility of getting out of order. Calcium carbide will also produce absolutely pure alcohol at a cost of not more than 3 cents a quart. This will also be free from fusel oil and all other impurities so that as good whisky can be made from it in twenty minutes as can be produced by the old method of distillation in twenty years. But of course, the importance of the alcohol lies in the fact that it will be cheap enough to burn and be free from all danger and odor.

Mr. Ralph L. Van der Naillen, of the School of Engineering of San Francisco, has been doing the experimenting in the production of calcium carbide, and it is to his efforts that the cost of it has been cut down to almost nothing. By the methods heretofore employed, the lowest cost was 12 cents per pound; Mr. Van der Naillen has reduced that to 1½ cents per pound.

After the product is made its usefulness begins. To make acetylene gas it is only necessary to put the calcium carbide in water. There is a sizzling like burning lime and the vapor generated is inflammable. If the carbide is placed in an inverted bucket in a pan of water the gas will be retained and can be allowed to escape as needed. A pound of calcium carbide will generate five cubic feet of gas, or enough to produce a 125-candle-power light for four hours. This, distributed through five or six burners, will be enough to light an ordinary dwelling the whole evening with a light about twice as strong as those in general use. The generator is simplicity and cheapness. Only two tanks. The lower is partly filled with water and the upper is placed open end down into it. A valve is opened to allow the air to escape until it sinks. The carbide is then put in and in a very few minutes there will be gas all over the house. As there is no pressure anywhere it must follow that there can be no explosion unless light is forced into the tank, an operation almost impossible, as one can find out by trying to do the same thing to an ordinary coal oil lamp.

George Miller, a graduate of Hamburg University, Germany, is at present experimenting with the product of calcium carbide. He has been trying a stove that seems to be all that is required. It is in the form of a globe and when filled with a quart of alcohol will remain almost red hot for twelve or fifteen hours.

Everybody who knows an amateur photographer is familiar with the excuses that are presented for failures. Sometimes these excuses strain the credulity a little.

"Well, did you succeed."

"Succeed? No! It must have moved just as I exposed the plate."

Music for Deaf Mutes.

A society of deaf mutes in New York held its annual ball the other night. The ball was practically the same as any other, with the exception that the music was somewhat louder than usual, causing greater vibrations, for it is by these vibrations alone that the deaf mutes are enabled to keep time with the music.

Expert Ernest' Report.

We Give It To our Readers in Part And all may Understand it.

We this week lay before, our readers, the much discussed report made by Mr. Ernest, the expert employed by the county to go over the books of county officers for the past six years, and see what crookedness has been done. At the time he did this work, he did not refer any of the Coffinberry crookedness to Mr. Borst, as the latter was only the deputy. Of course, the more recent developments in the grand jury have changed things a great dea and resulted in bringing Mr. Borst to the front. But the report of Mr. Ernest will throw much light on the various transactions. The report is very long, and we are obliged to omit the merely formal parts, which would interest but few, and also omit some of the tables, which are merely copies of records.

MR. COFFINBERRY.

Mr. Ernest, after some formal talk, says:

I have checked and compared all warrants drawn by him on the county treasurer, with the stubs of the same. his register of warrants issued, and with the authorization of the same, viz: Commissioners' Court Records, Dockets, Ditch Records, Clerk's Certificates. I find that Mr. Coffinberry drew to his own order, certain warrants, without allowance or authority, which are shown in detail in schedule marked "B." (We give a few of these orders, or warrants, as Mr. Ernest calls them.)

EXHIBIT B.

No.	Series	Face.	Interest.
1819	K	$ 11 00	$ 87
1857	"	42 00	3 24
68	L	11 00	68
246	"	238 65	18 92
247	"	200 00	15 83
97	M	18 00	1 55
553	"	268 70	29 72

And so on, for 81 of these orders for various amounts, from $3, up to $268,70. The total amount is $3,988.45, which with the interest figured on them would amount to $4,325.38, orders drawn without authority.

RAISED ORDERS.

Mr. Ernest continues:—

I also charge H. N. Coffinberry with following items and amounts.

No.	Series	Raise.
821	L	$100
822	"	$100
858	"	$100
1038	"	$100
382	M	$200
839	"	$ 10
1911	"	$100
1013	"	$200
1264	"	$100

On these raises, he computes the interest and adds all the amount of false orders in "exhibit B." making against Coffinberry $5,411.65, besides a difference of $26.65 in school revenue.

SAWVEL'S ACCOUNT.

Mr. Ernest says:

I also find certain warrants drawn in favor of and receipted for by Reuben Sawvel which are unauthorized and which I have charged to his account. Here follows a list of small errors, which Mr. Sawvel has since paid up, and a list of the costs of publishing delinquent taxes, that he should have collected back from the taxpayers. He probably did collect a large part of it, but made no report of it. He now pays back about two thirds of it.

PAID BACK.

(The following items with interest have been paid back by Sawvel since Ernest made his report.)

Order in his favor to balance short age in school fund.....$ 62.41
Order drawn to balance state funds.....$485.76
Another for same, both improperly drawn.....$720.56
Order drawn when bill was not allowed..... $ 63.00
Amount of "raise" in order No. 286 M.....$100.00
Another order where Amount had already been paid.....$251.82
And 8 others, making a total of.....$4016.71

All of which with interest, Sawvel has now paid back. It is this lot of bad orders that it was supposed Sawvel and Borst each paid a half, as each was supposed equally guilty in raising or forging. It now appears that Borst did not pay his half. There are two entries in red ink accompanying each of these items. The first shows that on Feb. 22, Sawvel paid one half of each item including interest. The second red ink entry shows that on either Feb. 24, or Feb. 27, he paid the other half, the total amount paid back by him, being as above stated. From this it would appear that Borst paid nothing back, if we except some forged or raised orders amounting to $700 or $800 which were bought up by his father-in-law, L. J. Miller.

Mr. Ernest also finds that Coffinberry ha l overdrawn the ditch fund, from Nov. 1890 to Nov 1894, to the amount of $8.545.60. But this he says may be accounted for in part by a discrepancy in the accounts of J. M. Hook.

HOOK'S ACCOUNT

Here Mr. Ernest discusses irregularities in Mr. Hook's accounts. some of which he, Ernest, is not able to explain. After giving a full list of the orders drawn by Mr. Hook on account of ditch work, he names two orders drawn in Hook's favor that should not have been drawn. One was for $118.-84 cents for fees in a road and ditch matter, which he says the petitioners paid him themselves; and another in the Lackey ditch of $168.23 which Mr. Ernest says had been already paid in orders that he names.

He then charges against Hook, the "raises" in the following orders.

No.	Series		Raise
1540	M	.....	$ 29 70
1804	"	.....	$100 00
1418	N	.....	$100 00
1415	L	.....	$100 00
1417	M	.....	$100 00

Both the above sets of items, are, as we understand it, the cause of the two indictments against Hook, and which he is getting ready to fight in court, as he claims he is not responsible for them. There is another item charged against him, a bill of $110.05 which Ernest says Hook had collected, and afterwards sold the same account to Frank Scholes. We believe this item is also in the coming lawsuit.

"EXHIBIT C."

This list includes all orders made for sums greater than the bill allowed by the commissioners. He gives date of making, and the page of the commissioners' Record in which the bill was allowed, may be found. We give only the No., series, year, and amount allowed, and amount shown in order drawn

No.	Series	Year	Allowance.	Order.
1917	K	1891	$23 60	$26 30
335	L	91	9 80	19 80

1022	"	94	8 00	68 00
TOTALS			$326 92	$916 98

Showing a net gain to those who got the orders cashed, of $590.06 over and above the bills allowed.

"EXHIBIT D."

Mr. Ernest says: I also find that a number of warrants were drawn for sums larger than that shown on the corresponding stub, showing that such warrants had been raised or altered after being issued.

No.	Series	Year	Stub.	Order.
1840	K	1891	$61 00	$91 87
248	L	91	5 00	25 00
655	"	92	9 00	59 00
957	"	92	40 50	50 40
1050	"	92	23 76	76 23
1087	"	92	30 00	50 00
1403	"	92	6 00	16 00
1415	"	92	30 00	130 00
1782	"	92	81 00	181 00
1827	"	92	20 00	40 00
1907	"	92	20 00	40 00
6 9	M	93	12 00	42 00
623	"	93	8 00	80 00

And so on of 45 in all, with a total of $1,798 62, which is raised to a total of $4,994.58, a gain of $3,195.96 to those who handled them. Take notice of the peculiar manner in which many of the figures were changed. The orders also had the amounts written in words, but the words were changed by interlining, and many other ways that we cannot give.

"EXHIBIT E."

This, Mr. Ernest says. "Is a large number of warrants drawn in favor of sundry persons, which are unauthorized." By this, we suppose he means, that no bills allowed by the Board, have been found for them. This would leave their condition too uncertain as the bills may yet be found. The list contains the names of well known people all over the county, and outside of it in many cases. Some of the orders may be all right. But some may have been drawn payable to any person whose name happened to come into the drawer's mind at that time. Several names appear to favor this last idea, as mistakes in the name, quite natural on such a supposition often appear, as for instance, "W. H. Andrews & Co.," when the writer evidently intended to name the well known manufacturers, "A. H. Andrews & Co." But we refrain from publishing this list, not only because, as we said before, many of the orders are probably genuine, but because the publication of the names would result in injury to innocent parties. We have no doubt but some of the orders are bad. Their total amount is $9,961.72. The Board have since found the proper bills for a great many of these orders. But probably the amount of bad ones is $2,000.

EXHIBIT F.

This is a list of 66 order stubs not signed or receipted by anyone. It cannot be said how these happened to be unsigned. As there is nothing to be shown but the number on the stub, we omit it.

In explanation of the fact that Mr. Borst is not brought in as one of those accused, it should be said that the investigation was made, not so much for the men, as for the office. For instance Mr. Coffinberry's account in this report, was for that office, although it is supposed that at least a part of the forgeries found chargeable to the office, were done by Borst. Of course the people understand that the indictments that have been made, were based on matters that came before the grand jury. Mr. Ernest's investigations were useful in laying bare the condition of things, but the grand jury had the real work of indicting and bringing into court, of the men accused.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

BUTLER.

Dr. Kester, a former Wilmington township boy has purchased the Simon Ochs property on East Oak street, and will soon add one more to an overflowing list of physicians. Good health in this vicinity means slim fare for the sons of physic.

Postmaster Oberlin has purchased a tasty residence on South Broadway, and will occupy it soon.

May Bruce, long afflicted with lung trouble, is slightly improved.

Mrs. Oliver Oberlin is seriously ill at this writing.

Rev. Disbro of the M. E. church went to conference at Kokomo last Tuesday. He will probably be returned.

Mrs. J. A. Campbell is caring for a sick sister near Angola.

So far the county eruption has not unearthed anything derogating to the citizens of Butler—Patches of wood still intervene until daylight.

—J. A. campbell made a business trip to Spencerville and St. Joe last Thursday. He reports the worst roads passed over in years.

The Smith Brothers (twins) filled the U. B. pulpit alternately last week and the casual observer was totally at sea, as to whether it was the one or the other that was rendering the discourse. Their voices were so nearly identical, that an artist in sound could hardly distinguish the one from the other, and their faces—well there was just one face for both of them, and each one had it, when the other was not in sight. They possess marked pulpit ability, and the only wonder is that they are not filling stations in cities of 10,000 people, instead of the villages of Butler and Hicksville.

A. J. Price has sold his interest in the feed store to Anthony and Janson, who will now conduct it.

—Dr. Wood, of Angola, was on our street to-day.

Important to Reason Your Future Interest!

EVERY Breeder and Stock Raiser seems slow to consider his best interests. When market values are low they imagine, because prices are below the ordinary range of past markets, that the future can not change the present condition of affairs.

Experience in the past teaches us that a man who engages in the Breeding of Stock, when everybody else disposes of his surplus, is sure to reach the best market for what he produces. The man who engages when every body else is seeking the same investment is certain to lose upon his efforts The secret is, go into business when stock is low and sell out when stock is high.

Therefore, it is plain to be seen that our Breeders have become discouraged and abandoned the breeding for the past three years, until we seldom see a colt at its mother's side, and our horse buyers are searching for good horses. The time has come when only the best horses will be in demand.

Why not wake up and continue to breed the best, and reap the harvest of a future market?

How shall we do this?

There is but one way. The BLACK PERCHERON is the superior horse for draft, and the CLEVELAND BAY for general use. Solid bred colors, smooth in conformation, docile and kind in disposition, and the only true bred horses that will cross satisfactorily on all grades of mares.

Therefore, the only way is to breed your mares to the Black Percheron or Cleveland Bay, Which will make the Spring and Fall Season of 1897 at D. N. Myers' Livery and Sale Stable, and Farmers Feed Barn in Auburn, Ind.

OTHER POSTMASTERS

After making the statement in regard to the new Auburn postmaster, Mr. Forkner, we have learned of a few others at smaller towns in the vicinity. At Topeka, in Steuben county, the new man is to be Adam J. Hartzler; at Newville, in this county, is to be Ora D. Imhoff; at Harlan, in Allen Co., it will be Charles A. Starr, proprietor of the Starr Hotel there; at Cromwell, in Noble county, it is to be Walter S. Kiser.

NOTICE OF ADMINISTRATION

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned has been appointed by the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, of the County of DeKalb, State of Indiana, Administrator of the estate of Margaret E Barton, deceased, late of DeKalb Co.

Said estate is supposed to be solvent.

JOHN D. WILLIAMS,
March 10th 1897. Administrator.

Rose & Rose, Attorneys for estate.

COURT NOTES.

Daniel Oberlin was fined $10 and costs for violating liquors laws.

D W. Tombowe got $20 and costs for visiting gambling room.

The cases against Othmur Baxter and Frank Fee for visiting gambling rooms, was dismissed

George White and wife and Charles Clouse and wife, the people charged with stealing house furniture down in Jackson township were called into court a few days ago, but pleaded not guilty Their trial is not set yet.

Attorney Morris, of Ft Wayne, was in the court room to-day. He is a son of Judge John Morris so well known here.

Judge Wilson, a prominent attorney died at Bluffton yesterday says a telegram to Judge Penfield.

Friday all day, was taken up with the binder case of the Buckeye Co. vs J. N. Cole. All the testimony was in by evening, and at the evening session, the attorneys made their pleas. It was submitted to the jury, and they decided in favor of the Buckeye Co. giving them a judgment for $35.

Saturday morning came on the case between A. T. Smith and Balis Boyer, over the estate of the late Adam Boyer. Roby & Link were attorneys for Smith, while C. M. Philips and J. E. Rose, were on the other side. It was a suit as to how the property should be used to secure the rights claimed on both sides: to share the crops, etc. etc. It is a very complicated case, and leads to a discussion of the arrangement that Adam Boyer and wife made with Mr. and Mrs. Smith as to their maintainance during their last years, and also the renting out of the old home farm

Warren Fee got a fine of $20, and Philip Waters of $10 for visiting a gaming room.

Judge E L. Wilson, who many years ago was judge of this circuit, died, at his home in Bluffton as noted last week. He will be remembered by by many of our older citizens.

Frank Jackson got $20 and costs for gaming.

The divorce case of Owen vs Owen came up Thursday, and the lady having proved that her husband had failed to support her, was granted a divorce.

The fight over the Adam Boyer estate is still going on and will hardly end to-day.

A young fellow was brought over from Butler this morning and lodged in jail. This was done on special invitation of some young woman over there.

Monday morning the work began before the Judge, and one of the cases against J. G. Johnson, now of Angola, was brought up. The jury could not be got together until afternoon, as one of them could not reach here except over the noon train on the B. & O. So the Boyer case that was on trial Saturday was set for 1 p. m. to-day.

We note a few odd cases that came off at odd times last week.

Alice Friedt was divorced from John B. and given her maiden name of Simon. Silvia Ewers was divorced from Albert Ewers, and Mary Vogtman from Eli Vogtman.

The case of Theodore Eberly to declare Samuel Somelrott of unsound mind wan dismissed plaintiff.

Wm. Lieberenz got judgment in his case against Hamman but dismissed his case against Smith & Hoffelder.

PROBATE DOCKET.

S. Eagon, M. D. was allowed a claim of $60 against the Geo. Killian estate.

The claim of S. W. Otis against the Eliza Blaker estate was settled by a set-off.

Drs. Nusbaum and Sparling were allowed $14 against the Thos. Kirst estate, and J. R. Culbertson was allowed $20 against the same.

The grand jury room is being repaired, or rather refurnished and carpeted It began to look badly torn up having had a hard time of late.

When we closed our court report yesterday, the Boyer Will case was going on. The witnesses were all through soon after, and in the evening the attorneys made their pleas. There was a good deal of interest attached to the case, and their speeches were strong and vigorous. It was then given to the jury who after full deliberation gave the plaintiffs $70.

The first jury case that came up to-day was one of the cases against Smithfield. It was to collect money due for some road scraper purchased a few years ago. Ab Kelley, acting as agent for Chicago jobbers sold the township trustee some road scrapers, which the supervisors said they needed. Now the present trustee refuses to pay on the ground as we understand it, that the former trustee had bought them when the township did not need them. It will likely be quite an important case.

After a full hearing, the Judge decided in favor of the township, which, therefore will not have to pay for the scrapers.

Judge McClellan has received word that the Ft. Wayne Electric Light Co. that has a suit against the Garrett Electric Light and Water Co. has agreed to settle without a suit. We presume now the other companies that are suing the Garrett Co. will settle also, if some fair basis can be agreed on.

In the Road Scraper case from Smithfield the township's attorneys are Rose & Rose and Leas; for the other side, are Phillips and Welsheimer.

DOGGY! DOGGY!!

Your Master Must Put Up the Cash When the Assesor Comes Around.

Many persons are just awakening to the fact that the recent lesislature passed a "dog law," with an emergency clause, so it is now in force.

The new act imposes a multitude of additional duties upon the township assessors and the township trustees. The most radical change from the old law is that owners of dogs shall pay the tax on them direct to the assessor, instead of making payment at the time taxes are paid. Under the law, the owner must pay $1 for one male dog, if he owns but one, $2 for each additional male dog and $3 for each female dog. The law says that the township assessor and his deputies must make careful search for dogs, and must collect from the owners, the tax imposed. Every deputy assessor must give bond, with freehold security, that he will account for all the money he collects, and must carry a receipt book with a stub end. Whenever he receives money, he must fill out a receipt stating the kind of dog, the name of its owner and various other things. The stub, which he is to retain, will be, in part a duplicate of the receipt which goes to the owner of the dog. Under the law, if the fee is not paid, any person is authorized to kill the dog on sight, and the owner is liable to a fine before any justice of the peace for not having paid his tax. If a constable has an impression that a certain man has not paid his dog tax he can look at this list, and if he finds that the tax is unpaid he can forthwith make complaint against the owner and bring him into court. It is provided that any person who "does not give in his dogs" and pay the cash for them may be subject to a fine of from $5 to $20. Under the law it will "go hard with dogs that are in the habit of taking trips away from home unaccompanied by their masters." The law authorizes any person to kill such dogs on sight.

POSTMASTER FORKNER.

Auburn's Next Official has Been Named, and the COURIER is Satisfied.

Tuesday's Daily.

Yesterday morning, G. H. Forkner received a telegram from Washington stating that he would probably be appointed postmaster of Auburn to succeed Mr. Brandon. At noon, he received a letter from Senator Fairbanks announcing that he had sent in Mr. Forkner's name for the position at Auburn. This we presume settles the matter, as Mr. Fairbanks is in the saddle in this district. If the member of Congress of this district was a republican, he would control the matter. But as Mr. Robinson is a democrat, all postoffices and other appointments in the district must be made by the republican U. S. Senator. We presume therefore the matter is fully settled. Mr. Brandon has till November next to hold the office, as it has become the settled policy of the department to let all postmasters in the larger towns, serve the full term of four years from date of commission We believe Mr. Forkner's selection will give good satisfaction to a majority of our people. Of course there are the friends of the numerous other applicants who will not be suited. But this is always the case. The COURIER is as well suited with Mr. Forkner, as with anyone, and realizes it is not our business. All we ask is to have the office properly managed, and under Mr. Forkner we feel sure it will be. The appointment will be a surprise to many, as not a few of our people did not know he was an applicant. But it appears, he had friends who stood in very close with the new senator, and felt confident from the start.

Since writing the above we learn that while Mr. Forkner had strong petitions ready to send, he had not yet sent them in, but was getting them ready to send in to Mr. Fairbanks when the telegram from a friend came, saying he was likely to be the man. He however concluded he would finish up his letters to Fairbanks, and send them and the petitions together, but before this was completed and the package in the postoffice, he got the letter from Fairbanks. We suppose now he will till send the petitions. He seems to have struck a lucky vein in politics.

MAE HALL GONE.

Made a Statement to the Coroner and Has left For Wayne.

Sunday afternoon Miss Mae Hall made a sworn statement to the Coroner and a couple other persons that she did not remember of seeing Will Colerick upon the night he called. Her last recollection was of going to her home and sitting there alone, awaiting his arrival. She claimed to have been reading a newspaper when she felt herself growing faint and succumbed. This was on Thursday evening. This is the last she remembered until she regained consciousness at the hospital on Saturday.

The statement can in no way assist in solving the deep mystery. The coroner can not, as he supposed, render a verdict upon the testimony of Mae Hall. He must look for it elsewhere, and this he will do to the best of his ability.

Miss Hall has left for Walla Walla, Wash., with her mother, and the Fort Wayne scenes are probably hidden from her sight forever. The question is, has she told all she knows about the tragedy.

A DICKENS NIGHT AT THE HENRY'S OPERA HOUSE.

We congratulate Manager Henry upon a notable engagement that of Miss Jane Coombs, one of the world's greatest actresses who will appear here on April 1, her marvelous creations of Lady Dedlock and Hortense in Charles Dickens' masterpiece "Bleak House" supported by her superb company.

NOTICE TO NON RESIDENTS.

Free Stop-over at Washington

On all through tickets between the east, west, north and south, reading via Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, a stop-over at Washington can be secured, without extra charge for railroad fare, by depositing the ticket, upon arrival at Washington, with the B. & O. station ticket agent at that point. Washington is always attractive to visitors, and particularly so while Congress is in session. This arrangement for stop-over privilege will doubtless be appreciated by the public, and will bring to the National Capital many travelers to view its superb public buildings, monuments, museums and thorough fares.

YENOWINE BEATS THEM ALL.

Robert L. Inverness, one of the best known men in his line in Buffalo, N. Y., writes: "A friend induced me to try YENOWINE, and now I am doing all I can to induce others who suffer as I did to use that great German remedy It made a man of me, and I had been a wreck for ten years. I am sound today, with pure blood, solid nerves and all my powers strong. You are at liberty to use my name anywhere and at any time." YENOWINE will do wonders, it never fails. Can be taken by old or young, male or female, and it does all that is claimed for it. Send $1 direct to the company for two months treatment. Address American Yenowine Company, Bowling Green Offices, Broadway, New York.

Compulsory School Law.

When our people face the new law, there will be a better knowledge of it. Several new officers will have to be appointed in each county. These appointments will be made by State Supt. Geeting, assisted by the secretary of the State Board of Charities and the County School Superintendent. Two persons besides these, will assist in each county. Then when the "truant officers" are appointed their business will be to see that every child of the required age is in the school, or else able to give a good reason why. These officers will be chiefly in the incorporated towns and will be paid $2 a day. They may not be very popular with the boys when fishing is good, but we predict they will earn their money. Who ll volunteer to be the "truant officer" in Auburn?

CLEVELAND'S FINAL SALARY.

Washington, March 20.—The government closed its account with Grover Cleveland to-day and sent him a warrant for $277,78 for services from March 1 to 3 inclusive. The warrant was what is called a "settlement warrant," which means that the books balance.

The President receives his salary of $50,000 per annum in monthly installments. In order to make the monthly payments come out even he is paid $4,166,67 for the first nine months and $4,166,66 for each of the remaining three months. The outging President receives the salary of the office up to midnight of March 3, and the salary of the coming President begins at that hour. This arrangement was made many years ago, because the treasury department does not recognize any fraction of a day in the payment of salaries.

The warrant sent to Mr. Cleveland to-day completes the sum of $400,000 which has been paid to him since he first became President.

Mr. Cleveland holds the smallest warrant that was ever issued by the treasury. It amounts to 1 cent, and was issued to him to cover balance due on his salary for the month of June, 1895. He has never cashed this warrant and will probably hold it as a curiosity. By an oversight he was paid only $4,166.60 that month, though it was one of the months when it should have been $4,166 67. So they drew the extra order for that extra cent.

Save The Children.

When children are attacked with cough, cold and croup, Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup will prove a quick and sure cure. Mr. Elmer E. Baker, Blandon, Pa., writes: "We have used Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup for cough, cold and croup, and found it the best cough medicine and cure for these affections. We never run out of it, but always keep it on hand." Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is sold everywhere for 25 cents. Insist on having it.

Money Ain't So Plentiful

In these piping times of peace that people care to waste it. When one reflects how many hours of labor, how many sacrifices and denials are enclosed within the disc of that shining bit of precious metal we call "a dollar," what wonder people hesitate to part with it except for value received. If the testimony of the throngs of people who were with us during the past few days can be relied upon, we give for the money

—A young man over in Springfield township, Allen county, left the democrats last fall and voted for McKinley, on the belief that he would be given an office. He lately went to Indianapolis to call on Governor Mount in the belief that an office might be had. He failed, and has gone insane. He couldn't have had a very strong mind it the first place. His flopping to McKinley shows that.

—Expert Ernest arrived Monday noon and commenced his work at once. It is understood he is examining the records to see how the Surveyor and Sheriff stand.

—L. C. Huter, treasurer of Allen County was in the city yesterday, he is contemplatihg building a barn and came up to look at the roof on Dr. Fitch's barn. While here he called on Treasurer Hines and gave him an insight as to the way the treasurer's office in Allen County is run.

—Sol. Barney, of St. Joe, and Jas. W. Clark, of Ashley, were on our streets yesterday.

—The baby of Mr. and Mrs. Grim, which was being raised by its Grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Amos Hilkey in Jackson township, was buried Sunday at Cedar Chapel. It was one year and four months of age. We did not learn what caused its death.

—Steuben Republican:—Waterloo has a telegraphic liar and Auburn has a telephone liar. The latter sprung a falsehood on the DAILY COURIER last week regarding the burglarizing of a saloon at the south end of that town, and the next day the COURIER very pertinently exposed the young fabricator, Brown Rufner, and added: "Such a galoot ought to be kicked over the bridge and back again on the sharp point of a fashionable boot." That's the correct idea. Any person who stoops so low as to report falsehoods to or trick an editor or newspaper reporter, deserves being given a public notice in the next issue of the paper he caused to falsify, We are gratified to see Bro. Barnes' grit in print. Let others follow.

—The Chicago dailies which reached here this morning brought the news that the Corbett and Fitzsimon fight was over and that Fitz. had won the money. The DAILY COURIER gave its readers all this last night one hour after the fight was over. If you want the latest news, both home and foreign, drop your Chicago daily and subscribe for the DAILY COURIER and you'll get it fresh.

The Record says, "The COURIER is simply making itself ridiculous and showing about how little it knows about affairs in general by its continued attacks on Stroh." —Now let us see. "Affairs in general" may mean the war in Greece or in Cuba, or the big floods now doing great damage, or the Pearl Bryan case. So we suppose the Record means to say our attacks on Stroh prove we do not know much about these general subjects. Great head for reasoning, the Record must have. But we keep challenging these editors to deny the truth of what we said of Stroh. That will end the matter. Prove he did not take fees he was not entitled to. Prove he did not a few days ago, pay them back. That will show whether you are right or whether we know what we are talking about. If you don't like to hear the COURIER talk about the matter, why do you keep digging it up?

—Justin Girardot made us his usual financial settlement Saturday.

—Hon. J. M. Robinson in writing the COURIER from Washington alludes to the sad fate of Will Colerick, and speaks of the bright prospects of that brilliant young attorney. Mr. Robinson says he cannot believe that Mr. Colerick took his own life. He believes the tragedy the result of suffocation by gas, and altogether accidental.

—The Degree of Honor ladies will give an entertainment at their hall, Saturday evening at which time a small program will be rendered and the beautiful silk quilt now to be seen in Raut & Co's. store will be disposed of. Only those holding tickets on the quilt are expected to attend.

—Social at the Presbyterian church, next Wednesday evening.

—A good recommendation for Simmons Liver Regulator is, that it is purely vegetable and strongly tonic. Then too, it is better than pills because easier taken in liquid or powder and no griping, while the relief from Constipation, Biliousness, Sick Headache and Dyspepsia is quick and sure. "I find Simmons Liver Regulator a very safe and valuable family medicine.—Rev. J. M. Rollins, Fairfield, Va.

—Wool is being imported so rapidly now, on account of the probable rise in the tariff, that we will soon have enough to last a year or two, and then the new law will not raise any revenue from that source for some time. Now it is proposed to pass the wool tariff at once, and stop this big importation.

—Bro. Campbell, of the Anderson Herald, has purchased a Mergenthaler type-setting machine and after May 1st his paper will appear in a new dress. The machine does not set type, but makes type, and with a speed of a column and a half an hour. It cost $3,100.

—John W. Pepple at Hillsboro, Texas write us, as to the irregular way the COURIER comes to him. Well, friend John, we send it from the office every Thursday morning with a printed label, and do not understand why it does not get through. The only reasonable solution we can think of just now, is, that at sometime or other one of the wrappers burst open, and the postal clerk read the paper, and was so pleased that he has been opening them ever since.

—C. A. Rafter was home over Sunday. On Saturday, he and Mr. Culbertson sold their interest in the hoop factory at the Junction, to the other member of the firm, Mr. Liniger. Mr. Liniger will continue the business as heretofore, and Mr. Rafter, and Mr. Culbertson will be enabled to give all their attention to the new factory at Jasper, a few miles east of Adrain. As this change has been made we suppose Mr. Rafter will now move his family to Jasper. Both families were desirable people, and we would have been pleased to have them remain in Auburn. But business is business.

Isaac Keenan, a colored man under a life sentence in the Baltimore penitentiary, sent $5 to the city marshal to be used in aiding the distressed poor of the city.

In France hospitals for infectious diseases are furnished with telephones, so that the sick may converse with their friends without danger of communicating disease.

A canary owned by a Baltimore musician is said to sing at a signal from him, given on the violin, the "Popagano" from Mozart's "Magic Flute." He has had the bird two years.

There was a large increase last year in the farm produce imported into England. The increase in butter alone is estimated at over a million sterling, and of cheese at a quarter of that sum.

It is stated that the recent loan of $5,000,000 made to the Brazilian Government by the new French bank established at Rio de Janiero was made at the rather unusual rate of 8 per cent. per annum.

West Virginia's Supreme Court having affirmed a decision under the State law requiring all oleomargarine sold there to be colored pink, the matter, it is said, is likely to be carried to the Federal court.

One of an order of rat traps which a Christian County, Kentucky, farmer ordered from a neighboring city reached him with half a dozen rats in it, which it was supposed had been caught at some station.

A few years ago 4,500,000 bronze 2-cent pieces were set afloat. Three million of these are still outstanding. Three million 3-cent nickel pieces are scattered over the United States, but it is very rarely that one is seen.

An unusual report came from Etowah County, Alabama, when the records of the United States Marshal of that district for 1896 were made up. It appeared that not a moonshiner had been disturbed there during the year.

In speaking of a performance of "Hamlet" in a North Carolina town, the critic of the local newspaper remarked: "The plot of the play and the history upon which it is based is too well known to need any description at this late day."

A project is on foot for the construction of a new railway across the Alps. It is announced that a group of capitalists in Piedmont have memorialized the Italian Government for permission to construct a railway crossing the great St. Bernard.

A New York paper has figured up the cost of inaugurating a President, and makes the total sum more than $2,500,000. Of this amount of money all but 6 per cent. is computed as being spent by sightseers in transportation and in expenses to Washington.

The wily Japanese are invading the Indian market with manufactured articles fraudulently labeled "U. S. A." There is a large supply of "Waterbury clocks," all made at Osaka, and "Belmont sperm candles," professing to come from New York, are common.

The largest bog in Ireland is the bog of Allen, which stretches across the center of the island, east of the Shannon, and covers nearly 250,000 acres. Altogether, there are nearly 3,000,000 acres of bog in Ireland—that is to say, about one-seventh of the total area of the country is bog.

Next to gold and diamonds, wool is the most important of South African exports, and upon its value in the European and American markets colonial pastoral prosperity or adversity closely depends. Wool-growing in South Africa has been almost contemporaneous with British occupation.

A Kentucky paper has discovered that so far as the tax assessor's books show there are in its county only twelve diamonds, a very few pianos of a very cheap character, and $100 worth of paintings, and it "can't understand it." Why, it asks, do the local 400 wear so much paste jewelry as they apparently do?

The contracting builders of a new court-house in Baltimore are endeavoring to procure eight large marble columns, to be placed at the main entrance, on Calvert street. They are to be monolithic, thirty-two feet high and a little more than four feet in diameter. Where to procure blocks of the proper color is the first inquiry.

The crushing effects of the Russian censorship are sufficiently indicated by the fact that the great work of the eminent French publicist, Anatole Leroy-Beaulieu, has been put on the index expurgatorius. It is a masterpiece of sociological study and presents an impartial yet most friendly view of the Russian people and government.

A fostered project of the French-speaking people of New England, which has numbered among its staunchest advocates not a few enterprising citizens of Worcester, is the establishment somewhere in southern New England of a French-Canadian college, where the youth of that nationality may be educated in conformity with the American idea, but still in the language of their forefathers.

The old canal which was constructed many years ago between the city of Tampico and Tuxpam, Mexico, at great expense, is to be cleared and dredged and opened for traffic. An American company has a concession for operating the enterprise. The canal passes through a country rich in dye woods and native tropical products, which will be taken in boats to Tampico and exported to the United States and Europe.

The rooms of a Corean woman are as sacred to her as a shrine is to its image—indeed, the rooms of a wife or mother are the sanctuary of any man who breaks the law. Unless for treason or for one other crime, he cannot be forced to leave those rooms, and so long as he remains under the protection of his wife and his wife's apartments he is secure from the officers of the law and from the penalties of his misdemeanors.

Ireland is to have its Gaelic equivalent for the Eisteddfod. With the support of the Gaelic societies throughout England and Scotland, as well as those of America, it is proposed to hold an "Oireachtas," or public prize meeting in Dublin on May 17, when prizes will be awarded for Gaelic compositions, including essay, lyrical and historical poems, recitation and song. It is intended that the "Oireachtas" shall be an annual affair.

REFORM IN DINNER-GIVING.

Simple Dinners Are Now Considered the Elegant Dinners.

"A dinner engagement, no matter whether the dinner be large or small, formal or informal, is the most exacting of social obligations," writes Mrs. S. T. Rorer in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Indeed, I always feel a double sense of obligation when invited to a small dinner. In selecting the guests for the small dinner choose those who are congenial. If among young friends you number physicians, lawyers or politicians do not invite one of each class, nor all of one class, simply because their professions are the same, but select congenial spirits. Ten small dinners, well arranged, are much more enjoyable than one large conventional dinner served to sixty ill-selected people. The food is better, service better and digestion better, and even when trained help cannot be employed the hostess may enjoy the occasion as well as the guests. The art of dining, remember, is quite apart from the art of giving dinners.

"A reform in dinner-giving is being instigated. Simple dinners are now 'the elegant dinners.' The man who has studied the art of living lives frugally. A hostess must never forget that during the short time her guests are under her roof she is responsible for their happiness and comfort. A huge dinner of twelve courses of badly blended food is not conducive to either. Savarin said, 'The dinner-table is a place where men are never bored for the first hour;' the insinuation that a second would prove a bore is rather prominent. If people in the ordinary walks of life are to make such entertainments a success they must never try new or elaborate dishes, or even new ways of serving; they should simply add an extra plate or two to the usual number, and invite their friends."

Public Speaking Agreed with Him.

Mr. C. W. Radcliffe-Cooke, a member of the British Parliament, tells in the English Illustrated Magazine the story of an experience that was more amusing in the telling than in the experiencing. He was to speak at an evening meeting in a country town, and was first to dine with two elderly ladies of the place. Not until he was dressing for dinner did he discover that his servant had neglected to pack his waistcoat.

There was no gentleman in the household of whom he could borrow, but the butler, a stout man, had a spare waistcoat, which, though not a match for the rest of his clothing, was near enough to pass muster. But, alas! the waistcoat was a mile too big.

He found a sympathetic housemaid who took up a large pleat at the back of the waistcoat, and fastened it securely with pins. Dinner over, the party drove to the meeting, where the parliamentary candidate was to make the principal speech. The candidate had been speaking ten minutes, and had warmed to his work, when suddenly he felt a pin give way, and then another and another. Slowly the borrowed garment expanded, until its wearer appeared in all the capacious bulk of the true owner.

Luckily the main body of the audience did not perceive the change, but a distressing titter was heard among the ladies in front. The best comment came from a gentleman who greeted the speaker after the meeting.

"Public speaking evidently agrees with you, sir," he said, in a complimentary tone, "for when you sat down you were twice the man you were when you rose."

The Vice of Overeating.

How much harm is done to health by our one-sided and excessive diet no one can say. Physicians tell us that it is very great. Of the vice of overeating, as practiced by the well-to-do classes, in England especially, Sir Henry Thompson, a noted English physician and authority on this subject, says:

"I have come to the conclusion that more than half the disease which embitters the middle and latter part of life is due to avoidable errors in diet, and that more mischief in the form of actual disease, of impaired vigor, and shortened life accrues to civilized man in England and throughout Central Europe from erroneous habits of eating than from the habitual use of alcoholic drink, considerable as I know that evil to be."—Sanitarium.

The Way of It.

"I heard your minister resigned from his charge." "Well, no, not edzac'ly." "How was it then?" "Why, you see, we'd been resigned ter him as long as we could stand it and we thought it wuz time for him to reciprocate. He didn't resign. We resigned him."—Washington Times.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

THIS IS THEIR DEPARTMENT OF THE PAPER.

Quaint Sayings and Cute Doings of the Little Folks Everywhere, Gathered and Printed Here for All Other Little Ones to Read.

The Waif.

Just a lonely little maiden from the city's dust and heat,
A homeless, lonely little waif with blue eyes sad and sweet;
No father's hand with thoughtful care the little life had blessed,
No mother's touch of love had e'er the tangled hair caressed.

Her ears had heard sin's blasphemies, her cheeks had felt its blows,
And in the wide, wide city she had lived—just how, God knows.
But now, out to the country—kind hearts had planned the way—
She rode to breathe the summer breath a fortnight and a day.

Oh, joy of all that journey! and sweeter joy to come
When Farmer Stebbins took her to his pleasant upland home.
The wide, old-fashioned wagon was a chariot with wings,
And the big house on the hillside looked grander than a king's.

All the beaming bliss of sunshine, all the woodland's song and stir,
All the bloom of rural beauty was paradise to her,
And the hum of bees that wandered in the daisy fields all day
Was music of another world that stole her heart away.

She knew the spreading maple that the robins loved the best,
She found the clump of grasses where the ground bird hid its nest,
And when the wind at evening whispered thro' the orchard boughs
She went with Farmer Stebbins to help drive home the cows.

And when, at quiet bedtime, with touch of tender care
Kind Mother Stebbins' gentle hand brushed back the tangled hair,
One little heart with happiness was full and running o'er,
One little soul was filled with love till it could hold no more.

Too soon the visit ended, the parting time drew nigh,
She kissed kind Mother Stebbins, bid the birds and bees good-by.

And climbed into the wagon with its wide, old-fashioned seat,
Once more a homeless little waif with blue eyes sad and sweet.

But when they reached the station and heard the whistle's blast,
Around the farmer's sunbrowned neck two little arms clung fast.
'Don't send me back! Don't send me!" the sobbing creature said,
And Farmer Stebbins swallowed hard, then bent his bushy head,

And soft unloosed the clinging arms and put the grieved child down;
He stooped and kissed the tear-stained face and smoothed the hair of brown;
And then—the long train sped away around a distant hill,
But a happy brown-haired maiden stays with Farmer Stebbins still.

A Scheme for Boys Who Skate.

In Russia skating is even more popular as a winter sport that it is in this country. Beautiful skating parks and ponds are maintained in all of the larger towns and cities, where they are used almost constantly. As a result they soon become rough, cut by the sharp edges of the skates.

To remedy this difficulty a clever Russian has invented an ice-roller, hollow inside and so arranged that a roaring fire can be kept burning within, thus heating the iron surface. As this roller passes over the ice the roughness is smoothed down, and the surface is soon frozen clear and even again.

Some of our boys who have skating ponds might try this scheme.

Game of Taste-Testing.

You think you know the taste of things, don't you? Well, let me tell you that if it were not for your nose you could not tell a good many things apart, so far as your taste goes. A great deal of what you call the taste of a thing is its smell. You can't quite believe this? Prove it for yourselves. The trial makes it a capital game, as described by the Jenness Miller Monthly. Get mother to give you some raw oatmeal, some licorice, chocolate, apples, as many different things as she can think of that do not taste a bit alike. Then blindfold first one and then another of your party, and let each one who is blindfolded hold his or her nose very tightly, so that it isn't possible to smell things, and then let some one give him or her first one thing and then another to taste. It is good fun to give a little prize, perhaps one of your hocky sticks, Jack, or one of your dolls, Polly, to the boy or girl who guesses the most names of the things provided for the game of testing the taste. Tell mother that this is very good fun for a grown-up people's game, too.

A Bottle of Famous Tea.

Next time you read about the Boston tea party in which our forefathers threw the English tea into Boston harbor, it will make the story more real to you to know that some of this tea is still preserved in Massachusetts. The State Historical Society has a big bottle of it and several of the old families of Dorchester have small packages of it—and they are very proud of them, too.

You see, the tea was sent to Gov. Hutchinson and there was so much of it thrown overboard that it floated down the river and the next morning some of it was recovered by people along the shore who found it floating perfectly dry in the boxes, and they preserved package of it as mementos. The old house in Boston in which the Sons of Liberty disguised themselves as Indians for the purpose of going to the tea party was owned by John Hancock and it still stands just as it was when they came whooping out of it in 1773.

When Queen Victoria Was a Girl.

Even queens must learn from experience. When Queen Victoria was a little girl she was once paying a visit to a nobleman, and in walking around the grounds ran on in advance of the royal party. One of the gardeners told the little princess that the path she was walking on was very "slape."

"Slape, slape!" said she, "and pray what is 'slape?'"

The man explained that "slape" meant slippery.

But, not heeding the warning, the little girl went along the path and fell down. Seeing what had happened, the nobleman said to her:

"Now, your royal highness has an explanation of the term 'slape.'"

"Yes, my lord," she replied, "I think I have. I shall never forget the word 'slape.'"

About a Wise Cat.

There is in the Treasury Department at Washington a cat that understands English perfectly. His name is Tom, and when addressed he will quickly respond, even waking out of a sound sleep to go toward the speaker. Sometimes, to confuse him, the clerks will sing out some word or words in which the syllable Tom is emphasized, and to that he pays no attention. But let any one call, "Tom, it's dinner time!" and forthwith he walks across the room, reaches up with his paws to a tin pail, claws it down, and comes bringing it in his mouth. Tom is passionately fond of music. At the cry of "Hand organ!" he climbs to a high window seat, but at the words "Here a dog!" he slinks under a desk.

Odd Visiting Cards.

No doubt you've all heard the story of the Indian rajah who sent a big elephant as a visiting card to his friend, a neighboring rajah. Cards almost as remarkable as this one have been manufactured in Germany. They are of solid iron, although they do not look so much different from ordinary calling cards. Several of the great manufacturers have had iron rolled in very thin sheets and then cut into card sizes, upon which it was easy to print the name and business address of the person who was to use them. Some of the cards are only one one-thousandth of an inch thick. Those used by Baron Krupp, the great gunmaker, are one eight-hundred-and-twentieth of an inch thick.

Did any of you ever hear of odder visiting cards?

Blindman's Buff.

I played blindman's buff with Nell
In the way grown people play;
Long ago—I will not tell
Just how long ago to-day.
I pursued her as she ran,
I, the poor blindfolded man.

What a famous chase she led,
Here and there, as swift as thought.
Did I catch her? No, instead,
The blindfolded one was caught,
For the man's an easy muff
In this game of blindman's buff.

As a spinning jenny flies,
Round and round about we ran,
I with my blinded eyes—
Serious girl and giddy man!
Both have long since had enough
Of the game of blindman's buff.

He Suspected the Cat.

A tradesman, owner of a dog and cat, had been in the habit of letting his dog go to market and buy his own meat. The dog would bring the meat home and deposit it somewhere in the store, and when hungry would go and get it, says the Christian Leader. The cat acquired a habit of stealing its meat, and the dog would lie down near it, watch for the thief, and when the cat came would drive her away. But at last he became tired of this business, carried the meat down cellar and covered it up with sand. One day the owner of the dog thought he would get the meat, bring it upstairs, and see what the dog would do. After taking a nap the dog went down in the cellar, in search of his meat, and commenced digging as usual, but there was no meat to be found. He laid himself down a minute, as if in thought, and then rushed upstairs, and, spying the cat, "went for her," and chased her all around the store as closely as a police officer in pursuit of a thief.

Lightning Made to Order.

Many scientists have doubted the existence in fact of globular lightning attributing the statements of its existence to some kind of optical delusion. Prof. Rigi, of Bologna, however, announces that he has produced it artificially, and that not only has he succeeded in making its motion slow enough to be followed by the eye, but has been able in certain cases to obtain luminous masses which actually remained stationary for sufficient time to be photographed.

It requires some courage to be a true friend.

SIX "GREAT POWERS" OF EUROPE.

ONE hears much these days of the "great powers" of Europe and their remarkable "concert" to maintain Moslem rule in Crete and to coerce Greece into letting the despised Turk have his way in the ancient island. What are the powers and why are they so concerned about the affairs of little Greece and little Crete? The great powers are Russia, England, France, Germany, Italy and Austria. The remainder of Europe is insignificant beside them. The rulers or statesmen of these principal countries of Europe play at politics perpetually and maintain immense standing armies in order that no single power may overstep the boundaries that have been fixed on the map of Europe. The chief question is to prevent further aggrandizement in the way of territory. The "peace of Europe," which seems to be so prized by the politicians abroad, is not so much peace as it is the stability of the status. The powers are afraid that if Greece is not coerced Russia will place its big foot on Turkey, and thus, being in control of Greece, might stand in Crete as the master of Egypt and the possessor of the best trade emporium in all the Mediterranean. If it were simply a question of Cretan independence the great powers would not be at all concerned, and Cretan and Turk would be allowed to fight it out if "Christian sentiment" did not actually take the island from the sultan and add it to the other small and amply protected countries with a European prince on the throne. The rulers of the great powers are Victoria, Queen of Great Britain; Wilhelm, Emperor of Germany; Nicholas, Czar of Russia; Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria; Umberto, King of Italy, and Francois Felix Faure, President of France. Of these powers Russia, Germany and Austria are most without the control of the people. The governments of the other countries are more or less influenced by the popular feeling. Mutual hatred reigns between the powers, notwithstanding that their royal families are, many of them, closely united by blood and marriage.

ONE OF THE OLDEST SHIPS.

American Bark 133 Years Old Doing Duty in English Waters.

The bark True Love, built in Philadelphia in 1764, has been found upon search to be yet afloat in the capacity of a coal hulk, engaged in active trade at the age of 133 years. This discovery was made through a casualty recorded in the Maritime Exchange as follows: True Love, barge, was in collision with schoner Gravesend of London, off Gravesend, and had port quarter damaged to such an extent that it was found necessary to tow her to Rochester, and she arrived at that place in charge of the tug Commerce. The True Love has not only outlived her builders and their successors, but has also outlived every craft that was built in her time and for many years afterward, and this fact, coupled with the report that the historic craft is still engaged in active pursuits, places Philadelphia at the very top notch as a shipbuilding center.

In 1764, when the famous old craft was launched on the banks of the Delaware, although her length was but 96 feet 8 inches, she was then the largest vessel of commerce that the Delaware had ever floated. Contrast this with the dimensions of the huge Hamburg-American Packet Company's steamship Pennsylvania, the latest addition to commerce, whose length is 587 feet, while the new White Star liner building is 704 feet long, and one will be amazed with the magnitude of the modern ship of commerce. The True Love upon being completed sailed away from Philadelphia early in 1765, and no record is had of her return to this city until August 22, 1873, when at the age of 109 years she came into port from Ivigut, Greenland, with a cargo of kryolite, in command of Capt. Thomas Nathaniel, consigned to B. Crowley. She was discharged here and surveyed by the American Lloyds in October, 1873, and sailed away, never to return again. Upon her arrival shortly after in London she was sold and turned into a coal hulk, in which capacity she still serves.

The dimensions of this famous True Love are: Length, 96 feet 8 inches; beam, 26 feet 9 inches; depth of hold, 17 feet. She measured 296 tons register, and, like all old craft, carried very little more cargo.

The discovery that there was still afloat a Philadelphia-built vessel of such an age has caused much comment on the floors of the Maritime Exchange, and some shipping men are of the opinion that this old craft should, if possible, be purchased as a relic. Records show that the True Love was for a time owned in Hull, England, by G. Dahl, previous to her purchase by John S. Ward, of London, and during that time she was engaged in the Baltic trade.—Philadelphia Press.

A PLATONIC AFFECTION.

It Leads Kitty to Seek and Find Death at the Bottom of a Well.

Mr. John Eckert, who lives near Atlanta, Ga., tells a strange story of a cat deliberately committing suicide. Mr. Eckert owns a fine bird dog, which was on the most friendly terms with the cat, and the two bunked together. One day the dog was stolen, and Eckert has never been able to recover it. The cat at once gave indication of sorrow because of the loss of its playmate. Tabby refused to be comforted and spent all her time moping in the dog-house; she would eat nothing and would not leave the kennel. Finally she, almost famished, and evidently satisfied that her old friend had gone for good, dragged herself to the well, and threw herself in. Mr. Eckert is firmly convinced that it was a genuine case of animal suicide.

KITTY'S SAD END.

One-Cent Newspapers.

There are now $8,000,000 worth of one-cent pieces in circulation, and the call upon the mint is still for more. Not all these cents are wanted for the plate collection. It is one-cent journalism more than anything else which keeps the wheels turning in the mint, as in the marts of trade.—Philadelphia Record.

There are almost as many crises in the average love affair as there have been in the rule of the Sultan of Turkey.

A Novel Newspaper.

A newspaper of a wholly new sort is about to be established in one of the north country cities of England. The editor thinks he can get a lot of people to subscribe for seven years at three guineas a year, because, in return, he promises to print and pay for any articles which a subscriber sends him. This, certainly, is a great scheme, calculated to attract the attention—and guineas—of every graphomaniac in Great Britain, and its inventor would be sure of making enormous amounts of money were it not for the fact that he reserves the right to "alter, dilate, cut out, shorten, or expand," as he sees fit, all manuscripts submitted to him for publication. This is so likely to excite the indignation of the writers who would form his constituency of contributors and readers that it seems doubtful if journalism will soon be revolutionized by the ingenious innovation. The people who at present cannot get their productions into print at any price or for nothing are exactly those who would object most strenuously to the change of a single word, and the prospect of seeing a three-column essay reduced to a three-line paragraph is one which they would not face for a moment.—New York Times.

Co-operation.

A journal published in London in behalf of the Girls' Friendly Society, an English organization with a branch in this country, says that in March of last year Jane Blank, a poor girl in a Welsh village, and Sarah Dash, another girl on a Cornish farm, emigrated to the United States. They had no friends or acquaintances to protect them on the long voyage, or to receive and look after them when they landed in America. But they belonged to this society, which numbers nearly half a million members, all of whom are young women, both rich and poor, associated for mutual help and friendly work.

Their intention to emigrate was made known to the general manager in England, who arranged that they should sail on the same ship.

The Cornish and Welsh girls met for the first time on the deck of the steamer, and were known to each other by the little button of the society which each wore.

Each of them carried a letter from the manager to the captain, asking for his kindly oversight. Instead of making the voyage alone and unprotected, they shared the same room and became companions and warm friends.

When the ship reached New York harbor, an American member of the society, accompanied by a clergyman, met them, guided them through the customs, took them to a respectable boarding house, secured a situation for Sarah, and sent Jane the next day safely to her friends in Ebensburg, a Welsh Pennsylvania village.

A few months later the poor Cornish girl fell sick, lost her place, and penniless and homeless would have been driven to the street but for her friendly associates, who placed her in a hospital until she was cured, and then again found work for her.

"I feel," she wrote home, "as if our society had a thousand arms, and wherever I go they hold me and take care of me."

This is a homely story, but it is one of facts. It shows what may be done by organization, even among young girls, when the motive is helpful and uplifting.

On Time,

And very easily, too. That's what any one should be in treating one's self for inaction of the kidneys and bladder. The diuretic which experience indicates as supplying the requisite stimulation to the organs without exciting them, is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Don't delay; kidney inaction and diseases are not far apart. For fever and ague, dyspepsia, constipation, rheumatism and nerve debility, also, use the Bitters.

Sea Bottom Photographed.

M. Bontau, the discoverer of a method of photographing the sea bottom, has succeeded in taking several photographs of the vegetation that grows on the rocks by means of a water-tight camera and flashlight. Dressed as a diver, he takes with him to the bottom of the sea a barrel containing oxygen. A puff of gas from the barrel carries magnesium powder into the flame of a spirit-lamp, standing under a bell jar on the upper end of the barrel. Another puff actuates the pneumatic shutter of the camera at the same time. He has found his method very useful in exploring the coral reefs.

A WOMAN'S BODY.

What Its Neglect Leads to. Mrs. Chas. King's Experience.

A woman's body is the repository of the most delicate mechanism in the whole realm of creation, and yet most women will let it get out of order and keep out of order, just as if it were of no consequence. Their backs ache and heads throb and burn; they have wandering pains, now here and now there. They experience extreme lassitude, that don't-care and want-to-be-left-alone feeling, excitability, irritability, nervousness, sleeplessness and the blues, yet they will go about their work until they can scarcely stand on their poor swollen feet, and do nothing to help themselves. These are the positive fore-runners of serious womb complications, and unless given immediate attention will result in untold misery, if not death.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will, beyond the question of a doubt, relieve all this trouble before it becomes serious, and it has cured many after their troubles had become chronic.

The Compound should be taken immediately upon the appearance of any of these symptoms above enumerated. It is a vegetable tonic which invigorates and stimulates the entire female organism, and will produce the same beneficial results in the case of any sick woman as it did with MRS. CHAS. KING, 1815 Rosewood St., Philadelphia, Pa., whose letter we attach:

"I write these few lines, thanking you for restoring my health. For twelve years I suffered with pains impossible to describe. I had bearing-down feelings, backache, burning sensation in my stomach, chills, headache, and always had black specks before my eyes. I was afraid to stay alone, for I sometimes had four and five fainting spells a day. I had several doctors and tried many patent medicines. Two years ago I was so bad that I had to go to bed and have a trained nurse. Through her, I commenced to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I never had anything give me the relief that it has. I have taken eight bottles, and am now enjoying the best of health again. I can truthfully say it has cured me."

REED IS RE-ELECTED.

AGAIN SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Congress Meets to Modify the Tariff—Opening Ceremonies Are Comparatively Tame—Many New Faces on the Floor of the Popular Branch.

Extra Session Is Opened.

Congress is again in session. The organization of the House was effected Monday by the re-election of Speaker Reed and the choice of the same old list of general officers, and the Senate got itself in working order without any trouble whatever. The vote for Speaker in the House was as follows:

Reed	199
Bailey (Dem.) of Texas	114
Bell (Pop.) of Colorado	21
Newlands (Silverite) of Nevada	1

The election of Mr. Reed to his old position was a formality that occupied less than half an hour, including the nomination and his speech of acknowledgment of the honor. There was nothing strikingly picturesque or suggestive in the remarks of Gen. Grosvenor putting Mr. Reed in nomination or in the Speaker's acceptance. The latter merely said that he would endeavor to discharge the duties of his office impartially and well; that he could not hope to please all members in all things at all times, but that he would do the best he could and would endeavor to administer the duties in a spirit of absolute fairness.

Galleries Crowded.

As is usually the case at the opening of a Congress, the galleries of both House and Senate were crowded to their utmost capacity, and hundreds and thousands who neglected to provide themselves with tickets or were unable to secure one of the coveted pasteboards were turned away by the doorkeepers, whose instructions were ironclad to admit only those who were entitled to seats. For an hour before Clerk McDowell called the House to order the floor was crowded with visitors. The wives and daughters of the members and especially favored visitors were massed in the aisles and open spaces. The general public had small opportunity to view the proceedings.

The most striking feature of the scene on the floor was the number of new faces. Old familiar figures, conspicuous in the shock of many a parliamentary battle, had disappeared, and in the new lists were new and untried knights. The change in the personnel was very great. By 11 o'clock the reserved galleries, with the exception of those for the diplomatic corps and the executive, were walled in, tier on tier. The bright costumes of the ladies gave lighter color to the animated scene.

As the hands of the clock pointed to 12, Major McDowell, the clerk of the House, rapped the House to order. Rev. Mr. Couden, the blind chaplain, then delivered the invocation, appealing to the throne for God's blessing on the work of the new Congress and the new administration. The clerk of the House then read the President's proclamation convening Congress, after which the roll was called.

There was an abundance of flowers on the desks of Senators when, promptly at 12 o'clock, Vice-President Hobart called the Senate to order. There was an exceptionally full attendance of Senators. The public galleries were packed and the reserved galleries were well filled. The chaplain's opening prayer invoked divine grace and blessing on the Senators and members about to take up the work of the extraordinary session and on the President and Vice-President. The roll-call disclosed the presence of sixty-eight Senators. Senator Hoar and Senator Cockrell were named a committee to wait on the President and inform him that Congress was in session and ready to receive any communication from him. The Senate then, at 12:30, took a recess until 2 o'clock.

The House did nothing Tuesday, awaiting the action of the Ways and Means Committee on the tariff bill. In the Senate to-day 438 bills and eight joint resolutions were introduced. They embraced nearly every phase of public business. Mr. Allen's batch of bills numbered about seventy-five. They included bills directing the foreclosure of the government lien on the Union Pacific road; to prevent professional lobbying; defining the powers of the judiciary; for service pensions, etc. Mr. Lodge's bills included those to amend the immigration laws and for a Hawaiian cable. Bankruptcy bills were presented by Mr. Nelson, of Minnesota, and Mr. Lindsay, of Kentucky. Mr. Morgan reintroduced the Nicaragua canal bill before the last Congress, and also a joint resolution to abrogate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. A resolution by Mr. Frye, of Maine, calling for information as to the operation of civil-service rules to river and harbor work was agreed to after some criticism of civil-service operations. Mr. Frye said it was a step toward abolishing these rules so far as they related to common labor on engineering work of the government. The Senate adjourned until Thursday, as did the House.

The session of the Senate Thursday was brief. A smile went around the chamber when Mr. Stewart, a resident of Carson City, Nev., where the pugilistic contest occurred, offered a bill for the relief of one Corbett. It proved to be a private pension bill. One of the measures introduced by Mr. Gallinger proposed an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting legislation in behalf of any religious denomination. Mr. Turpie, of Indiana, gave notice of a speech on the election of Senators by popular vote and introduced a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution for the purpose. The first report of the session was presented by Mr. Gear, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads and was favorable to the bill for an adjustment of the Pacific Railroad debts by a commission consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of the Interior and Attorney General. A resolution by Mr. Lodge, of Massachusetts, was agreed to instructing the Committee on Foreign Relations to inquire whether the islands of St. Croix, St. Johns and St. Thomas of the West Indian group could be purchased by the United States, and, if not, the probability of their sale to other powers. At 1 o'clock the arbitration treaty was reported and debate began. Speaker Reed has definitely decided that for the present at least he will not appoint any of the regular committees of the House beyond the three already announced. In this way all miscellaneous legislation will be blocked and the entire attention of the House focused on the tariff bill. The bills, which are being introduced by the hundreds, will have to wait until the committees to which they would go under the natural course of things are appointed.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Some Vandal Has Stolen the State's Numismatic Collection—Secretary of a Loan Association Goes to Prison—Pathetic Scene in a Decatur Court.

Indiana Robbed of Rare Coins.

During the temporary absence of the employe in charge of the State Geological Museum at Indianapolis someone broke the glass in the showcase in which the State's rare coins were kept and secured the entire number, about forty, which are valued very highly on account of their age and historic memories. A colored boy offered an old coin at a pawnbroker's, and it is thought that a clew to the thief may be thus obtained. The collection contained some of the earliest English and French coins used in this country and others used by the early Spanish in Mexico.

Voluntarily Confessed His Sin.

Hugh Campbell, secretary and treasurer of the Bee Hive Savings and Loan Association of Indianapolis, voluntarily went before the Grand Jury and confessed that he had embezzled $3 and $4 weekly for several years from the association, giving the shareholders proper credit, but changing the amounts on his books. The Grand Jury was loth to accept his confession, but the books of the shareholders were found to bear out his plea and he was indicted for embezzlement. He was present when the indictment was returned, and at once entered a plea of guilty and was sentenced to two years' imprisonment. Three years ago his wife was stricken blind. Campbell immediately began drinking to excess, which continued until recently, when he reformed. Then his conscience preyed on him. He was well known in contracting and building circles.

All Over the State.

Edward Schoonover was instantly killed at the Paragon paper mill, north of Muncie. He was knocked from a rafter while at work.

James Higginbaugh, while trimming trees near Pleasant Lake, fell to the ground, a distance of thirty feet, and died within an hour. He was a farmer.

Nels Gravel, of Goodland, who carries mail between Goodland and Mount Ayer, was drowned near Foreman Station, while trying to cross a bridge which had been damaged by a flood.

Jesse W. Smelser, ex-representative of Rush County, has a ewe which produced five lambs, all of them alive and doing well. Mr. Smelser is very proud of the lambs and is taking extra care of them.

Samuel Garetson, wanted in Anderson, Liberty and other points for horse theft and swindling Red Men lodges along the Ohio, from Cincinnati to Wheeling, was arrested at Delphi. He has been a fugitive from justice for two years.

Edward F. Pfeiffer, bookkeeper for Fairbanks, Morse & Co., was found dead in the elevator at Indianapolis. Whether he was crushed or fell in an epileptic attack and smothered is not known. Mr. Pfeiffer recently came from Chicago.

Fred Reed, aged 17, of North Manchester, was accidentally shot and killed while hunting. He climbed upon a fence to rest, the gun slipped from his hand and the hammer, striking a rail, the gun was discharged, the load entering his stomach and breast.

The will of County Commissioner Joseph W. Busick was admitted to probate in the Wabash Circuit Court. The estate is valued at considerable over $100,000. Allen G. Busick, an adopted son, is given $10,000, and the remainder of the property is divided among Mrs. Kate M. Busick, Mrs. Madge Bailey, and Gillen D. Busick.

A pathetic scene took place in the Decatur court room during the progress of a trial. Henry Colerick, a prominent attorney of Fort Wayne, and a lawyer in the case on trial, received a telegram stating that his son, W. E. Colerick, also a prominent attorney of Fort Wayne, had killed himself and his sweetheart. Mr. Colerick was almost crazed with grief and, throwing his arms around other attorneys in the case, implored them to tell him it was not true.

Ex-County Treasurer Fair was arrested at Butler for embezzlement and his bond put at $22,000, which he could not raise, and he had to go to jail. He turned the office over to his successor $12,000 short. His son, who was deputy, is also under arrest for forging, but is out on bail. This makes the seventh ex-county officer to be placed under arrest in connection with De Kalb County crookedness, and it is said that several private citizens will be added to the list.

For many years the invisible course of the famous Lost river, which suddenly sinks from view at a point near the town of Orleans, has incited scientific inquiry. No trace of this underground river was ever discovered until the recent heavy rains. It is now believed that Lost river runs directly under the town of Orleans. This belief is based mainly upon the fact that during the recent flood the water burst forth from what was supposed to be a small cave in such volumes that the town was flooded. The water has now ceased to flow from the cave, but anyone standing near the entrance can hear the rushing of the torrent, apparently hundreds of feet below.

Daniel Lonabaugh of Lima, O., representing the Standard Oil Company, closed oil leases on over 1,000 acres of prospective oil lands in the northern part of Madison County. These are the first oil leases the Standard has secured in Madison County. Heretofore the company has not ventured so far west into the center of the gas belt and it shows that the territory is slowly but surely coming west. While Madison County has always held the distinction of being the greatest natural gas producing county, but little oil traces were found until two weeks ago, when old gas wells along Pipe creek suddenly began to throw out oil.

Rev. T. E. Covington of Fort Wayne has accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Lagrange, and will at once enter upon his duties.

The Indiana Iron Company of Muncie has informed the employes of the nut and bolt department that a reduction will be made in their wages amounting to from 5 to 15 per cent. The reduction is to do away with the advance made last summer as a result of the slowness of trade in this line. The men now regret that they withdrew from the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, as they will be forced to go it alone.

Additional zest was given to the spirited rivalry between the Standard Oil and Independent Oil companies in this State by the charge that clerks employed by the local railway companies had been bribed by Standard Oil agents to furnish costs of shipments by the independent companies.

The Park Theater, the popular-price playhouse of Indianapolis, was burned between 8 and 9 o'clock Sunday. The theater was owned and managed by Dickson & Talbott, who control all the theaters but one in the city, besides houses in Dayton and Cleveland, O., and in other cities. The loss is estimated at $100,000. The insurance amounts to $30,000.

YELLOW COMPLEXION AND DULL EYES.

An Indiana Schoolmaster Describes How They May Be Brightened.

From the New Era, Greensburg, Ind.

There is probably not a brighter young country school teacher to be found than Mr. Ira Wonn, who lives on a farm about five miles south of Greensburg, Ind., and teaches school at New Pennington, in Saltcreek Township. Mr. Wonn boards with Mr. J. S. Wise, a prominent farmer, who is well-to-do.

Mr. Wonn was in this city a few weeks ago, looking stout and healthy, with an encouraging color in his cheeks. All who know him would formerly describe him as pale and languid, with a very sallow or yellowish complexion, and his eyes dull; his auburn hair having the appearance of being dead. All of these indications of poor health have vanished, and all within the last few weeks, as the result, so we have learned from Mr. Wonn himself, of the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

Mr. Wonn for several years has been farming the whole year round, and taught school in the winter time, often riding many miles each day to his school. This great amount of exposure soon told on the once stout youth, and he rapidly sank by the suffering of rheumatism in his lower limbs.

The family physician did not benefit him any.

"In early September," said Mr. Wonn, "I began my school duties, taking up my abode with Mr. Wise, for I thought the distance too far to drive each way every day, feeling as badly as I did. I still treated my trouble, which I learned to look upon as a permanent and, indeed, very disagreeable companion. I had been at the home of Mr. Wise but a few days, when he told me that he had just been cured of a trouble of long standing very similar to mine by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He had a few doses on hand, which I took, and began feeling better at once. I sent for two boxes, which I have used, and now I feel stout and healthy, as you see me, and am quite a different person."

Mr. Wonn's father in talking of his son's cure to a reporter a few days ago said:

"Yes, sir, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were actually a great help to my son, as everybody who knew of his case will testify. I have bought a few boxes for family use, and would not be without them."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

In China.

One of the sights of China is the antique bridge of Suen-tchen-fow, two thousand five hundred feet long and twenty feet wide. It has on each side fifty-two piers, upon which huge stones are laid, some of them twenty feet long. Many thousand tons of stone were used in the erection of this wonderful bridge, which is regarded by engineers as indicating constructive talent as wonderful as that which raised the Egyptian Pyramids.

Merit Wins.

The invention of Alabastine marked a new era in wall coatings, and from the standpoint of the building owner was a most important discovery. It has from a small beginning branched out into every country of the civilized world. The name "kalsomine" has become so offensive to property owners that manufacturers of cheap kalsomine preparations are now calling them by some other name, and attempting to sell on the Alabastine company's reputation.

Through extensive advertising and personal use, the merits of the durable Alabastine are so thoroughly known that the people insist on getting these goods and will take no chance of spoiling their walls for a possible saving of at the most but a few cents. Thus it is again demonstrated that merit wins, and that manufacturers of first-class articles will be supported by the people.

A journeyman barber in Cincinnati, a specially intelligent man and a favorite with his patrons, says of

RIPANS Tabules

"I want to say that for eight months I have taken three a day, and have not been to see a doctor once since I commenced to take them. Before I would have to have a big tube put down my throat and have my stomach flushed (I believe that is what they call it) three times every week by a doctor that charged me 50 cents for every time. Of course, that gave me relief, but the trouble always came back again, and I can tell you it was no fun to be pumped out about every two days. The doctor said I had catarrh of the stomach. Whatever it was, it don't bother me now. For four years I was troubled, so that I used to lose about three days out of every month." When this barber observes that a customer has a feverish breath, he occasionally presents him with a Tabule, and if taken it removes the difficulty forthwith.

SUFFERING IN SILENCE.

Women are the real heroes of the world. Thousands on thousands of them endure the dragging torture of the ills peculiar to womankind in the silence of home. They suffer on and on—weeks, months, years. The story of weakness and torture is written in the drawn features, in the sallow skin, in the listless eyes, in the lines of care and worry on the face.

Inborn modesty seals their lips. They prefer pain to humiliation. Custom has made them believe the only hope of relief lies in the exposure of examination and "local treatment."

Take ten cases of "female weakness" and in nine of them "local treatment" is unnecessary. There is no reason why modest, sensitive women should submit to it. DR. McELREE'S WINE OF CARDUI is a vegetable wine. It exerts a wonderfully healing, strengthening and soothing influence over the organs of womankind. It invigorates and stimulates the whole system. It is almost infallible in curing the peculiar weaknesses, irregularities and painful derangements of woman. Year after year, in the privacy of home—away from the eyes of everybody—it effects cures.

WINE OF CARDUI is sold for $1.00 a bottle. Dealers in medicine sell it. Five bottles usually cure the worst cases.

AT JUST 11:50.

Scott Jackson and Alonzo Walling Were Hung to-day.

Saturday's Daily.

The COURIER, ever anxious to give its readers the latest news telegraphed for information to-day concernig the hanging of Scott Jackson and Alonzo Walling. The two men were brought upon the scaffold, and at 11:50 a. m. the trap fell, thus ending the life of the murderers of Pearl Bryan.

BIG VENUE COSTS.

You can never judge the size of court costs by the importance of the case. It cost the county more to clear Jink Lunchford on charge of stealing a quart of oysters, than it did to send the three county officers to state prison.

Yesterday, an agency of experts in this line sent a man here to collect a large amount of costs charged against this county by the county courts of Allen and Elkhart, in cases where we had taken changes of venue to their courts. The followings are their bills in detail.

TAKEN TO ALLEN CONTY.

The case of Daniel A. Sanborn vs J. B. Frothingham, 1879. There were two trials. The costs in the first trial, were $41.50

Costs in second trial..... 49.20

The case of Adam Quince vs the B. & O. road, in Feb. 1888, cost 28.00

In the case of Geo. Reeves vs the B. & O. in 1884, cost..... 13.50

The case of Ralston vs Dills, in 1895, cost..... 150.00

(In this $150 is included a bill of $94 for jury fees. But there should be no jury fees, as it was tried by the court, and not by the jury.)

In the two cases of Walborn, administrator for the Bolender Estate vs B. & O. road, there are fees charged against this county for..... 461.80

But we have this receipt in full for these costs, amounting to $340. It therefore appears that their officers never credited us with the payment of these costs, and now come these experts and reckon the costs over again at a higher rate.

The totals thus claimed from Allen County, are $740. But as shown there should be no more paid in the Bolender cases, and $94 less in the Dills cases, reducing it to $185. And we may not owe all that.

THE ELKHART CASES.

These are Simon Levy vs J. J. Hoopingarner, March 1876, in which the costs are put at..... $238.90

The case of D. M. Osborne and Co. vs R. Wes McBride, Jan. 81, 127.90

Total for Elkhart..... 366.80

All these cases will have to be studied by the officers here, so as to see just how much our county should pay. This investigatoin is put into the hands of County Attorney, James H. Rose, and such sums as he finds we really owe will be laid before the Board of Commissioners and if found just, will be promptly allowed and paid.

NEW CONCERN.

Auburn is to have a new furniture store, and will be located in the frame building on south Main street. The proprietors are John Lahnum, late of Chicago and his brother Wesley. They have rented the entire building and will use both floors. A gentleman from Chicago has been here and will assist them in the establishing of their business. They will also handle in connection with the new furniture, second-hand furniture of all kinds. These gentlemen are hustlers and we hope they may prove successful.

ASSESSOR'S ORDERS.

SENT OUT BY THE STATE TAX COMMISSIONERS.

Assessment of Building and Loan Association Stock and Paid-up Insurance Policies—Stocks of Goods and Merchandise.

The township assessors in each county in the state will with their county assessor to-morrow to study the new instructions sent out by the state board of tax commissioners yesterday. The instructions are as follows:

"To county Assessor:

The law makes it the duty of state board of tax commissioners "to see that all assessments of property in this state are made according to law, and that all revenue officers comply with the law in making such assessments, and that all violations thereof be punished."

In accordance with this provisions, we desire to make some suggestions and to call your attention to some of the important duties which the law imposes upon you as taxing officers, and if possible to more strongly impress the necessity of an intelligent and resolute enforcement of the statutes governing taxation.

Aside from certain property that is specially exempted by statutory provisions, the law, in a broad sense, requires every dollar's worth of property within the boundaries of the state to be placed upon the duplicate at its true cash value as defined in Section 53, of the tax law, and all citizens are expected to bear their just portion of the public burden on this basis.

Taxing officers are clothed with ample authority under the law to enforce its provisions in all cases, and to such impartial enforcement you should bend every energy.

There are many and varied methods through which certain individuals and corporations seek to evade taxation. Concealment and undervaluation are most frequent, and taking officials should give special attention to tax-dodgers. Tax-dodging should be made odious, and to search such persons out and bring them to book and punish them is an important duty of taxing officers.

County assessors, in their instructions to township assessors and their deputies, should call special attention to the law and the oath prescribed, requiring them to view all property, that they may intelligently determine its value. It has heretofore been a common practice for assessors to stop in offices, stores, or shops and assess large numbers of taxpayers whom they have not personally seen, and know little or nothing of the true value of the property they are assessing. This practice is not only wrong, but it is in direct violation of the oath the assessor takes when he makes his return, "that the valuation fixed by him is made from personal observation and inspection of the property."

Instructions should be clear and direct on this matter so that the ex-parte manner of making personal assessments, heretofore practiced by some assessors shall cease.

THE PERSONAL SCHEDULE.

In the personal schedule to be made out by the tax-payers this year, the running or partly paid stock in building, loan and savings associations must be returned under the head of "Personal Property Credits," and from which deductions for indebtedness can be made.

All other building loan and saving association stock, such as "paid-up," "prepaid," and other forms of cash obligations issued by such associations, must be listed under the head of "Personal Property Chattels," and from which no deductions can be made.

Tax-payers are also required to give the number of paid-up life insurance policies and their surrender value, and also non-forfeitable and partly paid-up, life insurance policies and their value, to be also listed under the head of "Personal Property Credits," and from which deductions for indebtedness can be made.

More care should be given to the assessment of merchandise, stocks of goods, lumber and property of that class. The agricultural tax-payer has often just cause for complaint on account of the unreasonably low valua- of placed on such property. The county assessor should make careful comparisons between the present and last year's personal lists as soon as they are returned by the township assessor, and where marked discrepancies are shown investigate each case. County assessors should give such careful and thorough instructions as to insure the same classes of property in the several townships practically the same valuation.

It is the duty of the county assessor to examine the mortgage record and see that the holders of mortgages and are properly taxed, and where they find mortgages in favor of tax-payers of other counties, they should immediately certify them to the county assessor of such county.

The use of bona fide indebtedness blanks in many counties added largely to the duplicate last year. Taxpayers that are willing to aid taxing officers by giving the information asked for in these blanks should be given the opportunity. Where they refuse to disclose names of persons to whom they claim to be indebted, the county board of review can summon them for examination. The coduty board of review can also require any bank officer to testify as to the correctness of the return of any individual as to the amount of money on deposit on the first day of April.

THE NO POLITICS CRY.

The Dispatch and Record keep howling for "no politics" in the county matters and both insist the COURIER has carried the matter into politics. We challenge either to produce anything the COURIER has said that would indicate political bias. We will give them the use of our columns in case their superabundance of patent plates prevents the use of their own space. On the other hand both these papers have from the start been calling attention to the fact that certain persons accused by the COURIER were democrats, for whom they never had an excuse, and that others we had accused for the same wrong doing were republicans, and whom the Dispatch and Record both began to defend, and are still at it. If they want to make people believe that politics makes no difference with them, why don't they quit trying to shield republicans? The COURIER has never tried to shield any democrat. All the COURIER asks is to have all offenders treated alike. We have no personal or political feelings in the matter. Certain county officers have committed illegal acts. These illegal acts are of three kinds. One is forging county orders. One is converting to their own use, money that belonged to others or to the county. The third kind is, charging and collecting off the county, fees in excess of work done. The first offense hit Borst, Sawvel and Dills. All three have been arrested, Borst and Sawvel are in the penitentiary, and Dills may soon be. Of the second class, Moody is in prison, for using money that did not belong to him. Fair is likely to be punished for the same offense. Stroh used fees that did not belong to him and has since being exposed paid a part of it back. No one but the Record and Dispatch seems willing to defend him. For our part we are not able to see the difference between his case and the cases of Fair and Moody. We are not asking that anyone be punished if not guilty. But if Fair and Stroh are not considered to have done a wrong, then we say that Moody who was charged with that very offense should be released. This is all the COURIER asks. We have repeatedly said, "Serve every man alike." We never mentioned politics except to allude to what these other papers said. We came near forgetting to allude to the third-class, those who had charged excessive fees. This is in substance, as we understand it, the charge against Hook. And if he or anyone else has made overcharges, it should be brought to light and righted according to law. There should be no politics in it. And if this particular branch of the subject is followed out faithfully, it will prove a grand drag net, or we are greatly mistaken.

If these papers agree with the COURIER'S views as stated above then there is no cause for further dispute. If they do not agree with these views, will they state plainly what their position is?

Without A Rival.

As a positive cure for sprains, bruises, and pains of all kinds, Salvation Oil has no equal. Mrs. Frank Juif, 518 Gratiot Ave., Detroit, Mich., writes: "I used Salvation Oil in my family and can say it has no rival as a liniment; it certainly cures pains. I sprained my ankle and it cured me and since then I have always used it for any pains and bruises." Salvation Oil is sold for only 25 cents. No other remedy will do the work as promptly.

THE COMMON LOT.

In Memory of John O. P. Sherlock and his Wife, Hannah Sherlock.

Long years ago two children crossed
Atlantic's rifted hill of blue;
Both came from Britain's misty shore
Though neither one the other knew.
But when the boy and girl grew up,
Safe in our country's fostering care,
They met and pledged in vows of love,
Their future joys and ills to share.

Among the sturdy pioneers,
In Indiana's woods of gloom,
Winning toil, a humble home
Was found the youthful bride and groom.
Simple and few their pleasures were,
Stern the privations which they knew,
Denying self, to satisfy
The little ones who round them grew.

Toiling in cheering hope and faith
Each day provided for was blest,
For them no vain ambitions broke
The day's rough toil, the night's long rest
They lived their lives as God had fixed,
They reared the offspring He had given,
And when by age released from toil
With folded hands they looked to Heaven.

Then Death, man's one abiding friend,
With gentle summons bade them, come!
The tired hearts received their rest,
The glad eyes saw the promised home.

Steuben Republican.

The Auburn DAILY COURIER, a bright, newsy little paper, has just started out on its third year of "hard trials and great tribulations," but in spite of adversity and boycotting whims, it has weathered the gale and keeps right on sailing over calm and troubled main, winning laurels for itself and building up a reputation that will stand indefinitly. The outlook now is that the third year will be a winner for Bro. Barns, even if some jealous rivals have the heart to cry, "three times and out." The paper is a credit to the town and the publisher.

It is Thought by Many

when the Creator said to woman "in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children," that a curse was pronounced, but the joy felt by every Mother when she first presses to her heart her babe, proves the contrary.

Danger and suffering lurk in the pathway of the Expectant Mother, and should be avoided, that she may reach the hour when the hope of her heart is to be realized, in full vigor and strength.

"Mother's Friend"

so relaxes the system that the natural and necessary ..... change takes place without Nausea..... Headache, Nervous or Gloomy..... Foreboding and at the trying hour makes Child-birth easy, as so many happy mothers have experienced. Nothing but "Mother's Friend" does this. Don't be deceived.

THAT CONTRACT.

We give here a full copy of the record in the Commissioners' books, of the contract alluded to in to-day's Dispatch headed, "Is it a steal?" The following is just what was done, a year earlier than the Dispatch claims. The entry shows March 8, 1895, and reads:

Comes now John H. Hunter by A. F. Ayres and files the following proposition. To the honorable, the Board of Comissioners of DeKalb County, State of Indiana.

Gentlemen:—I will examine the books vouchers and settlements in the various offices of your county and ascertain whether or not there is any money due your county from the state or any other source on acount of any errors or omissions and in the event I find anything due the county I will collect the same without any cost whatever to the county save and except my charges as herein set forth.

And for my services I will charge you a sum equal to one half of all money collected by me, payment to be made to me as fast as I make collections.

But be it understood that this proposition does not include the examination of the accounts of the officers or ex-officers of the county with a view of ascertaining whether or not there is anything due from them to the county.

Signed
JOHN H. HUNTER
by A. F. AYRES.

We the Commissioners of DeKalb County reserve the right to accept a similar proposition made and accepted by Whitley County, Sept. 5, 1894, for the the Hunter system of Book Keeping.

Said John H. Hunter hereby agrees to furnish said books at the same price and terms furnished to Whitley County.

Auburn, Indiana March 8, 1895 } Accepted in open court this 8th day of March 1895.

James M. Henderson, Isaac Hague, John Hoffelder } Commissionres of DeKalb County, Indiana.

And the Board after examining said proposition and being sufficiently advised in the premises finds that it would be to the interest of the county to accept the same; and that an indispensable public necessity exists for the the employment of an expert accountant to examine the books, vouchers and settlements in the various offices of DeKalb County Indiana and collect any moneys that may be due the county on account of any errors or omissions. It is therefore ordered by the Board that the above and foregoing proposition of Jno. H. Hunter be and is accepted and he is hereby employed to make said examination and collect any money found due the county as above stated in his proposition.

And for his services he is hereby allowed a sum equal to one half of all sums of money so collected by him. And the Auditor is hereby ordered to issue to said John H. Hunter warrants on DeKalb County Treasurer for any sum due him under the terms of the above proposition upon accounts duly verified by him and filed with the Auditor.

JAMES M. HENDEREON, JOHN HOFFELDER, ISAAC HAGUE, } Com.

Publicly read and signed in open court March 8, 1895.

F. A. BORST,
Auditor.

In explanation of a part of this contract, it should be said that the fees due the county in matters of change of venue, should be collected by the county clerk and auditor, at the close of each term of the circuit court and the only business mistake of the Board in this matter, was in accepting the loose wording of the contract with the Hunter to collect money "due from other sources." This enabled him to go on and collect these costs for change of venue, which should have been collected by our own officers without expense. The per cent they allowed him was two great in any case. Hunter went away and did not return till in July of 1896, when he came back and claimed to Mr. Borst that he had collected about $900. He took out his half of this, and then, on the strength of the mere item in the commissioners' record, that they "reserven the right to buy" Hunter's books, he kept out $400 more for the books. The auditor filed Hunter's report and never spoke of it to the Board The books were brought into the auditor's office, and the boxes never were opened till a week or so ago. No member of the Board knew anything of them or of Hunters report, or that he had collected any venue coste or claimed any right to collect them. They thought he was to collect other odds and ends of dues owing to county from other sources. The Board neither bought the books nor authorized anyone else to buy them. They merely had reserved the right to buy them, should they ever desire to do so. It was a bit of sharp practice by Hunter who made a better bargain with the Board than should have been allowed. But the great trouble was what Hunter with the consent of the auditor, did it without the Board's knowledge. We are glad to relieve the Board of any suspicion of wrong doing and give our readers the transaction exactly as the records show.

DOG LAW.

The Auditor has received the following communication from the Auditor of state:

To Auditors and Assessors—The Attorney-General having ruled that the dog law of 1897 (Acts of 1897, p. 178.) does not apply to the assessment of dogs for the year of 1897. You are therefore directed to assess dogs for that year under the law existing prior to passage of the Act of 1897.

THE KNIGHTS OF MACCABEE

Last evening marked a brilliant epoch in the history of Auburn's Maccabee brethren. It was not only the first evening they used their lovely new hall, but they had with them the supreme officer of the state, Great Commander Meredith. Besides there was a large amount of work to do, including the initiation of quite a number of new members. And to add to the pleasures of the occasion, the ladies of the order served a lovely banquet after the regular lodge work was over. It was growing on towards midnight when the work at the lodge was finished, and the last man had been shown the mysteries of the inner court, so to speak, and of course they wanted to get acquainted with their state commander. Then they left the lodge room and marched in a body to the Armory where the ladies served the banquet. There were quite a number of invited guests present, who had been well entertained during the evening, by a social gathering of the ladies and and guests, and the sweet strains of music by the Calkin orchestra. So by the time the Knights reached the hall all were in a happy frame of mind. Soon after this, both members and guests were seated at the numerous tables which were resplendent with fine ware and table cutlery and graced with flowers, for the ladies had provided an abundance of lovely carnations, so that no one went without a favor. And such a lovely supper it was, and served with such good taste and skill. There was no waiting or wanting for anything. On behalf of the guests the DAILY wishes to say many good words for both the ladies and the Knights of the order for a most enjoyable evening.

And the music was delightful. There are no better leaders in this section than Milo Calkin and he has gathered around him a company of young ladies and gentlemen who do his training and musical taste great credit. They are:

Milo Calkin, Ora Haste, Frank Fanning, William Franks, Chas. Pricket, Harry Dewitt, Mrs. Alt Moody, Miss Ettie Prickett, Mrs. Lesh, Nellie Franks.

Altogether the Maccabee Brothers and Sisters have reason to look back to this occasion with pride and satisfaction.

EIGHTY-NINE YEARS OLD.

Butler Herald.

March 18 being the 89th birthday of Grandmother Gunsenhouser, her children, relatives and neighbors assembled at the home of her son, Isaac Gunsenhouser, one mile east of town, where she lives, and spent a very pleasant day. Although she had been quite sick during the week she had recovered sufficiently to enjoy the day in social chat with her neighbors and friends. She was the recipient of a number of presents. One of the principal features of the day was the sumptuous dinner which had been prepared. At the close of the day the guests departed for their homes feeling well repaid for the time spent in grandmother's company.

A Valuable Prescription.

Editor Morrison of Worthington, Ind. "Sun" says: "You have a valuable prescription in Electric Bitters, and I can cheerfully recommend it for constipation and sick headache, and as a general system tonic it has no equal." Mrs. Annie Stehle, 2625 Cottage Grave Ave. Chicago was all run down, could not eat nor digest food, had backache which never left her, and felt tired and weary, but six bottles of Electric Bitters restored her health and renewed her strength. Price 50 cents and $1.00. Get a bottle at Robbins & McCord's. 6

HARRY FELL IN.

Yesterday afternoon while Harry Hull was playing about the large wooden catch basin on north Van Buren street, he accidently fell in head first. There was about a foot of water it the basin and the lad got completely soaked. In his excited condition he aroused the neighbors and Gene McDowell came to his rescue. He was not hurt but badly scared.

DYNAMITE EXPLODES.

Instantly Killed Three Men in a Factory.

A terrific explosion occurred at the works of the Dupont Chemical Company, located on the banks of the Delaware River at Gibbstown, N. J. Three men were blown to atoms. They were:

James Henderson of Paulsboro, N. J.
Carl Wright of Paulsboro, N. J.
Thomas Stiles of Asbury Park, N. J.

A gang of workmen who started to clear away the wreckage immediately after the explosion, were able to find only fragments of the remains of the men.

The explosion occurred in the separating building, and that structure, with four other buildings surrounding it, was blown to splinters. The destroyed factory was devoted to the manufacture of dynamite and Atlas powder, and, because of the dangerous character of the explosives, the buildings were remote from any habitation. The shock of the explosion was plainly felt at points twenty-five miles distant.

KNOCKING.

Hawaii Wants to Be Annexed to the United States.

It is said to be probable that formal application for annexation to the United States will be made soon by the Government of Hawaii, through its Minister to the United States. The application will be presented to the State Department and it is expected will be transmitted to Congress. Ex-Minister Thurston, Attorney General Smith and Gen. Hartwell of Hawaii, have been in Washington ever since inauguration in the interest of annexation. Mr. Hatch, the Hawaiian Minister, and Mr. Smith saw the President, and he listened attentively to the arguments they had to present in favor of annexation.

Messrs. Hatch and Smith have also seen Secretary Sherman in regard to the question of annexation and presented him arguments in its favor. They decline to discuss the attitude of the President or his Premier on the subject, except to say the situation is encouraging.

Postoffice Burns.

The town of Beaver, Pa., experienced a fire that on account of high wind and poor fire-fighting facilities, threatened to destroy the entire business portion of the city. The fire lasted two hours and damaged property to about $50,000. The J. M. Buchanan Block, a four-story brick, the finest building in the city, is entirely demolished, and adjoining buildings suffered from fire, water and the falling walls of the Buchanan building. The fire started from an explosion in the office of the Beaver Star, which was in the Buchanan Block. In the block was the Postoffice, the contents of which was destroyed.

The Crop Report.

The Price Current summarizes the crop conditions as follows:

Wheat crop advices are more gloomy than previously reported for Illinois and considerable complaint has been received from Indiana and Missouri. The situation is otherwise generally favorable. Recent weather has favorably changed the prospect in some localities. Iowa expects a large increase in the spring wheat area.

Oats seeding has been retarded by moisture.

Whole Town Joins Church.

Revival services at Millwood, on the Ohio River Railroad, below Parkersburg, W. Va., has just closed because there was nothing left to convert. Even two proprietors of speak-easies were converted, closed their places and joined the church. There were seventy-five conversions and eighty-five accessions to the church.

Three Persons Drowned.

Marshal Snorden, Maggie Short and Marin Snorden were drowned near Allensville, Ky., while riding in a small boat on a pond. The craft leaked, and all jumped out, the women clinging to the man causing all to drown. A man who went to their rescue was almost drowned by the struggling women.

Fatal Accident.

A twenty-four foot fly wheel at Carnegie's Edgar Thompson Steel Works, Braddock, Pa., burst, killing David Hugo, a workman, and seriously injuring George Snyder. The damage to the plant was very heavy, and the entire works have been closed down for repairs.

Walcott on International Conference

Senator Walcott, who has interested himself so much in international bimetallism, expressed the opinion that the recent action of Japan in attempting to depreciate silver would hasten the international action to restore the equality of the two metals.

Head Torn from His Body.

Mark Pelton, foreman of a paper mill at Watervliet, Mich., while engaged in coupling shafts was caught and his head instantly torn from his shoulders, his body being torn to shreds by the hinge cog wheels and the flesh scattered over the room. The sight was horrible, and caused several lady employes to faint.

John L. Wants to Fight.

Frank V. Dunn, manager for John L. Sullivan, has posted $1,000 with a temporary stake holder to bind a match with Bob Fitzsimmons.

Eight Persons Injured.

The worst fire Lawrence, Mass., has known since the burning of the Washington mills six years ago completely dismantled the Gleason building, one of the best business blocks in Lawrence, early Monday morning, and resulted in the injury of eight persons.

To Preserve Personal Rights.

A bill was introduced in the New York Senate by Senator Charles L. Guy which proposes to incorporate the Society for the Preservation of Personal Rights, and every line of it breathes defiance to the Gerry and Comstock societies and their methods of procedure.

TARIFF DEBATE BEGUN.

Great Throngs of People Were Present at the Opening of the Discussion.

What will go down to history as the tariff debate of 1897 began in the House at 10 o'clock Monday morning. Despite the early hour of assembling there was a large attendance on the floor and the galleries showed evidence of the great interest manifested in the proceedings. Mr. Dingley and Mr. Bailey, the opposing leaders, were early in their places. By the terms of the rule under which the House is to operate during the consideration of the bill the House immediately resolved itself into committee of the whole and the Speaker conferred upon Mr. Sherman, representative of New York, the honor of presiding over the committee. Those who expected the debate to begin immediately were disappointed. The leaders decided not to dispense with the reading of the bill, but to have it read in full at the outset in order to disarm the criticism passed on previous bills that they were put through without even having been read in the House. The spectators in the galleries and the members on the floor waited while the clerk droned through the 163 pages of the bill. At the conclusion of the reading Mr. Dingley arose to open the debate and explain the intent of the bill and the results expected to follow its enactment.

TO KEEP OUT THE PLAGUE.

Russian Government Taking Prompt Precautionary Measures.

The Russian Government, according to United States Consul General Karel at St. Petersburg, is acting with vigor to prevent the spread of the dreaded bubonic plague into Russia. A sanitary commission has been created, with a fund of 100,000 rubles to draw upon, and it has added new measures of precaution to the existing regulations. It has prohibited for this year the pilgrimage of Russian Mussulmans to Mecca or to other suspected places, and forbidden Russian Christians visiting the holy places of the East. Measures have also been taken to send medical help to threatened localities. It was reported that several Indians who had come to Afghanistan had died at Kandahar last December. In consequence the Russian and Persian Governments have established military cordons on the Afghan frontier and cut off intercourse, though there have been no additional cases reported.

WANT A PRISONER OUT OF JAIL.

Maine Officials Trying to Get Rid of Davis.

A peculiar case is presented in the attempt of the officials of Penobscot County, Maine, to evict from the county jail a prisoner who has been there for four years. In September, 1893, William Davis was committed to jail for contempt in refusing to answer questions put by the court as to the whereabouts of his money. He had been sued and a judgment rendered. Davis went to jail and has refused to weaken. For three years they have been trying to find some flaw in the process of his commitment whereby he could be taken out of durance, for the county was tired of paying his board.

Sultan in No Fear.

Authentic details of the outbreak Sunday at Toka, in the Sivas district of Asia Minor, when the Turks attacked the Armenians while the latter were in church, show that 100 Christians were massacred. The Armenian quarter and bazaar were given over to pillage for eight hours. The representations of the ambassadors of the foreign powers regarding the condition of Anatolia have made but little impress upon the sultan, who, relying upon the support of Russia, is convinced that he has nothing to fear from the so-called concert of the powers, which is continually harped upon, although it is believed that little or no concert beyond the desire in some quarters to postpone an outbreak of war really exists. The diplomats are said to be once more turning their attention to the conduct of the sultan, and it is semi-officially intimated that they are again of the opinion that the system of friendly representations on the subject of Armenia, which have hitherto been followed, must be changed for stronger methods of dealing with the evils. The sultan, however, has heard this story many times during the last few years and he consoles himself with the belief that he will survive this new fit of righteous indignation, as he has tided over others of a much more serious character.

Her Check Was Not Good.

A woman giving her name as Mrs. Lena Dunbar, of Texas, went to Columbia, Mo., with the intention of purchasing stock. She was a dashing blonde, and soon started negotiations for a number of cars of cattle. She bought a carload of cattle from Charles Turner and tendered a check for $900 on the Exchange National Bank. On presentation the check was refused payment. The woman can make no explanation of the transaction and is thought to be insane. She is handsome, about 30 and is an inveterate smoker.

Challenges All Pie Eaters.

William J. McCormack, champion pie eater of Brooklyn, is out with a challenge to any biter in the world to eat two pies to his one for any amount of money and gate receipts. No kind of pies are barred. Hard or soft, open-face or hunting-case pies go. The champion of Brooklyn is a sparsely set young man of 24 years of age. His mouth measurements are two and one-half inches in repose, four inches when distended. He expects to make some arrangements with the kinetoscope people in case of a match.

Are in a Bad Way.

Just now the Baptists are facing a crisis in their financial affairs. The American Baptist Home Missionary Society and the American Baptist Missionary Union will, by the end of this month, have run in debt to the amount of $486,000 since the first of the year. Since the panic of 1893 the society has felt the effect of hard times and its income has fallen away enormously. Unless large offerings are received a wholesale policy of retrenchment will undoubtedly be followed.

Crashed Through a Bridge.

The engine and four cars of the northbound local on the Chicago and Texas Railway went down with the bridge across the Big Muddy river at Aldridge station, south of Grand Tower, Ill. Engineer Joe Forester and Fireman James Anderson were drowned. The Big Muddy is raging, and the bridge failed to withstand the pressure.

St. Louis Printers in Trouble.

W. E. Stephens & Co., lithographers, of St. Louis, have assigned for the benefit of creditors. There are no preferences. The property is turned over to Assignee Isaac J. Orr to be divided according to the claims. The liabilities are $35,000, and the assets $45,000. Assignee Orr says creditors will be paid in full.

Suspected Murderer's End.

The man recently arrested at Valley Mills, Texas, as Joseph Blanther, the San Francisco murderer, for whom a reward of $1,000 is offered, committed suicide by taking morphine in the county jail at Houston. He was teaching school at the time of his arrest, and stood well in the community.

Passes the Senate.

The anti-department store bill passed the Illinois Senate Wednesday. The vote was 39 to 4, with 7 members absent or refusing to vote. The four members opening protesting against the measure were Baxter, Chapman, Hamilton and McClourl. A number who voted for it did so under protest, saying they believed it to be unconstitutional, but were willing to let it go to the courts. Senator Baxter made a speech against the bill. He declared such legislation to be against the spirit of all advancement. The department store, he said, was the natural product of economical conditions. It was, he said, an example of the universal tendency toward the concentration of capital and the centralization of distribution. The introduction of machinery, he explained, resulted in doing away with the small shops and smithies, and in sending the spinning wheel and hand loom to the garret, but in the end it increased man's power of productiveness and made the luxuries and necessaries more plentiful, and gave greater leisure to workmen for recreation and intellectual improvement. "If we are to follow the spirit of this legislation," said he, "we might as well do away with the railroad, the telegraph, and the telephone. We should go back to the ox teams as a means of transportation and distribution of merchandise. I must vote against this bill," concluded Senator Baxter, "because it is not in the interest of the great consuming class; because it will impede progress and stop the march of civilization." Senator Mahoney answered Senator Baxter with a speech in which he defended the bill and criticised the department stores. He referred to the alleged fact that there are 22,000 unrented stores in Chicago and argued that the big establishments are responsible for such a condition. He said he would vote for the bill on the ground of morality alone, and declared that the conditions under which women are employed in department stores in Chicago are a disgrace to the city. Continuing, he asserted that the big stores outstrip their smaller competitors, not because of the superior business ability of their managers, but because the latter have the advantages of securing more capital, "furnished in many cases," said Mahoney, "by retired stockyards magnates."

READY TO DIE FOR CRETE.

Proposal of the Powers to Grant Autonomy Is Refused.

A dispatch from Canea, Crete, says that the insurgent commander-in-chief at Akrotiri referred the proposal of the powers to grant autonomy to Crete to the various leaders of the insurgent forces who had assembled from different parts of of the island. The Cretan leaders unanimously declared that only two issues were possible—the annexation of Crete to Greece or fighting until death ends the struggle for the union. Advices from Aria say that as a result of the protest of Greece Turkey has stopped the construction of fortifications at Prevesa, at the northern entrance of the Gulf of Arta, which was contrary to the stipulations of the treaty of Berlin. Startling reports are in circulation regarding the numerical strength of the Turkish troops on the frontier. For instance, one report has it that the Turks have concentrated 100,000 troops on the frontiers of Epirus alone. The report, however, is not believed in Greek military circles.

Would Bar Caterers to Pugilism.

Miss Frances Willard is in communication with the leading women engaged in philanthropy and reform, asking if there cannot be a combination of influence whereby women throughout the country will agree to give their patronage only to the newspapers that avoid furnishing extended accounts of prize fights. She also asks that a protest be made by the womanhood of the country on the ground that the arbitration treaty and the "Nevada brulsing ring" present in combination a most incongruous spectacle.

Drowned in a City Street.

Torrents of water rushed through the streets of North Mankato, Minn. Nearly every house in the village has been abandoned, the families moving their most valued possessions to Mankato. Nearly 300 families in the lower section of the city have also been compelled to leave their homes. A sleigh load of men was overturned by the torrent in a North Mankato street and one of the occupants was drowned.

Breder Stole $30,000.

Discoveries just made add $16,000 to the embezzlement of Cyrus E. Breder, the defaulting cashier of the First National Bank of Bethlehem, Pa., who disappeared a few weeks ago, leaving a shortage estimated at the time to amount to $13,000. He also stole $1,000 from a building association.

Iron Ore Pool Dissolves.

The Bessemer Iron Association, known as the iron ore pool, has been dissolved. The big interests and the Minnesota Iron Company were unable to agree. This means lower prices for ore, greater production at mines and a reduction in the wages of labor.

Japan for Gold.

The bill adopting the gold standard has passed the house of peers of Japan and only awaits the signature of the emperor to become a law.

Cabinet Will Attend.

President McKinley, Vice-President Hobart and the members of the cabinet will attend the dedication of the new Grant tomb in New York.

ELEMENTS IN A RIOT.

TREMENDOUS DAMAGE OVER A WIDE AREA.

Wisconsin, the Dakotas, Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi and Alabama Suffer from the Greatest Visitation in Years

And the Floods Came.

The peculiar meteorological conditions of the past few weeks culminated Friday and Saturday in floods which for vastness of volume and extent excel anything in the history of the country. All sections of the middle West, Northwest and South report tremendous damage by rising and uncontrolled streams. Bridges were swept from highways and railways; lowlands were flooded to a navigable depth; farms, plantations and cities which for years had suffered immunity from such danger, became submerged; millions of dollars of damage to buildings and live stock resulted. In Missouri there occurred great loss of life; while in Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, Wisconsin and Iowa thousands of people were driven from their homes in imm[illegible] peril, to watch the destruction of eve[illegible]ing they had in the world.

Of Northern cities, Milwaukee was the worst sufferer. The district of the city known as the Menominee Valley, was submerged to a depth of over ten feet, and a large number of people were imprisoned in their homes for hours until boats were sent to rescue them. Fully fifty houses had water up to the second story, and hundreds were made untenable. The West Milwaukee shops were flooded, and the bridge at the Monarch stone quarry was carried out. Basements in the business district were filled, as was also the condition at Fond du Lac and Oshkosh. Elroy lost her great iron bridge, and at Port Washington the railway bridge and a freight train were wrecked. At Kenosha and Richland streams were out of banks.

At Luverne, Minn., the Little Rock River was a mile wide, pouring a vast volume into the Sioux. A dozen bridges in Southwestern Minnesota went down, and all traffic on several branches of the Great Northern, Northwestern and Milwaukee lines running Northwest Iowa and Eastern South Dakota was suspended.

Advices from Omaha say: "With every stream in Nebraska and Western Iowa pouring a flood of unusual proportions into the Missouri River and the enormous volume of water coming down from the north from the tributaries of that stream, the indications are that one of the most disastrous floods in this region of the Missouri valley is certain. From the north to the south State line of Nebraska the Missouri is full of heavy ice, and in some places, the channel is solidly blocked with enormous gorges of ice. The frequency with which these gorges are forming and giving way in the Missouri and its Nebraska tributaries is causing the volume of water to fluctuate in the most remarkable manner. Thus far the damage in the interior of the State as a result of the swollen streams is much heavier than along the Missouri where the real force of the flood has scarcely yet been felt. The damage along the Missouri is confined very largely to the Iowa side, where the land is much lower than on the western shore."

United States Weather Observer Welsh of Omaha said Friday night: "I do not desire to pose as an alarmist, but I cannot see how the Missouri Valley in this locality can possibly escape a most disastrous flood. Perhaps the ice may move out before the greater volume of water is released from the north, but the indications now are most alarming. My advice is to those on the lowlands in Iowa and Nebraska to prepare to see some exceedingly high water."

The ice is solid in the Missouri at Sioux City, and the river is rising rapidly. Gorges are forming and the people living along the lowlands are vacating their homes and moving their property to higher grounds. At scores of points large forces of men are at work with dynamite breaking up the ice gorges. At Sioux City the Sioux City and Northern bridge went out, as did all other structures over the Floyd from Le Mars down. The Big Sioux passed all previous marks, entirely flooding the village of Westfield and making a clean sweep of Milwaukee and St. Paul bridges and culverts.

In the Minnesota-South Dakota affected districts, many towns were submerged, and all rail traffic stopped. Luverne, Spring Valley, Faribault and Preston, in Minnesota, and Centerville, Vermilion, Pembina, and Jamestown, in the Dakotas, all suffered severely.

A giant crevasse at Caruthersville, Mo., supposed to have been cut by parties from above on the Tennessee side to release the waters and save the upper districts from the deluge, let the water rush over miles and miles of fertile country, destroying everything in its path. Several Government boats were in the vicinity, and work of repair immediately commenced. At first it was greatly impeded by the earth being all mud; but soon bags of sand were utilized, and hundreds of tons of this material anchored the ends of the break, so that connections by chain booms and refuse could be made. Seventeen lives are reported lost from this locality.

In Tennessee, Memphis was high and dry, yet surrounded by water; and the city was overrun by thousands of refugees, brought in by steamers which had navigated over what is ordinarily fertile territory. These refugees were in the most abject destitution, nearly all colored, and very unruly. Relief from outside will surely be needed. For several days six regular steam craft were engaged in penetrating the flooded country to the uttermost possible limit, and beyond that limit almost innumerable smaller vessels have been pushed to the remotest corners.

Various Mississippi, Louisiana and Alabama points report, aside from enormous destruction by water, tornadoes of the severest type. Nearly every place afflicted reports from one to five fatalities. Utica and Brander, Miss., were especially severe sufferers. From the Warrior River above Tuscaloosa, Ala., five corpses were recovered.

Chicago's particular portion of these remarkable conditions took the form of enormous precipitation of water, and a Stygian darkness at mid-afternoon Friday. Business stopped with a jolt. Blackness and an impenetrable pall of fog made electric headlights of motor cars invisible across the street. Sixteen-story buildings were hidden from sight. In all districts a semi-panic prevailed, for remembrance of the St. Louis cyclone was vividly awakened. People scurried like frightened rabbits into any burrow that promised protection. This condition lasted but a few minutes, but was repeated several times when ensued a down-pour resembling a cloudburst, followed later by violent electric storms, raising dire confusion in fire alarm and electric light stations. Aside from flooded basements no damage is reported.

Sparks from the Wires.

Sig. Grimaldi, the Italian statesman and ex-cabinet minister, is dead.

In four legislative elections which took place in France all the districts returned the Radical-Socialist candidates.

NATIONAL SOLONS.

REVIEW OF THEIR WORK AT WASHINGTON.

Detailed Proceedings of Senate and House—Bills Passed or Introduced in Either Branch—Questions of Moment to the Country at Large.

The Legislative Grind.

Immediately after the reading of the journal in the House Friday Mr. Dingley reported the tariff bill. Mr. Bailey secured unanimous consent to extend for two days the time in which the minority report may be filed. The sundry civil bill, carrying $53,147,551, and the general deficiency bill, carrying $8,166,214, were passed. The Senate open session lasted fifty minutes and was given almost entirely to the introduction of bills. Most of the day was spent in executive session, the international arbitration treaty being under discussion. The Senate confirmed the nominations of John Hay of the District of Columbia to be ambassador of the United States to Great Britain; Horace Porter of New York, to be ambassador of the United States to France; Henry White of Rhode Island, to be secretary of the embassy of the United States to Great Britain; Perry S. Heath of Indiana, to be first assistant postmaster general; C. U. Gordon, to be postmaster at Chicago. The Senate adjourned till Monday.

The House Saturday pushed through the two remaining "left over" appropriation bills according to Friday's schedule, the agricultural bill carrying $3,182,902 and the Indian carrying $7,670,220. After the appropriation bills were passed a resolution for extra mileage and stationery for this session of Congress was adopted. The debate on this resolution was rather lively, and a question as to whether Mr. Holman, "the watchdog of the treasury," who opposed it, had taken the extra mileage voted by the Fifty-third Congress was used to greatly embarrass the economist. He finally declined to answer it on the ground that it was "impertinent."

Debate upon the tariff bill was commenced in the House Monday. Mr. Bailey of Texas presented a minority report on the bill. The Anglo-American arbitration treaty was advanced toward final ratification in the Senate. All the amendments recommended by the Committee on Foreign Relations were agreed to. These amendments provide for ratification by the Senate of all agreements between this Government and Great Britain; eliminating the United States Supreme Court as members of arbitration tribunal; and abolishing the provision for an umpire, thus dispensing with the services of King Oscar of Norway and Sweden.

On Tuesday, the speech of Mr. Dolliver, of Iowa, was the feature of the tariff debate, which occupied both day and night sessions. The time of the Senate was divided between an unexpected discussion of civil service, election of Senators by popular vote, and the passage of bills to establish a survey of certain lands in Nebraska and the bill to amend the act repealing the timber culture laws.

The House Wednesday was again engaged in tariff debate, the discussion lasting into the night. The opposition made by the colleges of New England and by many scientific men against the duties placed on books and scientific apparatus by the Dingley bill induced the framers of the measure to amend it and restore so many of these articles to the free list as are imported for the use of educational institutions. The Senate's open session lasted only half an hour, and no business was done beyond the introduction of bills. Among these was one by Mr. Allen, of Nebraska, to repeal the civil service laws, and to do away with educational tests as a preliminary to entering the public service. Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, presented a bill prohibiting vitascope and kindred exhibitions of prize fights in the District of Columbia and the territories and forbidding the shipment of pictures for these exhibits by mail or through any interstate means. The Senate confirmed the appointment of Binger Hermann, of Oregon, to be Commissioner of the General Land Office; E. G. Timms, of Wisconsin, to be Auditor of the State and other departments, and George E. Thummel, of Nebraska, to be Marshal of the United States district of Nebraska.

The four-days' debate upon the tariff bill in the House closed Thursday night, making the bill open for amendment under the five-minute rule until the time set for a vote. The Senate held a half-hour session early in the day, and then, after two hours in executive session on the arbitration treaty, resumed the open session in order to go on with the bankruptcy bill. Amended credentials were presented in behalf of John W. Henderson, appointed by the Governor of Florida to the seat vacated by Mr. Call. It brought out a statement from Mr. Hoar, acting chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that action on the pending election cases was delayed by the uncertainty as to committee organization in the Senate. The revised credentials were referred to the Elections Committee.

A Lucky Hoosier.

"Things will come my way some of these days," said John Wampler on the eve of his departure from Crawfordsville for the West six weeks ago. Just before leaving Wampler married Miss Mollie Roberts, a supposed orphan girl.

While making a tour of the lead mines section of Missouri the other day Mr. Wampler writes that he ran across a James Roberts, a wealthy miner, who turns out to be his father-in-law. Roberts went West twenty years ago, leaving his infant daughter with relatives in Illinois. The fates were against him for ten years, but finally he struck the lead regions and the tide turned.

He struck it rich and began looking for his daughter, but the relatives had died and removed, and although he spent thousands of dollars he could never find a trace of her. He was greatly overjoyed at the unexpected reunion in Missouri, and showed his gratification by presenting his daughter with $50,000 in cash as a wedding gift.

Purpose in Life.—Have a purpose. Don't drift. All other things being equal, the young man who has a firm purpose to be the best and do the best will come out ahead in the long run.—Rev. Dr. Gunsbart, Baptist, Boston, Mass.

Money Will Save Souls.—Money has an evangelizing power in the hands of Christians as surely as it has a commercial value. Money must be laid at the feet of Jesus Christ for the salvation of a world.—Rev. W. G. Partridge, Baptist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Value of the Church.—Half the value of the country church is its social value. It is where the families of the countryside meet and shake hands and compare notes. I used to like to see them assemble on foot, on horseback and in lumber wagons. The church was a meeting house—the country club house.—Rev. M. W. Reed, Independent, Denver, Colo.

The Song of Songs.—I raise my voice here to thank God for the song of songs that teaches us that all the allurements of courts, all the wealth of the world, are nothing compared with sweet, homely love.—Rev. Lyman Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Then and Now.—Jesus is a more real and greater personage in the nineteenth century than he was in the first. In the first he was rejected, despised, crucified. In the nineteenth he is revered, accepted, crowned.—Rev. J. F. Carson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Heaven.—The real heaven is a state and not a place. The heavenly character conditions the heavenly inheritance. Love to God and love to men are the essential elements of this character. Earth is a hell below without this love, and heaven would also be a hell if it were wanting.—Bishop Fallows, Episcopalian, Chicago, Ill.

The God Idea.—The god idea arose among the Hebrews, grew among the Israelites and developed in greater grandeur among the Jews. It passed through all the stages of a family god, a tribal god, a national god, a God greater than all the gods, until it evolved into the conception of a God who is the universal Lord.—Rabbi J. L. Levy, Hebrew, Philadelphia, Pa.

God's Message.—The Bible contains the promise of its own entire solution and explanation. The message of the master is that we shall seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and then all these things—understanding, knowledge, apprehension, appreciation of the divine—will be added unto us.—William J. Cozens, Salvationist, Boston, Mass.

Preaching.—To go into the world and preach the Gospel to every people is a command that has been delivered to us, and the pastor's great duty is to carry out that command. Let him carry that Gospel to his own people, in a straightforward, sincere and honest way, and fit them for its still broader dissemination.—Rev. F. B. Meyer, Evangelist, New York City.

The Religion of Christ.—Christianity is the religion of Christ, founded by him and based upon the teachings given by him and his inspired followers. These teachings make plain his claim to be divine—the God man—and declare unequivocally that salvation is obtained through his sacrifice of himself for the sins of the world.—Rev. Roderick Terry, Reformed, New York City.

Contempt of Court.

"Ten dollars," said the magistrate.

"But, your honor," said the prisoner, "I protest against this fine. I have the right to make a defense against the charge."

"But you have already pleaded guilty," said the magistrate.

"I beg your honor's pardon. I denied the charge in the plainest terms."

"Young man," said the magistrate sternly, "I want to call your attention to the fact that the court understands the English language. You have pleaded guilty in unmistakable words. The plaintiff charges you with assault and battery. It is clearly evident that he has been assaulted and battered. According to your statement he approached you on the street and used abusive language toward you. Then you say that you 'didn't do a thing to him.' If the court understands the language spoken by seventy millions of people, you immediately wiped up the earth with him. The fine stands, and any further reflection upon the court's knowledge of English

LIFE AND DEATH.

Life is a river, whose perennial source

An Inaugural Ball Cinderella.

Mrs. Bob Miller had many things in her favor when she first appeared at the national capital. She was from New York, had been twice married, and had the air of always being equal to the occasion and quite up with people and things. At the first glance she seemed to impress you as being distinguished looking. On nearer acquaintance you did not care whether the distinguished look was skin deep or not, she was so gracious and charming, notwithstanding the forty years which had passed over her head.

Mrs. Bob Miller was the wife of a foreman at the government printing office. This was not much in her favor socially, but the fact that there was a Representative Robert Miller from New York turned out to be a great deal in her favor. Innocently enough, she left casual acquaintances under the impression that she was Mrs. Representative Robert Miller. If it did them any good to believe it, she was not going to trouble herself about their impressions being incorrect.

As for Bob Miller, he had come to the conclusion that he possessed the brightest and most lovable woman in the world.

"Only, Molly darling," he would say, "do be careful and never say that you are Mrs. Representative Miller, for if you do you will get both of us into trouble. You can pose as much as you like as the wife of Mr. Miller, lately connected with a New York magazine, for that is true enough. But do not go in for anything quite off the line; you might hang yourself."

"Why, Bob," she would exclaim in injured surprise, "you do not think for one moment that I would tell a story! I am just having some fun, and if the set of empty heads would rather fawn and cringe to me because they believe I am the wife of Representative Miller, instead of the wife of honest Bob Miller, printer, well, it's their sin, not mine."

Before the Millers had been one season in Washington, Mrs. Bob had attended most of the official receptions. She was well known, by sight, at the cabinet receptions. On cabinet Wednesdays she seldom ate a square meal at home, the collations being enough to satisfy her needs. At this time no cards were issued for the levees, it being taken for granted that only those having the right to attend would avail themselves of the opportunity. Mrs. Bob Miller went to her first one out of curiosity, with a native Washingtonian, who was rather up to such things. It so happened that she made quite a hit. It was purely a stroke of good luck, she informed Mr. Bob that night.

As her house was small, Mrs. Miller was not called on to give receptions of her own. She hinted quietly that her husband was a man of very retired disposition, and cared more for study than social pleasures. But that did not prevent her urging some of her acquaintances to drop in for a quiet call and chat, and it was not long before carriages and cabs were seen to stop in front of the dainty little house on Q street, which she had furnished with so much taste and ingenuity, and at so little cost. For quite a time matters bowled along merrily.

One Saturday morning, towards noon, a young girl rang Mrs. Miller's bell. A young mulatto woman, neatly attired in black gingham, a big white apron and cap, appeared at the door.

"Is your mistress at home, Mary?" asked the girl.

The girl said she would see, and taking the young lady's card, ascended the softly carpeted stairs. Miss Ethel Clifford, the early caller, sat down in the dimly lit hall, made beautiful with rugs and hangings—bought cheap at the sale of some departing diplomat's effects—and awaited the coming of Mrs. Miller.

"My dear girl," was that lady's effusive greeting when she appeared, "I am so glad to see you! So you have kept your promise and will go with me to Mrs. Cleveland's reception? It is so good of you. I'd hate to go alone, and there is no one I care to have with me as I do you. You are a very stupid little thing after all. How do you expect to be able to write about social life if you do not go about more? You can get more material for character in the four hours you will have to wait in line this afternoon than you could get in ten years otherwise."

"Yes, I know, Mrs. Miller, but I am so timid about going to the cabinet and other official receptions. I am so afraid I'll be found out as a nobody." She refrained from saying what she thought—"We'll be found out to be nobodies." "But I do not mind this reception, for it is truly a public one. Bess, May, and Lil are going together, and I said we might try and meet them at the north gate of the grounds."

"Well, we'll see when we get there. The reception is to begin at two o'clock. We'll have lunch, and then start right down town. We can take the herdic, a few blocks from here, and ride down to the corner opposite the White House grounds. Oh, you will have a good time—see if you don't. What have you got on, my dear?"

The girl stood out in the strong light near the back window, and threw off her long light ulster. The other regarded her with pleasure. Ethel Clifford was one of those girls whom one person might meet to-day and declare she was handsome, and whom another might meet to-morrow and say she was not even pretty. Her looks changed like April weather. That day she was radiant. Her well formed face was glowing from her late bath, and the long walk in the crisp February sunshine. Her light brown hair was well groomed, and its waves and curls, over which she had spent some little time, repaid her efforts. Her large gray eyes were almost black looking; her lips were red and soft and parted over her well shaped, white teeth. On the light brown hair jauntily sat a toque of dark blue velvet, trimmed with silver fur and the wings of a sea gull. Matching her hat in color was her tailor made suit of cloth, trimmed with the same silver fox, and her hands nestled warmly in a muff of blue velvet, silver fox, and violets. She looked dainty and sweet, and pleasing to the most critical eye, for youth and health beamed all over her.

"You do look lovely, my dear," exclaimed Mrs. Bob. "You have great tact about your dress. No one would imagine that you were working for your living as a stenographer. All the more credit to you and me, my dear, that we are taken for people who have a long purse at command. So you managed to get off to-day?"

"Yes, old Tait was in one of his good humors yesterday. He got a fifteen thousand dollar claim through the court. He was jubilant, and after his jubilancy had subsided sufficiently for him to come down to earth, I got permission to attend Mrs. Cleveland's reception, as it would probably be her last one."

After lunch, Mrs. Bob Miller, attired in her black satin and a seal plush sack, with a dainty little bonnet perched on her silver hair, and accompanied by Ethel Clifford, was conveyed down town in one of the rumbling red herdics, drawn by two lean brown horses, whose shivering bones were covered with faded gray cotton blankets. Truly not a fit equipage for these two lovely women on the way to the reception of the first lady in the land! But as no one would be the wiser, what need they care?

Though the noon hour was not yet ended, a line of people extended from the white portico of the Presidential mansion down to the north gates and then for half a block away. The newly arrived callers were made to take their proper places, as policemen were stationed at close intervals to prevent late comers getting ahead. Ethel was much amused at a fat woman whom she christened "Mrs. Spangles." She tried all sorts of wiles to induce the policeman to let her get farther up in the line; but as she was fat, forty, and not at all fair, he was callous to her charms. Had he succumbed he would probably have brought down on his helmet the righteous wrath of a score of angry females.

For nearly two hours Mrs. Miller and her charge waited before they could plant their feet on the first stone step of the portico, and during that time Ethel good-naturedly amused herself by watching her neighbors' faces and listening to their talk. It was rather chilly standing in the park, but her pride made her swallow her discomfort and she did not make any complaint. Step by step the line lessened, and at last they reached the door of the Red Room, where the usher asks for callers' names.

"Miss Clifford," murmurs Ethel.

"Miss Snifferd," calls the usher, as he presents her to Mrs. Cleveland. At the misnomer poor Ethel becomes so confused that she fails to receive a definite impression of the first lady of the land and her assistants. She sees a glimpse of a white dress, and then, with the clasp of a warm hand, and the touch of some cold, fishy ones, she passes into the East Room.

Mrs. Bob recognizes in the receiving line one of the ladies whom she had met several times that winter, and she hastens to impart the information to Ethel.

"Oh, don't tell me, Mrs. Miller. I am so disappointed. I don't know what Mrs. Cleveland looks like. That man calling me 'Miss Snifferd' quite finished me. I only remember that she gave me a warm clasp as though she had not shaken hands with any one for a week; that the others greeted me as if they had hold of a wet dish rag, and then I landed in here."

"Never mind, my dear," said Mrs. Miller consolingly; "we'll take a walk into the conservatory, look at the people, and try and slip into the line again. I've often done that. Have your senses about you this time, and take a good look."

Acting on Mrs. Miller's suggestion, they wandered as best they might through the open rooms into the conservatory, looked out the big East Room windows down toward the Monument, gazed at their full length figures in the pier mirrors, and then set about falling in line again. They were not discovered, but were again presented to Mrs. Cleveland. Ethel took a good look, and carried away a pretty, never-to-be-forgotten picture in her memory of the beautiful mistress of the White House.

On coming out of the mansion they encountered three young men, acquaintances of Ethel. By one of these a fourth young man was introduced to her as Mr. Horace G. Denison, of Virginia, the grandson of a former President. Ethel was much impressed with both the lineage and lineaments of Mr. Denison. He was about 26 years of age, well built, with a clear cut, clean shaven face, dark eyes, and rather long black hair. He was politeness personified—not the politeness acquired in a short time and aired only on special occasions, but the politeness that is innate in a Southern gentleman. He fell into step with Ethel and Guy Morton, and they talked about the reception, the people, the flowers, and the Marine Band.

This gallant descendant of a famous man was well pleased with himself and all the world that late afternoon, and he proceeded to make himself quite agreeable to the young girl. He thought her decidedly pretty and clever, and when Guy was answering some query put by Mrs. Miller from the rear, he went so far as to express his pleasure at meeting her. Ethel, in turn, felt as if she were treading on air, instead of along the asphalt walks.

"Are you going to the inaugural ball, Miss Ethel?" asked young Morton. "Denison and we three fellows intend to show up that night."

Ethel replied that she did not think she could go, and it was then that Mrs. Miller again showed her tact. She was very much delighted with Mr. Denison and with his friends. To the young Virginian she had been introduced as Mrs. Robert Miller, of New York, and when he said that he thought he had met that lady before, she gave her customary reply of presumption that it was at some official reception. Now she was not going to let Ethel throw away her chances, so she quickly interrupted:

"Of course Miss Clifford is going. Her mother promised me that I might chaperon her."

Ethel did not reply then, but waited until she was alone with Mrs. Bob. The young men bade them good evening at the corner. Mr. Denison said he would be pleased to walk up Fifteenth street with the ladies, but he was due at the Riggs House at 6 o'clock, as he was his Senator uncle's secretary, and there was to be a night session. Mrs. Miller warmly invited the young men to call, saying that Ethel was accustomed to spend Friday evenings with her. Mr. Denison claimed the honor of coming on the next Friday, and then walked toward the Riggs House.

"Oh, dear Mrs. Miller," exclaimed Ethel, after the quartet had departed, "why did you say that about the ball? You know I can't possibly go; I haven't a thing to wear, and the ball is only three weeks off."

"Oh, but you can and must go. You can get something in that time. Haven't you any money saved, you extravagant girl?"

"Yes, but I am saving it for a camping trip next summer."

"A camping trip! Nonsense! Let the camping go. I think Mr. Denison will have something to say about next summer, if he gets a little encouragement. Come up and stay to tea with me, and we will talk the dress over. You can get off some day next week, and we will make purchases. Already I have decided what you shall wear. You must have white—you have such a beautiful color when you get excited, and I know you will be excited that night. Get soft white, with red sash ribbon, red slippers, red gloves, and rich red roses."

"My dear Mrs. Miller! What would mother say to such a costume? She would probably ask whether I was attending a masquerade party. She will think it useless extravagance, any way; the tickets are five dollars, to say nothing of the carriage, supper and the rest of it."

"Never mind these things. Mrs. Miller wants to act as chaperon to a pretty, brilliant girl. We'll say that Mr. Robert Miller is sick, for I know he will not go, and then I can chaperon you as your aunt. Now, as for that costume, you must wear it. There will be lots of beautiful dresses there; lots of imported gowns, but the men don't care whether the gowns are imported or not. Men like white; it appeals to their better natures. They like red; it appeals to their passionate natures. If the colors are well mixed, you will the most attractive girl in the ball room. Yes, you shall have white China silk, with puffed sleeves and a V-shaped neck. You have a beautiful neck, and I'll lend you my corals. The red slippers, gloves and roses you must have."

Ethel fell into the dream of loveliness at once, and after that scarcely slept in anticipation of the great night. She had met Denison at Mrs. Miller's several times since that Saturday, and every time made her more desirous of shining before him. Some of his acquaintances had informed him that Ethel was studying law with Judge Tait; that her people had had means at one time, but were now just merely well off. Young Denison swallowed this information, and kept on meeting Miss Clifford at the home of Mrs. Robert Miller, of New York.

General Harrison's inauguration took place amid sheets of rain that swept the streets of Washington and soaked the passing soldiers, but did not dampen the enthusiasm of the crowds that gathered to watch the pageantry. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Miller, with Ethel, had places on the stand opposite the reviewing party. They stayed in their wet seats until nearly four o'clock, and then, though the parade was still passing, they rose to go home, for Mrs. Miller insisted that they must have warm baths, hot bouillon, and a good nap before getting ready for the ball. As Ethel's family lived a little distance outside the city, she was to stay at Mrs. Miller's all night.

At nine o'clock the two ladies drove away from the Miller home. Mrs. Miller was resplendent in gray silk, black lace and violets. Ethel was a realization of their dreams. She had never looked so beautiful in all her life, she has never looked so beautiful since. She had not been in the great hall of the Pension Office an hour before her program was almost filled. After a little while she realized that a great many people were not dancing, and so she changed some of her engagements into promenades. Mrs. Miller of New York was much in evidence, and watched her protege with pride. She had heard many favorable comments on Ethel's beauty, and also many queries as to her identity.

The hours slipped swiftly on, marked with happiness to Ethel, especially in her dances and promenades with young Denison. He was as attentive and gracious as a man could be, and was much impressed with all the admiration accorded to Mrs. Miller of New York and her protege.

"Do you know you are prettiest girl at the ball, Miss Clifford?" he said suddenly.

Ethel, who had seen just twenty summers, could not take this compliment as a matter of course, and colored more brightly than before.

"No," she answered simply. "How can I tell?"

"Let me show you," he said, and led her before one of the long mirrors draped with red, white and blue.

The girl regarded the two figures in the glass, then, after one deep glance, turned quickly away. She knew the part she was playing, that of being a somebody when she was in reality a social nobody. The shame of it almost choked her. Just then some one passed, and she heard the remark:

"That's young Denison, of the Virginia Denisons, and Miss Clifford, niece of Mrs. Representative Miller, of New York."

The girl turned to the distinguished looking young fellow at her side. "Take me out, please; I am tired of all this heat and crush."

"But it is cold and wet outside, and your dress is thin. There is no protection there," he remonstrated, wondering at her sudden impetuosity.

"Do you mind the wet?"

"No, but I could not think of taking you out in it."

"Please wait for me at the door of the cloak room," she persisted; and after he had escorted her there, he stood a little way off, still wondering at her change of manner.

Just then another man came up.

"Say, Denison, give me an introduction to your partner. She is the envy of all the women and the admiration of all the men in the room. Where did you ever find her? What a piece of natural beauty, and how divinely she dances! Jove, but you two make a handsome couple! I hear she is the niece of a New York Congressman; introduce me, won't you?"

Denison regarded the blase old fellow half impatiently.

"Wait until after supper. I am going to take her in."

The old beau walked off, and then a lithe figure, wrapped up warmly in a red carriage cloak and a white knitted fascinator, came out of the cloak room.

"Have you your coat and hat?" she asked. "See, I have put on my high shoes and my warm wraps."

"You still insist on the wet air, do you?"

"Yes," and she smiled faintly.

When Denison had gone for his things she sat in the corner and took in all the brilliancy before her. She thought of her wonderful entrance there; her sudden popularity, the admiration, the homage. With this she contrasted the cold, everyday drudgery; her plain home, her common, though honest people. Now she was going to take all this borrowed glory in her hands and throw it away forever. She was going back where she belonged; there was nothing to be ashamed of in that plain life, if there was nothing to brag of. She could not go on living this lie, meeting this man at Mrs. Miller's, pretending to be somebody, when her family needed her aid. Better let him know it at once and drop her, than let him meet her again and again, and love him more the more they met. Yes, she owned it—she loved him with all the glad, romantic impetuosity of a first love. Tears were welling in her sparkling gray eyes when her escort returned.

"We can stay in the shelter of the east door," she said. "We will not stay there long—just a little while. I think when Mrs. Miller is ready we will start for home."

The cold rain was beating drearily against the empty benches, the bushes in the park, and the trees that lined the streets. The two young people had left the warmth and the glare of the ball room behind them, to face the dreariness of the black night, and the modest row of houses opposite the park. They both felt the difference, and he spoke of it, tenderly holding the red gloved hand as he did so.

"Mr. Denison—" she began. Oh, this paradise on which she was going to turn her back! She, the Cinderella of the inaugural ball, would slip away from the prince before he found her in rags. "Mr. Denison—" she started again, and then went bravely on. "You spoke to-night of what some have said about me. Now I want to say that to scarcely any of it have I a right. Mrs. Miller is not my aunt, and I am not connected in any way with a family that has been rich, famous, or otherwise prominent. My father is merely a government clerk. We are people of modest means, and have nothing to recommend us save honesty and a little coat of smartness. I am a stenographer to Judge Tait. I never posed as a society girl. I do not care to now—I could not. I do not wish you to have wrong impressions in that direction. You might think I was a somebody—" The girl was actually sobbing.

It was then that the chivalrous scion of a famous family put his arm around the slender figure in the red cloak.

"Hush, my dear girl! Thank God! Of all things in the world I reverence truth the highest! I despise all this shallowness, this leaning back on one's ancestors—though I am proud of mine in a way. But still, I want the world to accept me, not his dead glories. Ethel, I loved you from that first day when I met you at Mrs. Cleveland's reception. I had heard of your friend, Mrs. Miller, but I found out that she was not the wife of Mr. Robert Miller, M. C. I was rather disappointed in you, but then I reflected that it was not you who misled me. I came to the ball to-night partly to see how you would carry yourself under her banner. You have done better than the rest of them in there. Still I could not help feeling there was something wanting. I wanted to know that you were not shallow. I wanted to love you, but I tried to keep myself from loving a deceitful girl. Forgive me if I speak too soon or too bluntly—I cannot help it. Ethel"—the distinguished face bent over the red shoulder—"Ethel, do you think you could love me well enough to permit me to come and see you in your own home? Do you think you could return some of my love?"

The girl shrank back in the shadow of the great doors; the rain seemed to melt away, and all that gloomy night turn to one of beauty. Was she dreaming? Again the young man went on fervently:

"Ethel, my dear sweetheart, my brave little girl who could not live a lie—may I take you back into that ball room as my promised wife? Answer me, darling!"

The "Yes" which came from the rosy mouth caused the young man to draw the red cloaked figure close to him, and the swish of the March rain against the window seemed to these two like sounds from paradise.—The Puritan.

An Automatic Singer.

An "automatic singer" has been exhibited to the editorial staff of a Paris newspaper. The apparatus is in the form of a tripod, the top of which is a machine smaller than the phonograph, into which the cylinders are put. The sound is transmitted by highly perfected boards to a metallic trumpet, and it is stated that the voice can be heard 220 yards off.

Ignace Pelott, who has just passed away on Mackinac Island at the age of 93, was said to be the only surviving witness of the taking of the island by the British in 1812.

TO MAKE WAVY LOCKS.

MEMBERS of the fair sex are not always the embodiment of ethereal beauty when they do not happen to have naturally wavy locks. Half of their time they have looked fairly hideous in order that the other half might find them with captivating little ringlets and airy wavelets, and their private families have had to suffer from their unaesthetic appearance.

That is one reason why the curling iron has been so popular. It saves going about with the hair done up in papers and hornlike pins, rubber and kid rolls, etc. Even the neat moatagues of the same shade as the hair gave them a bald appearance, and, as for whites of eggs, gum arabic and other "stick 'ems" to make water waves, so called, the sight of them was enough to make one sick.

The French have come to the rescue. They usually do when there is any esthetic or artistic question at issue. They have invented "le flou flou," or undulator, which consists of a sort of fork with two upright tines, to which ribbons can be affixed through eyelets in such a way that the hair can be woven in the usual manner about the two tines, as is done with a large wave pin, and then the pin can be withdrawn, leaving the hair woven on a ribbon, the ends of which can then be tied in a coquettish little bowknot, producing a charming effect.

Men and Women Friends.

A man is neither spiteful nor treacherous, declare some women who are popular with the lords of creation, and they add that one male friend is worth a dozen feminines. Then, again, other women, with equal force, remind one of the proverbial fickleness of men, and how a new face and a brighter manner often drive completely away an old and time-honored friendship. But this, others will answer, relates only to a love affair, and naturally when the little god arrives on the scene, all such cold affairs as friendship must find lodgings elsewhere. Probably, like all assertions either way, the truth lies between the two extremes. Some men are particularly calculated for friends. In fact, in that capacity are loyalty and honor themselves. They never talk of or discuss their friends; they are only too willing and too ready to serve a woman they really care for, and are always on hand in trouble and sorrow with ready sympathy and help. But friendship of this kind naturally demands much, and no one will waste such platonic devotion without expecting an equal amount of friendship and loyalty in return.

Dinner Tables Set for Eight.

As soon as the inauguration bells have hardly stopped ringing at the national capital, the ladies of the Cabinet get ready to set the social ball rolling. Dinners come first in Cabinet entertainments. It is learned that the favorite Washington dinner table will be set for eight. In shape it will be nearly square, with the hostess facing the entrance. The floral piece in the center will be partly of fruit and ready for serving with the dessert. It will not be very tall. Mirrors bordered with smilax will form the middle mat. The cloth will be of fine linen, not silk or satin, and the dinner of only seven courses—oysters, soup, fish, game, entrees, salad and dessert. One of the ladies of the new Cabinet has copied Martha Washington's dinner table as far as possible. The table is free from doilies or spreads. It is low and underneath lie cushions. The chairs tip back slightly and the seats are silk. An old-time lamp above gives soft light.

Saw Only Mrs. Cleveland.

Although Mrs. Cleveland has taken herself to Princeton, where she will at last have a chance to live her own life in the way she may choose, there will be stories of her tact and kindliness and social gifts flating around Washington for at least four years, and probably as long as some of us shall live. Mr. Cleveland is by no means a small man, physically, mentally or officially, but when it came to receptions and the like he was somewhat overshadowed by his wife. A pretty little woman went to the last reception given by the lady of the White House and she told afterward that as the crowd came through the doors into the blue parlor she was so busy looking at Mrs. Cleveland that she went straight by the President without seeing him. Then, seeing her mistake, she quickly turned and, shaking hands with him, exclaimed: "I beg your pardon, Mr. Cleveland, I didn't see you." Everybody around smiled, the little lady herself smiled, Mrs. Cleveland smiled and the President himself smiled and seemed not in the least displeased.

Where Daughters Dress Alike.

In Yucatan, Central America, sisters dress precisely alike, even to the tying of a bow, the turn of a button or the flower in the hair. In the tropics large families are the rule, and any day you may see in that country girls in groups of from three to a baker's dozen who belong to the same family, as their clothes will show. It is thus easy to distinguish the members of a family anywhere, and not infrequently sisters are called by their favorite flower or color. In Anam men and women wear their hair in the same way and dress almost alike. Earrings and finger rings are worn by women only. Lapp men and women dress alike. The men and women of the Cree tribe of Indians dress alike, but can be distinguished by the ornamentation of their leggings, that of the men being vertical and that of the women horizontal.

A Letter Box.

A letter holder is a useful adjunct to one's desk. It is made of pasteboard, may be covered with silk, linen, leatherette or any desired material. A box with a high fancy back is divided into two parts, one for answered, the other for unanswered letters. At the front is fastened a third box designed for letters ready to be mailed, a word showing the use of each compartment being painted or embroidered diagonally across the face of each. A tiny calendar is attached to the top of the back and above it an opening by which it may be hung.

A Benefactor of Women.

Numerous young women who have perfected the study of phonography will be interested to learn that the benefactor of women, the gentleman who invented the system, Sir Isaac Pitman, was in 1862 presented by those who appreciated what he had done with a purse of $1,700 and a very handsome marble clock. In 1887, when the jubilee of phonography was celebrated, he received a marble bust of himself and a gold medal from the phonographers of the United States and one from Great Britain and the colonies. In 1890 shorthand was included in the subjects to be taught in the board of schools in England. Statistics just compiled show that 95 per cent. of the reporters in the English speaking world use the Pitman system.

Gray Locks Fashionable.

New York has many girls who, though under 17 years of age, have taken up the fad for gray hair, the idea being to appear very intellectual and thoughtful. It is managed by leaving a lock of one's natural hair at a wigmaker's, with instructions to somewhat match it by shades of gray hair, not at first too far removed from the original color. A toupee affair is purchased to be worn a la false bangs. The gray hairs are carefully intertwined with the dark locks, and one is perfectly "up-to-date."

Premature Marriages.

It is said that some extraordinary revelations of wife abandonment are being made in New York. Fifteen thousand men are under bonds to support their wives. The magistrates ascribe this state of things partly to the hard times, still more to lax morals, but most of all to premature marriages. Fifty per cent. of the deserted wives were married while in their teens.

First Patent to Woman.

Nineteen years after the patent office was established in Washington the first patent was issued to a woman, Mary Kiles, who secured it for a method of weaving silk or thread with straw. This was in 1809.

Revolutionary Relics.

Workmen engaged in tearing down an old-fashioned fireplace in an oyster house on Delaware avenue, below Spruce street, a few days ago, came upon a dilapidated-looking door fastened by numerous rusty bolts. After much exertion the bolts were loosened and beyond the door was discovered a brick vault about ten feet long and two feet wide, on the floor of which were three muskets literally covered with rust, and an iron pot evidently used for melting lead. Beside these lay a bar of lead, a bullet mold and a bag of damp gunpowder. These were all gathered up and taken outside on the pavement for inspection. The small arsenal had evidently been there since the revolution. Close inspection proved that the guns were of English make, a small plate bearing the name "Stamna, Sheffield," being discovered on the stock of each weapon.—Philadelphia Record.

German Land Owners.

Germany's fifteen largest land owners own between them 9,000,000 acres of German soil. Prince Wittgenstein has 3,000,000 acres, next comes the Duke of Arenberg with 800,000, then in order the Prince of Thurn and Taxis, the Duke of Brunswick, Prince Salm Salm, the Prince of Talleyrand-Sagan, who is a French subject; the Prince of Pless, the Duke of Leuchtenberg, Prince Bentheim, Prince Lowenstein, the Prince of Wied (father of the Queen of Roumania), and Prince Fengger. Many of these have large estates outside of Germany.

Deceiving Press.

The Waterloo Press purposely attempts to deceive its readers in the Stroh matter. A week ago, it pretended to quote a decision of Judge Powers to the effect, as it claims, that Sheriff Ralston was entitled to the court fee of $2 a day. But it was this very decision of Judge Powers that made Mr. Ralston turn that $2 a day over to the county from that time on. And the records show that Ralston did this, and that his total salary for each year has been paid at the rate of $2,200, a year, and not as the Press seems to carry the idea of $2,200 and the $2 a day court fees besides. To set our readers right on Judge Powers decision we quote it as the Press ought to have done exactly as it is found in Court Record 27, pages 42, 43 and 44.

"Section 96, of the acts of 1891 limits the annual salary of the Sheriff of DeKalb county to the sum of $2,200. The court decides the law to be, that the Sheriff of DeKalb county, as a duty imposed by law; is required to attend the sessions of the commissioners' court, and also of the circuit court of this county when in session, and that for such services, when he actually attends such courts, by himself or deputy, he is entitled to be paid by the county, the sum of $2 a day for such service to be audited and allowed by the county commissioners of this county; PROVIDED THAT THE AMOUNT OF SUCH ALLOWANCE, AND THE AMOUNT RECEIVED UNDER THE SAID ACTS OF 1891, IN NO YEAR SHALL EXCEED THE SUM OF $2,200, and that to this extent the said act of 1891 is not in conflict, with said section 5874 of the acts of 1881, or with said section 21 of Article 1 of the Constitution.

This decision is ordered spread on record as a part of the record of this court

COURT.

Work began this morning on a case to remove a guardian on charge of not managing properly for his ward, John E. Miller has been for some time, the guardia of Joseph Livergood, and now Joseph's wife, Jane Livergood sues to have Miller removed. J. E. Pomeroy is her attorney, while Rose & Rose are attorneys for Miller. Witnesses were called to show that Miller did not provide suitable clothing for Livergood and other points were brought out by the testimony of Livergood himself. Miller himself testified, showing he had in the main done fairly well. But he had already prepared his resignation and wanted to quit. Judge Penfield decided to remove him.

Wednesday's Daily.

As noted yesterday there were three changes of venue taken out of the county. The only struggle there was, was over the Hook case. Hook's attorneys objected to having the case tried in this district, and asked for one of three counties, of Noble, Whitley and Allen. There was a good deal of discussion but Judge Watkins finally decided that as between Noble and Whitley, the latter would be most convenient to reach from Auburn, and also be most convenient for Judge Adair who would have to try it whether at Albion or Columbia City. There had been a very full statement prepared by Mr. Hook's attorneys in which were given many clippings from the ten newspapers of DeKalb and the four of Steuben county, 69 clippings of the former and 37 of the latter county. The intention of this strong showing was probably, to use it in case any strong fight should be made against a change of venue. But as the state did not object very strongly, the statement was not read, although it was several times alluded to. But there was not much struggle over the township cases.

Judge Watkins devoted considerable time to points he had been considering in the Jackson township cases. As mentioned in these columns before, there had been 72 demurrers filed to the complaint and the various judges who have taken turns at the case, have taken action on these points As had been done by others, Judge Watkins sustained some and overruled some. But cases like this, are too deep and intricate for the mere ordinary mortal to understand. So we simply say what the Judge said, and let our readers know as much about it as we do.

Frank Dills was taken to Michigan City by Deputy Platter yesterday, Tuesday, noon.

We should explain more fully as to Mr. McIntosh. The grand jury made up an indictment for "conspiracy" in which all of the persons claimed to be concerned in the county troubles were brought in as having conspired together to defraud the county. The number is eight, and the names are: D. D. Moody, F. A. Borst, Reuben Sawvel, Frank Dills, J. M. Hook, D. W. Fair, Perry Fair, and W. H. McIntosh. The four first named, are already in prison. The two Fairs are under bond on other counts but we have not learned the date set for their trial. Mr. Hook and Mr. McIntosh, as already noted, declare their innocence and will defend themselves in court.

This, Wednesday, morning all three of the cases against Hook were sent to Columbia City. They are the two original cases mentioned a week or two ago, in which the bond is $500. each, and the new case for "conspiracy," with bond put at $1,000. Judge Lowry one his attorneys, says they are ready to try these cases at any time.

F R DILLS

Judge Watkins Sentenced Him to Prison Three Years and $25 Fine.

The Case of Ex-Surveyor Hook also Being Heard by Judge Watkins.

This morning Judge Morris came up from Ft. Wayne, and it was at once seen that Frank Dills' case would be called, it has been known for weeks that Dills was ready to plead guilty at any time. Judge Watkins, of Huntington, had reached here the evening before and that was another indication. Judge Penfield had been hearing some motions and then he assigned over to Judge Watkins the case against Dills and the one against Hook. There were also other cases, as the Jackson township cases, etc. that had already been before Judge Watkins. As soon as Dills and Judge Morrison could have a consultation, the case began The venerable Judge made a most eloquent and feeling plea for his client. He had known the parents and grand parents in the early years and had at one time been a law partner of Dills' father the late Wm. H. Dills. He pleaded for mercy, tempered with justice and he felt that the lowest punishment would be all that justice demanded. This would mean two years in prison and a fine of $25. There were many moist eyes as the venerable jurist with his snow white locks and trembling voice, proceeded. He was followed by Prosecutor Davis, in a frank and exhaustive statement in which he alluded to the great crimes the men in this conspiracy have committed. But he had no vindictiveness. The state of Indiana asks only for justice. In a similar strain, his assistant, Mr. Roby followed him. Both these attorneys won golden opinions from the audience for the manly way in which they carried out what to them has been no doubt, a very disagreeable task Judge. Morris then made a second, and very feeling plea, and at its close asked his friend Judge McClellan "to speak in the young man's behalf." He did so in a very clear and able statement of the case and of the sad incidents that had followed and would still follow the results of these unfortunate troubles. When he sat down Judge Watkins alluded briefly to these cases, and gave some very valuable ideas as his own views of such cases, and of his duties under the law. His sympathies always went out to the unfortunate who had got themselves into trouble. He closed by fixing Dills' sentence at three years in prison and $25 fine. By good behavior this three years would be cut down to too years and five months. It is the general impression, that this sentence is about fair.

W. H. McINTOSH.

There were a number of indictments sent in by the grand jury this morning as we understand, but the only one we hear named is W. H. McIntosh. The charge against him is conspiracy. It is claimed that as he was buying many orders about the auditor's and treasurer's offices, that he must have known of the forgery going on. He asserts his innocence and will fight the case. He gave bonds of $1000, with James W. Platter, as surety.

This afternoon three changes of venue were taken. The case of James O. Blake is sent to Ft. Wayne; the case against J. J. Walter go to Angola: the case against J. M. Hook goes to Columbia City. All have ten days to make change of papers.

OBITUARY

Miriam M. Smith Hemstreet was born in the State of New York, Feb. 19, 1814, and died March 24. 1897, at the home of her youngest daughter, Mrs. Adam Stroh, with whom she has made her home for the past six years. aged 83 years, 1 month and 5 days.

She was united in marriage to Jeremiah Hemstreet Jan. 1, 1838. Unto this union were born seven children, five girls and two boys. She also has twelve grandchildren who survive her. Her husband and two children, a son and daughter having preceded her to the spirit world. Those of the family who still remain being Albert Hemstreet, residing at San Francisco, Cal., Mrs. Cornelia Campbell, Mrs. Sabrina Woolsey, of North Dakota, Mrs. Mary Seery and Mrs. Ella Stroh.

In 1842 Mr. Hemstreet loaded his household goods on a wagon and with his family started from Huron county, Ohio, to DeKalb county, Indiana. The home farm upon which they lived in Smithfield township from this time until his death, which occurred in 1886 was entered by them from the government. Mrs Hemstreet was coverted in 1841 and united with the regular Baptist church to which she remained faithful unto death. Mrs. Hemstreet was an affectionate mother, kind and cheerful, making friends wherever she became acquainted. She bore her last illness with christian fortitude and passed peacefully away from the sorrow and toils of this life to her eternal reward. The remains were interred in the Waterloo cemetery besides her husband. The funeral services were conducted from the U. B. church by Rev. W. P. Pearce, of Garrett, and Rev. S. H. Yager, of Waterloo.

MAJOR KUHLMAN

Capt A. L. Kuhlman received his commission Saturday evening as Major of Third Regiment I. N. G. and we will now address him as "Major." This appointment should have been made some time ago or immediately after the appointment of Col. Gore to Adjutant, but as there were other members of the I. N. G. who were desirous of filling the important position of Major, considerable time was spent in determining, how to satisfactorily dispose of the matter. Capt. Kuhlman was the senior captian of the Regiment and according to the rules of the organization and as he was best qualified to receive the promotion, his commission was forwarded him as above. Major Kuhlman will now have the appointment of an Adjutant and Sargent-major, to act as his staff officers. These appointments he has not made and will not until he hears from headquarters. It is hoped, however, that he will give these position to some of our home people, thereby giving Auburn the Major with both members of his staff. This promotion to Major now leaves Co. K without a captain. It is expected on every mail that an order will come for an election. Just who all the candidates are we do not know.

A SHORT CUT.

The Butler Record still feels bad to think the COURIER said what has never been denied or disproved, that Stroh took and kept, fees that did not belong to him. but belonged the county. Why don't the Record say he did not do this? Will the Record prove that Stroh has not within this month of March, paid back nearly $1,000 of the money due from him to the county in this matter? That will settle the controversy. Let the Record get Stroh's affidavit as to the matter. That would help to settle it. The COURIER, nor anyone else, does not have to wait for a court to say that a man is guilty. The law is plain that no man has a right to take and use money that does not belong to him. We did not make this law. We take it as we find it. And we challenge the Record to publish the sums of money that Stroh turned over to the county in March 1897, as shown by the records.

A Life Saved.

Marvelous cures of throat and lung affections are made daily by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Miss Annie Swan, Petersburg, Va., writes: "My brother was attacked by a bad cough and cold, and it was thought he had consumption. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup was used, and to our great surprise it made him well and hearty. There is no better cure in the world than this Syrup." Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is sold everywhere for 25 cents.

SKILLED CHICKENS.

Eli Cochran on the Avenue, has a reputation for raising fine chickens, but we did not know till yesterday that they were so highly skilled in the art of eggmaking as they are. A few days ago J. R. Steves bought some eggs of Mr. Cochran, and Mrs Steves proceeded to boil some of them for use. On breaking them open to eat, another and smaller egg was found in the interior of a large one. The shell is perfect and very strong. So it would appear that the dozen eggs Mr. Steves bought was really a "bakers dozen"—thirteen. Now if Eli was as close as some men we know of, he would let Steves have only eleven eggs for a dozen next time so as to make up for selling him thirteen for twelve. We are assured by a reliable citizen of the south end, that no lawsuit will result. But really, these things are remarkable. We have known of but two similar cases before this.

ASSESORS' MEETING.

The township assessors held a meeting here yesterday afternoon in the commissioners' room for the purpose of fixing rates of valuation, etc. on various articles. There was also a general consultation as to their duties. Mr. Boland, who is acting as auditor met with them and gave some ideas as to the work to be done. County Assessor Schulthess was present and presided at the meeting. There will be an earnest effort made to have this years assessment fair and thorough.

DIED.

Charles J. Goss, a brother of Mrs. B. B. Harrison died at Buffalo Gap, South Dakota, March, 22, and was taken back to the old home, at Oberlin, Ohio for interment. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Harrison's father, Mr. Goss, joined the funeral party at Waterloo and attended the funeral which was on Saturday, March 27th. The bereaved family have the sympathy of all our people.

TWO CASES.

Two important surgical operations are reported Dr. F. M. Hines. March 16, he and Dr Spooner, of Peru, assisted by Dr. L. A. Hines performed a difficult operation known as ovariotomy for Mrs. I. N. Turner, who had suffered for a number of years. She is getting along nicely with an almost certain prospect of permanent recovery. The other case is that of Phil Sibert, who is an employe of the B. & O. He had been troubled by a horny growth of bone-like substance on his leg, extending from near the ankle to near the knee. March 9, Dr. Hines and Dr. Spooner, laid bare this part of the leg removed the bony growth its entire length, scraped the bones of the leg smooth and returned the healthy flesh to its place and stitched it. Mr. Sibert is doing well, and will soon be able to resume work on the road after a layoff of only about a month, He will probably be as sound a man as ever.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

Important to Reason Your Future Interest!

EVERY Breeder and Stock Raiser seems slow to consider his best interests. When market values are low they imagine, because prices are below the ordinary range of past markets, that the future can not change the present condition of affairs.

Experience in the past teaches us that a man who engages in the Breeding of Stock, when everybody else disposes of his surplus, is sure to reach the best market for what he produces. The man who engages when every body else is seeking the same investment is certain to lose upon his efforts The secret is, go into business when stock is low and sell out when stock is high.

Therefore, it is plain to be seen that our Breeders have become discouraged and abandoned the breeding for the past three years, until we seldom see a colt at its mother's side, and our horse buyers are searching for good horses. The time has come when only the best horses will be in demand.

Why not wake up and continue to breed the best, and reap the harvest of a future market?

How shall we do this?

There is but one way. The BLACK PERCHERON is the superior horse for draft, and the CLEVELAND BAY for general use. Solid bred colors, smooth in conformation, docile and kind in disposition, and the only true bred horses that will cross satisfactorily on all grades of mares.

Therefore, the only way is to breed your mares to the Black Percheron or Cleveland Bay, Which will make the Spring and Fall Season of 1897 at D. N. Myers' Livery and Sale Stable, and Farmers Feed Barn in Auburn, Ind.

James G Figgs has a smile all over his face since the arrival of little girl.

Mark Morr will start this week buying eggs for Henry Baker.

BUTLER.

Our people are still looking with open-eyed wonder at the developments at the county seat, and faith in the integrity of the average office holder grows weaker as each new picture is developed on the camera.

It is passing strange that men of supposed honor, and common sense should march up almost in double file and voluntarily fasten the noose around their necks, that would almost without a doubt lead them to ignominy and shame and entail lasting sorrow and disgrace upon their innocent wives, children and friends.

A considerable number of our people are sick with lagrippe and similar complaints.

William R Emerson, one of Troy township's oldest and best known citizens lies dangerously ill at his farm residence with only meager hopes of recovery.

Mrs. Stewart Wartenbee an old and well known resident of Stafford, living near the old Webster Mill Site, is also seriously ill. Her sons of Minneapolis, Minn., have been at her bedside.

A slight improvement in the roads, filled our streets with teams last Saturday.

Henry Grube has purchased the William Brown farm, recently owned by Arthur Aldrich one and half miles east of town, and will move upon it in the near future.

Many removals will take place within the next week.

SEDAN.

It is time now to clean up and as Sedan has a reputation of being to the front in some other matters, why not in this?

We have in and around Sedan some of the greatest wonders of the world. No doubt the most of the readers of the Sedan items have heard of the once famous blondin horse, well he is out of date now.

Simon Haines has repainted his lawn fence and has now one of the finest lawns in this section.

John Schroeder, of Vermillion, Ohio, is visiting his parents in this place.

Dr. A. S. Farrington, of Waterloo, was in town Sunday.

Henry Miller is very sick at present.

Dan Steckly made a trip to Fort Wayne last week.

The outlook for a good wheat crop in this vicinity is not very encouraging, but we presume likely President McKinley will see to it that the farmers get a good price if they don't get so good a crop.

P. K. Guthrie has moved on the Albert Buchanhan farm.

Mrs. Emma Rose, of Ashley, Mich., who was visiting at this place received a telegram Sunday announcing the death of her daughter. She was accompanied home Monday by her brother, S. W. Guthrie.

Fred Kruse, of Auburn, spent Sunday in this place.

Charles Schroeder Jr. made a trip to Waterloo Saturday.

REV. T. M. GUILD.

Auburn's New Pastor. Rev. J. K. Walts Goes to Logansport.

A special telegram from Rev. J. K. Walts at Kokomo, announces that Rev. T. M. Guild is the new M. E. Minister appointed by the conference for Auburn. Rev. Walts will go to Wheatland St. church, Logansport. Rev. Disbra to Butler, Rev. Haines to Garrett, and Rev. Erlougher to Waterloo.

TO THE PUBLIC:

We herewith beg to announce that on the above date, if no preventive providence, we will open our store which is located on Main street, one block south of public square and four doors north of Kruger's grocery. This building has been repaired, repapered and rearanged, so as to be as convienant as possible for our buisness. For which we intend to carry a full line of high class furniture and medium. Also in connection with above we will do upholestry work of all kind. We will make special long drawing Black (40lb) Hair Mattress for $12, regular $18.50 quality. "This special will be for a short time only" and guaranteed. We also do carpet cleaning, we take your carpet up and put it down, work guaranteed. We also do all kinds of repair work and refinishing, using only the famous Waldorf Furniture Polish. We have also made arrangements so we can buy second hand furniture and in fact every and anything you may have to sell, for which we will pay the highest possible cash prices. Our cheif aim and desire will always be to cater to the wants of our patrons and the public in every particular, and it will be an undisputed fact that our business will be carried on, on one strict plan only "honesty." We will make to order any and every kind of furniture, as it is a great many times, that a piece of furniture, just as you would want is not made and carried by the manufactures. You give us your idea and we will make you a sketch and make the piece and guarantee perfect satisfaction in every respect.

OUR SPECIALTY----BARGAINS AND LOW PRICES.

Hoping to be favored with a share of your patronage.

Res'pt Yours

A Rhode Island man has paid for one house out of his earnings at a bucksaw, and he is now working away to lift the mortgage from another.

The movement to secure the erection of a reformatory for women in the State of Minnesota has now taken definite shape in a bill which has been introduced for carrying out that purpose.

A newly invented hat pin makes the following bid for feminine favor: "The patent stationary hat fastener, warranted to keep the hat on straight in a cable car when rounding curves."

Boston's new city printing plant was a second-hand job office and $30,000 was paid for it. Now the papers are saying it was not actually worth $8,000 and that Mayor Quincy has "bought a gold brick."

William C. Whitney says that the Metropolitan Street Railway Company of New York has searched the world for the best motive power, and that it is now prepared to spend $6,000,000 for the underground trolley.

The unspeakable Turk has a curious method of dealing with drunkards. The punishment for the first, second and third offenses is the bastinado in varying doses. After that stage is reached, however, the offender becomes a priviledged character, as it were, and is entitled to be tenderly helped home by a policeman when he is found in an overstimulated condition.

Horses are valuable in Alaska. They are driven up over the divide from the Canadian plains and then have to be transported eight to sixteen miles by water. The freight on them for this distance is 40 cents a pound, so that a 1,000-pound horse gets to be worth $1 a pound by the time he nears a place where he can be of good service. A good strong dog is valued at $75.

As a result of the discoveries made in Roentgen-ray photography of the identity of actinic rays of light with those which occasion sunstroke, it is proposed to line the British soldier's helmet with a strip of ruby-colored material as the best protection for the brain. The fatalities at Majuba, showed that white helmets were dangerous articles of headgear in the sun.

The New Hampshire Legislature two years ago enacted a law establishing a board of library commissioners and authorizing the authorities of towns to levy a small tax for library purposes. Since then 195 of 233 towns in the State have established free libraries, and nineteen others have made steps in the same direction, leaving only nineteen in which no action has been taken.

A water-tube jail is one of the latest achievements of Yankee ingenuity. It is no longer necessary to make the prison bars so heavy and so hard that cutting through them becomes very difficult, but instead they are made simply of pipes, forming part of a high-pressure water system. Should any of these pipes be severed, the water would escape and quickly give warning of the break.

The only genuine American train operated in England is on the Southeastern Railway, running between Charles Cross station and Hastings every afternoon, and returning in the morning. It consists of six carriages, which were constructed in Troy, N. Y. These are entered at the ends, are lighted by electricity, are heated, and admirably ventilated, and operated with improved American wheels and brakes.

The first piece of beesteak that ever reached the gold fields in Alaska sold for $48 per pound. The piece of beefsteak was carried 250 miles by Thomas O'Brien, from Forty Mile Creek to Circle City, and weighed a fraction over ten pounds. It was put on exhibition at Circle City, and attracted much attention and was subsequently disposed of for $480, the proceeds going to swell the miners' hospital fund at that place.

A striking picture of the official corruption that prevails in China is afforded by some diplomatic reports submitted by the English foreign office to the houses of parliament at Westminster. Among other things it is shown that so great is the stealing that, were the imperial government to abolish the rice tribute from the provinces of Kingsu and Chekiang alone, it would effect an economy of more than $2,000,000, which is the sum that its collection now costs over and above the revenue that it yields.

A good illustration of the rapidity with which bureau chiefs in the Washington departments bow to the rising sun is afforded by the new inscription just placed on one of the numerous models of battle-ships on exhibition in the main corridors of the State, War and Navy Building for the benefit of sight-seers. Just outside of the door of the Secretary of the Navy there has been for a long time a model classified as "The Indiana and her class," meaning that she is the model of one of the three great battle-ships of which the Indiana is a type. The day that Secretary Long was sworn into office that label disappeared, and in its place there is a new one that reads: "The Massachusetts and her class." But the glass case contains the same old model.

An Honest Man.

This is one on District Attorney Backus, of Kings County. He tells it himself, and it was brought out curiously a day or two ago.

"Mr. Backus in?" a visitor to the district attorney's office asked.

"Yes," an attendant said. "You're just time to catch him before he goes away for the day."

The visitor entered, passed Mr. Backus' desk and Mr. Backus at it—and followed the attendant into an inner room. He was informed that he had passed Mr. Backus and returned, to find that gentleman smiling to discover that all the world did not know him at sight.

"This is a case of arguing myself unknown," the visitor said apologetically.

"It reminds me of a story," said Mr. Backus. "I went to Poughkeepsie once with another lawyer, and a detective in plain clothes, who was escorting a prisoner who was to be resentenced there. The prisoner was shackled to the detective. They sat in the seat ahead of that occupied by the other lawyer and myself.

"The train stopped fifteen minutes at Poughkeepsie for lunch, and in order not to expose the manacled prisoner to a curious crowd, I suggested that we sit in the car for a few minutes after the train was stopped, allow the passengers to alight and go to the lunch room and then go quietly to a carriage, which awaited us. The others agreed and we sat still.

"A nervous passenger who had ridden in the same car with us from New York, and who did not know that one of us was a condemned criminal, wished to get out for lunch and thought it advisable to ask some one to keep an eye on his hand baggage in his absence.

"He hesitated until he saw only four of us left. Then he approached and looked keenly at each of us in turn. After a close scrutiny of our countenances he leaned over, tapped the prisoner on the shoulder and said:

"'Will you be good enough, sir, to keep an eye on my baggage while I get a bite to eat?'"—New York Herald.

RUBBER TEETH.

They Are Light and Cost but Little to Manufacture.

An entirely new thing in teeth has been invented which places artificial masticators within the reach of the masses. The inventor and manufacturer is a well-known New York dentist, who says that his new process will enable him to make complete sets of excellent teeth for $1.50 or $2 and still reap a satisfactory profit.

The invention is a departure from anything heretofore introduced in modern dentistry. It consists of a complete artificial set of teeth made entirely of rubber, the base or plate and the teeth being formed integrally. In their manufacture an ingenious method is employed, which not only insures a correct formation of the artificial masticators, whereby they are made to closely resemble nature's product, but also simplifies the process of what is called "setting the teeth up." A hollow, flexible metallic matrix, which both internally and externally reproduces the formation of the teeth, is made, which, when filled with rubber and vulcanized, produces a perfectly formed set of teeth.

One of the greatest obstacles to overcome was the shading of the rubber teeth, but this the inventor has accomplished by means of a chemical bleaching process. Another but less satisfactory process of shading is by the mixture of different colored rubbers.

From a sanitary standpoint the rubber teeth are perfect, there being no joints, as in all other forms of artificial dentures, in which the secretions of the mouth may find lodgment. A more expensive form of the new teeth is that in which the masticating surfaces are capped with a continuous metallic facing, which renders the denture practically indestructible and unbreakable. Gold, silver, platinum and aluminum have been used for making the crowns. One of the greatest advantages of rubber teeth, aside from their cheapness, is their extreme lightness. They weigh less than half as much as any other form of denture.—New York World.

A Game Kid from Michigan.

He was an old-timer who came from Oklahoma with a bunch of prisoners for the Detroit House of Corection, and told this one while they were spinning yarns in the office:

"There was a young feller kim out to us frum this State that was th' durndest rustler I ever saw. He was slender like, had wavin' brown hair, big eyes an' a complexion that used ter make th' girls jealous. You'd think lookin' at him that he didn't have no muscle or sand, but them white han's o' his'n could shut up like a steel trap, an' he had more clean grit than a grizzly.

"'Bout that time thar was a gang operatin' in th' terrertory that we war tryin' ter bust up. Th' leader was one of these here perlite cusses that allers 'pologizes fur shootin' a man or runnin' off with a woman. They're th' wo'st in th' business. I had two or three depaties killed tryin' ter make th' capture an' was gittin' madder an' madder 'cause I couldn't land my man, an' him a-sendin' in some aggervatin' messages purty near ev'ry day.

"Finerly I offered a big reward fur anybody ter bring th feller in dead or alive. Four days later I see th' funniest sight you ever looked at. Up through th' long street ter th' jail kim th' desperado an' a pretty woman on th' same hoss. Leastwise it looked that way. She was astraddle an' you could see purty much all of a long pair o' boots. Her hat was ter one side an' her face was all lit up an' smilin'. His gun an' knives was all missin' an' she had th' muzzle of a 44 right ahind his ear. You never heerd sich laughin' an' cheerin'.

"When we had th' robber kivered th' woman jumped off an' kicked duds in ev'ry d'rection. It was that thar female-lookin' tenderfoot frum Michigan. He'd dressed up that way an' gone out a-purpose fur ter be captured. He had pertended ter cry an' beg, but th' chief made 'her' mount, an' then th' little cuss jist brought him in. Th' gang heerd a story that he was took by a woman, an' durned ef they didn't lynch him. Then they scattered. That thar was th' gamest kid that ever learned ter pull a trigger."—Free Press.

Limited.

"It seems to me," said the kicker, as he entered the rather small smoking compartment, "that the company provides very limited acommodations for smokers."

"But this, you know, is the limited express, sir," replied the conductor.—Philadelphia North American.

Never Satisfied.

"Folks nebber is saterfied," said Uncle Eben. "Er white young lady is allus tryin' ter git frizzes in her hair an' de cullud young lady is allus tryin' ter git 'em out."—Washington Star.

Politics of the Day

PROSPERITY AND CONFIDENCE.

The prosperity which the Republicans promised the country would follow their success at the last election has not yet materialized, and it is now generally conceded that no legislation at Washington is likely to bring it on, for the very good reason that it is not within the power of Congress or the President, or the two together, to do so. The campaign talk about its advent was based on either deep ignorance of the situation, or was deliberate, downright lying.

There is no doubt that the real cause why business does not pick up, as the Republicans claimed it would with the election of their candiates, is that there is the same lack of confidence in the future that existed two years or more ago. The scheme to re-enact the high McKinley tariff does not strike the public as particularly wise, and few students of the conditions existing throughout the world can see any benefit to be derived from it. Such a policy, they perceive, will only have a tendency to keep alive an agitation that should have been quieted long ago.

The financial situation also has not been improved through the success of the Republicans. It is only too apparent now that the party leaders only used the sound-money cry in order to fool enough voters to enable them to carry the election. They have no intelligent policy as to the future, and there is no telling to-day, any more than there was before McKinley's nomination at St. Louis, as to what they will try to do with the banking and currency problem.

If the Republican party were united, and had any broad views as to the needs of the country, it could doubtless do a good deal toward restoring confidence, the lack of which its leading men are still bewailing. Its elements are not sufficiently harmonious, however, and it has so few ideas beyond those needed to satisfy the spoils-seekers and the monopolists that even those Democrats who were inveigled into believing in its claims to a liberal and national character have to hide their heads when they reflect on their credulity.

Confidence is a plant of slow growth, indeed, when it depends on Republican nursing. In the case of the United States at the present time its coming into healthful existence again awaits the development of the Democratic policy as to the future.

Cullom Ate His Leek.

Senator Cullom is angry. He has told Mark Hanna all about it, and if the President again flattens him out and rolls over him he will declare war. When he does there will be others behind him, because the Republican Senators are chafing while the President is rewarding his personal friends and forcing them to indorse the men in advance. Senator Cullom's grievance results from the appointment of Charles U. Gordon, the new postmaster at Chicago. He was a violent anti-Cullom man before the St. Louis convention, yet Cullom had to indorse him or retire to the backwoods while "Billy" Mason got all of the Illinois plums.

Senator Cullom has informed Mr. Hanna that he will not continue to yield to the President's personal interests in these appointments any longer.

Senator Foraker, of Ohio, has also kicked over the traces, and, as told in a Chicago paper, he threatens to defeat Bellamy Storer's confirmation, if he is given any first-class appointment. This is another case where the President desires to consult his own interests exclusively and without considering the wishes of the leaders.

Every appointment the President has made, it is claimed, has been in pursuance of his policy to reward friends. This was the case with respect to the appointment of Powell Clayton, of John Hay, of Cousin Osborne and others. All these were the President's own personal nominations and were made as rewards for distinguished services rendered.

The biggest plum for the Illinois delegation is the postmastership at Chicago. The President selected one of his own men for it and then called upon Senators Cullom and Mason to indorse him. Cullom hesitated, but the President insisted and the Senator had to either indorse him or abandon hope of any patronage at all.

In the grist of Indianapolis appointments made recently the Indiana delegation had to swallow with the best grace possible the President's selections and indorse them with a wry face. It is becoming apparent that there will be serious opposition to the attempt of Mr. Hanna to make good all of the promises he made in the campaign for Mr. McKinley and trouble is brewing for the President.

Dingley to Outdo McKinley.

The original McKinley bill was known throughout the country and condemned at the polls as the "worse-than-war tariff." This was not an exaggeration. But the Dingley bill, as framed, threatens a "worse-than-McKinley tariff." It will not only tax more articles than did its abominable forerunner, but will tax them for the most part and on an average higher. When Dingleyism exceeds McKinleyism it is evident that the framers of the new tariff law think that the voters have little sense and very short memories.—New York World.

Sample of How Trusts Work.

Before the formation of the rubber trust Bristol, R. I., had a rubber factory employing 2,500 persons. The trust reduced the number of "hands" until only 500 found work, and now even these are to be thrown out of employment, the plant being closed in the process of concentration, which is part of the policy of all trusts. This little town, at least, has had a bitter trust object lesson.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

What They Fear Is Discussion.

Republican organs and leaders have been pleading for haste in the passage of the bill. The fact is that it is not delay that is so much feared by the Republicans as a debate of the tariff schedules. They fear exposure of the grabs concealed under the alleged desire to secure necessary revenue. They fear to let the new bill be publicly compared with the McKinley bill, and the object of the various items of the measure brought to light. It might be fatal to the pretense of opposition to trusts and monopolies which Mr. Hanna marked out as the course of the administration. It might show the reason for some of the large contributions to the Republican campaign fund.—St. Louis Republic.

A New Era.

With the campaign of 1896 the Democratic party entered upon a new era, with new men participating in its leadership and new ideas fermenting among its masses. It was defeated, just as it had been in 1796, one hundred years before, when Thomas Jefferson was beaten for President by John Adams, and when the people were yet in that recipient and preparatory stage through which a generation often passes from reflection to positive action. In 1896, as in 1796, they were learning the new political issues; in 1900, as in 1800, they will emphatically adopt them.

As the Democratic Presidential convention brought out William J. Bryan, comparatively unknown thitherto, as our party leader, so the Democrats of the House of Representatives have now brought out a new man—new at least to us of the Eastern States—as the leader of our Congressional forces. Mr. Bailey of Texas takes up the championship at a time of depression and disaster, but with a resolution and a capacity which augur well for the conflicts of the future. He has sounded the keynote against the Dingley tariff bill, and has placed himself and his party upon ground on which we all can stand in opposition to its principle and to its details. The following one of his utterances is a maxim. It deserves to be remembered by every citizen who takes an interest in public affairs:

"I was taught to believe that economy is a cardinal virtue in a government like ours, and that extravagance is not only a burden upon the taxpayers, but is a crime against the Republic, because it is as impossible for an extravagant government to avoid becoming a corrupt government as it is for a spendthrift to preserve either his money or his good name."

The Democratic party of the future, under the guidance of men holding the above views, cannot fail to be the party of the people.—New York News.

McKinley's Costly Method.

We can agree with the President that more revenue is desirable if the present extravagant scale of expenditures is to be kept up. We can agree with him that what is to be done to raise this revenue should be done with as little delay as possible, now that Congress has been convened at this unusual season for that purpose. We cannot agree with him as to the best method for raising that revenue. Certainly the method which President McKinley proposes and which Congress will doubtless follow, aiming at both increased revenues and increased protection, is bound to be an unnecessarily costly and unjustly burdensome one.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Hanna's Scheme of Cloture.

It is with a definite object, not connected with the general reform of Senatorial proceedings, that Senator Hoar is interesting himself in a revival of the agitation for a change in the Senate's rules. There can be no doubt that back of the propositions of Senator Hoar is a scheme of the Republican leaders to railroad the tariff bill through the Senate. By cutting off roll calls and closing debate by a majority vote Hanna and the high protection caterie in control of the administration could gain time and shut out many damaging exposures of the purposes of the tariff bill.—St. Louis Republic.

Too Much Power Assumed by Reed.

It is certain that the Constitution never contemplated the resting of so much power in one man as has been assumed by the Speakers of Congress in recent years, and it is equally certain that an effort to reform this evil will meet with popular applause. The functions of parliamentary rules are fully performed when they provide for an orderly conduct of public business, and when they go beyond that and give any Congressman powers or privileges greater than another they become revolutionary and un-American.—Kansas City Journal.

Political Notes.

Trusts have no politics. They pretend to be Democratic when the Democrats are in power and Republican when the Republicans are in control. They seek favors from each party.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Speaker Reed will be able to understand the trouble the people of Arkansas, Missouri and Louisiana are having just now to keep the Mississippi from overflowing its banks when he starts in to keep the new members from talking too much.—Kansas City Times.

A glance over the list of offices Mr. Cleveland neglected to place under the wings of the civil service law has convinced President McKinley that there are not enough remaining places to supply the surviving members of his old regiment.—New York Journal.

There begins to be talk in Washington about the new administration "letting down the bars" just a little bit—not much, but just enough—so that office seekers may get a chance at the places closed to them by recent extensions of the civil service rules.—Baltimore Sun.

Increased tariff rates will give advantages to special interests; higher prices can be got for their goods in the home market; combinations and trusts can be formed in these trades, but for the general business of the country foreign competition will not be restricted.—New York Times.

BIG BERG SEASON.

Drifting Monsters from the Arctics Alarm Sea Captains.

If the sharps of the sea are to be believed, 1897 will go down in history as one of the greatest years for icebergs in modern times. Many dangerous bergs have been reported.

The winter of 189 was a famous season for bergs, as one vessel passed fifty within a radius of 200 miles. The bergs of that year, however, were not dangerous, being soft and badly cut up by the action of the sea. The year of 1856 was the most famous of them all for the floating mountains, and scores of vessels were sent to the bottom by running into them during the heavy fogs which make navigation off the Banks so dangerous at all times.

Few skippers, who have seen scores and scores of bergs, know that these monsters are hundreds, and, perhaps, thousands of years old. The inception, birth and growth of an iceberg is one of the most curious freaks of nature, and much about them is still an unexplained science.

Greenland is the home of nearly all the icebergs which terrorize the officers of transatlantic vessels, as those formed further north rarely break loose from their icy moorings. Nearly the whole island of Greenland is covered with an immense sea of ice many thousands of feet thick, commonly called an ice cap. The snows of each year, falling on this great field of ice, are slowly absorbed, adding to the thickness and solidity of the ice cap and exerting a tremendous pressure on the solid mass. Wherever the country slopes toward the coast there is an imperceptible movement of the mass, so slow that it can hardly be recognized from year to year. Scientists have estimated it at four feet a year.

Gradually the wall-like ends of the ice cap are forced into the sea, and these are called glaciers. Year after year the enormous pressure inland sends the ice further into the water, but the whole mass is so solid that no force seems great enough to wrest a piece from the main body. But the all-powerful sea performs the seeming miracle. It is the upward pressure of the water on the floating end of the glacier that finally wears down its strength and causes it to burst from the ice cap with the roar of a thousand cannon. This is the birth of the iceberg.

Slowly the released mammoth moves first one way and then the other. Great pieces drop off into the sea, but finally it finds its equilibrium. Then it begins its long journey to the south, moved by the strong Arctic current running deep and strong hundreds of fathoms below the water's surface, and grasping the submerged ends of the berg in a relentless grip. Further south, where the berg meets the northward current of the gulf stream, the underlying Arctic current is still strong enough to push the mass along, but the opposite pressure from above and beneath wears great holes in the solid body and the mass which centuries labored to create dies in a few short months.

Weighing Ice by Measure.

A correspondent of the Western Druggist complains that he is continually defrauded in the ice delivered for his soda fountain, and weighing not being exactly practicable, he wants to know if he cannot find the true weight of a chunk of ice by measurement.

St. Louis druggists are not alone in their complaint about short weight on ice, and the explanation for the diminutive size of a 100-pound chunk of ice, namely, that it is the coldness of it which has contracted it so, will be as familiar to them as to their brethren in ill luck in Chicago. As to the question of our correspondent, that is entirely apropos, and we take pleasure in assisting him. The calculation is quite simple if we remember that one cubic foot of water weighs 62.5 pounds. One cubic foot equals 12 times 12 times 12, or 1,728 cubic inches. Dividing this by the number of pounds of water gives us 1,728, divided by 62.5, equals 27.65. Hence, one pound of water measures 27.65 cubic inches, which for 100 pounds makes 2,765 cubic inches. While ice blocks, as delivered, are not always of exactly rectangular shape, yet in a majority of cases the weight could be determined approximately correct. We would advise our readers to try this plan, appealing to the scale when their figures are doubted.—American Cultivator.

A Wonderful Statement

From Mrs. McGillas to Mrs. Pinkham.

I think it my duty, dear Mrs. Pinkham, to tell you what your wonderful Compound has done for me.

I was dreadfully ill—the doctors said they could cure me but failed to do so.

I gave up in despair and took to my bed. I had dreadful pains in my heart, fainting spells, sparks before my my eyes—and sometimes I would get so blind, I could not see for several minutes.

I could not stand very long without feeling sick and vomiting. I could not breathe a long breath without screaming, my heart pained so.

I also had female weakness, inflammation of ovaries, painful menstruation, displacement of the womb, itching of the external parts, and ulceration of the womb. I have had all these complaints.

The pains I had to stand were something dreadful. My husband told me to try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine, which I did, and after taking it for a while, was cured. No other kind of medicine for me as long as you make Compound. I hope every woman who suffers will take your Compound and be cured.—MRS. J. S. MCGILLAS, 113 Kilburn avenue, Rockford, Ill.

Pistols and Pestles.

The duelling pistol now occupies its proper place, in the museum of the collector of relics of barbarism. The pistol ought to have beside it the pestle that turned out pills like bullets, to be shot like bullets at the target of the liver. But the pestle is still in evidence, and will be, probably, until everybody has tested the virtue of Ayer's sugar coated pills. They treat the liver as a friend, not as an enemy. Instead of driving it, they coax it. They are compounded on the theory that the liver does its work thoroughly and faithfully under obstructing conditions, and if the obstructions are removed, the liver will do its daily duty. When your liver wants help, get "the pill that will,"

HOBOKEN'S WILD MAN.

Betrayed by a Cough While in a Cave Overlooking the Palisades.

The other day Policemen McCartney and Suhr, of Hoboken, N. J., were clambering over the rocks and stumps of trees in a field beneath the palisades when they were surprised at hearing someone cough. The locality was a lonely one, and neither suspected that any human being could have found a refuge there. One of the officers fancied he saw a movement in a bit of grass overhanging a slanting rock. The policemen crept toward it and saw a hole in the ground. The sight within frightened them almost out of their wits. They saw two great animal-like eyes staring at them. McCartney thought it was a panther. Then they heard a sound from the hole like a human voice.

The policemen recovered their nerve. Shrieking and trembling in the cave was a man, but such a man as the officers had never seen before. This creature was about six feet in height. He had a beard rough as a doormat and covered with dirt and grass. His body was covered by a blanket made up of patches from all manner of garments and was fastened about the waist by a cord. An old derby hat with two peacock feathers surmounted a mass of yellow hair. The man answered at first in meaningless gutturals when addressed by the policemen. Then he cowered in a corner of the cave and was watched by Policeman Suhr while Policeman McCartney glanced about the cave.

It was really a cliff dweller's home. A kettle, a rude stone fireplace, a tin can and a piece of flag for a plate were the only articles of furniture. The bed was a dirty goat skin. Finally the man found his tongue. When the policemen asked how he lived the man, in a mixture of English and German, asked:

"How do the rabbits live?"

"How do you get out of here?" asked Policeman Suhr.

The man pointed to his long finger nails and made motions as though to crawl forward. The policeman crawled out of the place with much difficulty. They sent for a coal wagon to take him to the police station.

At the police court the man said that his name was Carl Paul Aidel. He appeared to be about 50 years old. He refused to tell his history, but said that he had walked from California, where he had lived for many years in mountain caves. He had been on the Hoboken hillside about two months. All the food he had was picked up on the railroad track. He was sent to the Hoboken county jail for thirty days

Blunders of Shakspeare.

Shakspeare made some great blunders in his time. Though universally believed to know all things, he has in quite a number of instances made mistakes in details. He introduced cannon into a period 150 years before cannon were invented. He speaks of printing done in the time of Henry II., of clocks in the time of Julius Caesar. Hector quotes Aristotle and Coriolanus refers to Alexander. A billiard table is introduced into Cleopatra's palace; Bohemia has a sea coast and Delphos is made out to be an island.

VICTORY FOR GREEKS

CRETANS ROUT TURKS AND DESTROY A FORT.

Christians Assault the Stronghold with Dynamite—Moslems Saved from Annihilation by Foreign Admirals—Britain Bolts the Blockade Planned.

Fort at Malaxa Falls.

Thursday evening the blockhouse or fort at Malaxa, just outside of Suda, was blown up with dynamite by the Greek insurgents. The whole structure was soon in flames and the Turkish warships began a bombardment of the insurgents. The fleet fired ninety shells upon the insurgents around Malaxa, and some of these fell inside the blockhouse. Of the Turkish garrison, numbering sixty-four, one escaped to Nerokhuri and eighteen others to Suda. It is believed the others perished.

During the night the insurgent forces were pushed forward until they occupied convenient positions for attack, and about 6 a. m. the artillery opened fire upon the Turkish blockhouse. The pieces of the Christians were served with such admirable promptness and precision that in a short time nothing remained to the Turks but extermination or evacuation. The Mussulmans, preferring the latter, left the fort and commenced a retreat on Suda, relying upon the Turkish warships in the bay to save them from the Christians. The sultan's fleet opened a badly aimed fire upon the insurgents in order to cover the retreat from the blockhouse. The shells fell either short of or far beyond the insurgent forces.

The Christians pushed forward steadily, pressing hard upon the rear of the Turks and keeping up a continual skirmish fire. The Turks made a stand now and then, pouring a few volleys in the direction of the insurgent skirmish lines. The insurgents succeeded in pushing on as far as the village of Tsikalaria, where they set fire to some houses.

While this fighting was in progress a detachment of Turkish troops, being unaware of the fact that the garrison at Malaxa had evacuated that place and was retreating upon Suda, closely pursued by the Christians, made a sortie from Canea with a convoy of provisions intended for the garrison of Malaxa. From the route followed by the Turks nothing could be seen of the fighting in progress between Malaxa and Suda and the Ottoman troops advanced half way up to the heights upon which the blockhouse of Keratidi is situated.

Turks Were Trapped.

But while the Turks were unaware of the insurgents' doings the latter had closely followed the movements of the Turkish column escorting the provision and ammunition train. Near Keratidi the Turks were met by a body of insurgents, who, from well selected positions, opened a fierce fire upon the advancing troops. The fire of the Christians stopped the advance of the column and the Turkish commander took up the best position possible in order to protect the convoy and send it to the rear if necessary.

Desperate fighting continued between the Turks and the Christians in and about Tsikalaria, not far from Suda, to which point the insurgents succeeded in pushing forward while in pursuit of the retreating garrison of Malaxa. The insurgents burned several more houses of Tsikalaria, whereupon the warships of the foreign powers began firing at the Christians. The bombardment, however, only lasted ten minutes.

The Turkish garrison at Malaxa lost heavily during the retreat from that place. The insurgents are numerous and occupy all the heights in the vicinity of Canea as far as Parivolia, having captured the two last Turkish fortresses. Only the fleets of the powers prevent the entire success of the insurgent cause.

The news of the dynamiting of the Malaxa blockhouse as the culmination of a day of fierce fighting and a prolonged siege made a tremendous sensation in Athens. It is regarded as an event of far-reaching importance, both in its effect upon the insurgents themselves and upon the Greek mind at this stage of the crisis.

Great Britain has bolted the blockade planned by the powers, and it is semi-officially stated in Constantinople that the British admiral in Cretan waters has been notified not to send any warships of Great Britain to take part in the proposed blockade of the ports of Greece. At the same time, however, in order, apparently, to avoid an open rupture with the powers, Great Britain will acquiesce in the blockade of the Greek ports. According to the reports in diplomatic circles, the powers have already been notified to this effect, and the withdrawal of Great Britain from the blockade is the one subject discussed.

Care of the Coffee Pot.

It seems strange that so important a thing as a coffee pot is one which usually is neglected. The most careful housekeeper is often negligent as to its cleanliness. This is not because of carelessness, but because she does not understand the proper method of cleaning, and its importance. The pot may be carefully rinsed after each cleaning and yet be far from clean. There is an oily property about coffee which adheres in spite of rinsing out. You can see this for yourself by taking almost any coffee pot that has been some time in use (unless it has been carefully kept) and you will find clinging to it a sort of black grease (not brown), which will come off if a cloth is rubbed round the inside.

Now, this deposit destroys the flavor, fragrance and color of coffee. If the coffee looks black brown instead of ruddy brown it will be flavorless, however strong.

To keep this black oil from the pot it must be daily washed (not simply rinsed), scalded and dried. If the French coffee pot is used each piece should be carefully dried before it is putaway. If packed together wet the strainers will in time give a metallic taste. It is found that the coffee pot has been neglected put a piece of washing soda as large as a hickory nut into hot water, set the strainers in it and let them stand on the stove for a few hours; put the same in the coffee pot, then rub and brush both till the wire gauze is clear and all the black removed; then run boiling water through and dry it. Cold water is worse than useless for cleaning the pot, as it sets the oil. Sometimes the coffee pot is put away as it is taken from the table, with the leftover coffee in it, but this is very unwise, for it will soon spoil the flavor of the very best coffee if the pot is thus neglected.

The Faults and Follies of the Age

Are numerous, but of the latter none is more ridiculous than the promiscuous and random use of laxative pills and other drastic cathartics. These wrench, convulse and weaken both the stomach and the bowels. If Hostetter's Stomach Bitters be used instead of these no-remedies, the result is accomplished without pain and with great benefit to the bowels, the stomach and the liver. Use this remedy when constipation manifests itself, and thereby prevent it from becoming chronic.

The First Watch.

At first the watch was about the size of a desert-plate. It had weights, and was used as a "pocket clock." The earliest known use of the modern name occurs in the record of 1552, which mentions that Edward VI. had "one larum or watch of iron, the case being likewise of iron gilt, with two plummets of lead." The first watches may readily be supposed to have been of rude execution. The first great improvement, the substitution of springs for weights, was in 1550. The earliest springs were not coiled, but only straight pieces of steel. Early watches had only one hand, and, being wound up twice a day, they could not be expected to keep time nearer than fifteen or twenty minutes in the twelve hours. The dials were of silver or brass; the cases had no crystals, but opened at the back and front, and were four or five inches in diameter. A plain watch cost the equivalent of $1,600 in our currency, and after one was ordered it took a year to make it.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Bottles.

A wash-bottle, for washing gases, has been devised recently. The bottle has no stopper, and consists of a conical flask with a gallery round the top, into which mercury or other suitable liquid, is poured. In this rests an inverted bulb-flask, with wide neck, from which a glass tube leads away the gas; but the gas is brought into the arrangement by a tube which comes bodily through the hollow of the bulb and terminates in the conical flask below within the washing liquid.

It was with "Mad Anthony" Wayne in his Indian campaigns. It was also prominent in the war of 1812, and spent a decade of its existence in the great lakes region. Then it went to Florida during the Seminole war, and had its place at Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Monterey, Churubusco, and Vera Cruz in the Mexican war. The Third also fought Navajoes and Apaches for upwards of twenty years, and during the civil war took part in twenty-one battles and sieges, losing killed and wounded and missing 267 men.

Why It Is Necessary

To Take a Spring Medicine

Your Blood Must be Made Pure or Impaired Health Is Sure.

Firmly fixed among the important principles of hygiene and health is the acknowledged necessity of a good Spring Medicine.

The necessity is found in the impure condition of the blood at this season, owing to the close confinement and breathing vitiated air in office, store, shop, house, factory or schoolroom; excessive eating and drinking too rich and hearty food; late hours and social indulgences. Many years of test have proved that Hood's Sarsaparilla supplies the season's demand as nothing else does.

Impure Air, Too Rich Food.

So easy to take and so readily assimilated, the purifying, vitalizing and enriching elements of Hood's Sarsaparilla—combined from Nature's own storehouse of vegetable remedies for human ills, pass into the stomach and do their work of purifying and vitalizing the blood, which carries new life and vigor to every organ and tissue of the body. The effect is often magical. The weakness is soon driven off, that tired feeling disappears, the nerves are built up, the appetite restored. Remember,

The Electric Light of Mowerdom

The pine knot—the tallow candle—the oil lamp—gas—these are stages in the evolution of illumination, which today finds its highest exponent in the electric light.

Similar and no less striking has been the evolution of grain and grass cutting machinery. In 1831 the scythe and the cradle were superseded by the McCormick Reaper. The intervening years have seen many improvements, until now we have that model Harvester and Binder, the McCormick Right Hand Open Elevator, and that veritable electric light of mowerdom, the Married at the home of Wm. Ensley in Butler Township, Wednesday March 24, by Rev. J. D. Brosy, George D. Wells and Ina M. Ensley. The occasion was a pleasant one in every respect. We wish the newly married couple a happy future.

Married at the Lutheran Parsonage Thursday March 25, by Rev. J. D. Brosy, Thomas Mason and Ella Smith Both are from Keyser Township.

Married at the home of Willis Dancer, Sunday, March 28. at 1:30 p. m. by Rev. J. D. Brosy, John F. Moudy and Birdie Dancer. This was a most delightful occasion. The young couple will settle on a farm about 6 miles east of Auburn and we wish them success and a happy future.

The COURIER extends congratuation to all.

SAME TEXT AGAIN.

It was only a year or two ago, that Mr. Colvin of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Brosy, of the Lutheran church selected the same text, with the same "thought" for the same day. Neither knew of what the other had planned. To-morrow the same thing happens in Mr. Colvin's experience, with a new "partner." This time it is the pastor of the Baptist church, Mr. Pearce who will have the same text, with the same thought in view. They found it out in a conversation Thursday, and if they do not change their minds, the two sermons to morrow will be very much alike. However, they will have different audiences.

A BAD FALL.

Johny Leas was badly hurt yesterday by a fall, while trying to adjust the awning at Cowan sisters' store. He had come up town to put the awning down, as the sun was shining into the store, and finding he could not make it come down by loosening the rope, he tried to reach the frame of the awning, but was not tall enough. He brought out a chair and stood it near the edge of door step, and got up onto it and reached up to pull down on the frame, when the chair tipped over, as one leg was out over the edge of the step. As he fell, his wrist was caught by the sharp iron hook used as a cleat for winding the rope around. It tore into his wrist, cutting the tendons and tearing the flesh, the hook passing down to the palm of his hand and there he hung suspended by the whole of his weight. He cried out for help, and Clint Potter and Geo. Brown, two of our butchers, came running up, and lifted the lad from the hook as they would a beef, and carried him to Dr. Nusbaum's office and had his wounds dressed. He was then taken home and this was the first his mother knew of it. Of course she was greatly distressed, but glad it was no worse. The wound, while a very bad one, will not, the doctor thinks, make him permanently lame. But Johny will have to be patient with it for some time.

Thin, Pale Children

One satisfaction in giving Scott's Emulsion to children is they never object to it. The fact is, they soon become fond of it. Another satisfaction is because it will make them plump, and give them growth and prosperity. It should be given to all children who are too thin, or too pale. It does not make them over-fat, but plump.

It strengthens the digestive organs and the nerves, and furnishes material for rich blood.

We have a book telling you more on the subject. Sent free for the asking.

Fifty Years Ago.

President Polk in the White House chair,
While in Lowell was Doctor Ayer;
Both were busy for human weal
One to govern and one to heal.
And, as a president's power of will
Sometimes depends on a liver-pill,
Mr. Polk took Ayer's Pills I trow
For his liver, 50 years ago.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills

were designed to supply a model purgative to people who had so long injured themselves with griping medicines. Being carefully prepared and their ingredients adjusted to the exact necessities of the bowels and liver, their popularity was instantaneous. That this popularity has been maintained is well marked in the medal awarded these pills at the World's Fair 1893.

50 Years of Cures.

Wanted Two Offices.

Mayor Pingree of Detroit was last fall elected governor, and up to a few days ago, held both offices. He insisted he had a legal right to this. But the supreme court got after him and made him vacate the office of Mayor, or else resign the governorship. He gave up the mayoralty. The law is the same in Indiana. But United State officers, have often held two positions. For instance, John Marshall, of Virginia, who is said to have molded the constitution of the States into its present form, served in the dual capacity of secretary of state in the cabinet of John Adams and chief justice of the Supreme court of the United States from Jan. 4 to March 4, 1801, and he ought to have known if there was anything wrong about it. Futhermore, John Jay, who was the first chief justice of the Supreme court of the United States, not only held that office and the position of secretary of foreign affairs and simultaneously for six months or more, but served as envoy extraordinary to the court of St. James for a year while he wore the robes of chief justice. Oliver Ellsworth was chief justice of the United States and minister to France at the time, and he was considered a very correct man in his day.

A Timely Friend.

With perfect propriety may we call that excellent remedy, Salvation Oil, a timely friend. This liniment rapidly cures rheumatism, neuralgia and pains, when other remedies fail. Mr. Jno. M. Hall, Ashland, Va., writes: "I suffered with rheumatism in the ankle and the muscles connected therewith. Salvation Oil at once relieved the soreness, reduced the swelling, and cured the pain. No other liniment that I ever used did me so much good."

Free Stop-over at Washington

On all through tickets between the east, west, north and south, reading via Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, a stop-over at Washington can be secured, without extra charge for railroad fare, by depositing the ticket, upon arrival at Washington, with the B. & O. station ticket agent at that point. Washington is always attractive to visitors, and particularly so while Congress is in session. This arrangement for stop-over privilege will doubtless be appreciated by the public, and will bring to the National Capital many travelers to view its superb public buildings, monuments, museums and thorough fares.

THAT FINE QUILT.

The entertairment given at the A. O. U. W. hall Saturday evening by the D. of H. ladies was largely attended and highly enjoyed by all those present. One of the special features was the counting numbers, to see who held the lucky number on that fine silk crazy patch work quilt, which has been hanging in Raut & Co's. store for a while back. We all thought we held the lucky number, but when the final count came, it proved that the quilt belonged to Jay Love, the number being 241. The ladies realized quite a neat little sum of money from the sale of numbers, and the lucky winner has a fine quilt for his 10 cents invested.

MRS.. HEMSTREET.

Old Mrs. Hemstreet, widow of the late Jeremiah Hemstreet died at her home north of Waterloo Wednesday, and was buried at 1 p. m. to-day. She about 81. James Griswold and wife, James McDowell and wife, Mrs. Ward, Mrs. Stroh, Mrs. Kuhlman and the Baptist minister of Garrett, Mr. Pearce, who is now here went, up on the noon train to attend the funeral. Mr. Pearce preaches the sermon, as Mrs. Hemstreet was a member of that church. Mr. Hemstreet died nearly twenty years ago.

There has been a good deal of work done here and there for the past few days, and to-day Dr. Squires, and his attorney, Mr. Orndorff were up from Churubusco to fix up some busines suit he had with Fred Becker. They finally settled it, by Squires taking about half his claim.

It appears that the Smithfield road scraper case was not finally disposed of the other day although the Judge had intimated that he would decide in favor of the township, and this meant that the Austin Scraper Co., would lose their bills. But since then it appears that new evidence has been, found, or claimed to have been found, and another day or two of the case may be expected.

The case over the Corbin estate has been settled by agreement between the present parties to the suit.

The case of Homerick vs Ridenbaugh, from Garrett, has finished the witnesses, and is under advisement with the judge. Homerick had sold his property in Garrett to Ridenbaugh. The latter gave a first mortgage to get money for the payment he made to Homerick, and then gave Homerick a second mortgage for the balauce still due. The case is to straighten out disputed rights in the case. Mountz & Myers, of Garrett are attorneys, for Homerick and McClellan Sharpless for Ridenbaugh.

The case of Edwin Showalter vs Geo. Ellert has been dismissed.

Mary Vogtman was divorced from Eli Vogtman. Hirsch vs Loewenstein on account, resulted in a judgment of $100 for Hirsch, and Charles Voss got judgment for $119.20 against Scaetergood.

This Friday forenoon the grand jury visited and inspected the county jail, and then took a team for the poor farm, which by law, they are also obliged to inspect. The roads are bad and they had a pretty rough trip.

The Smithfield road scraper case started up again this forenoon, and is still going on.

The Smithfield case was given a second hitch yesterday and the final out come, was that the township is not obliged to pay for those scrapers. We presume this is the law, that a trustee must not buy things his township does not need. But it is not clear as to where we can find a man who knows better than does a trustee, what the township really needs. The best thing the taxpayers can do, is to select trustees who will be careful in making bargains, and if his bargains are honestly made, the bills should be honestly paid. In the Smithfield case, some of the citizens we have talked with say new scrapers were greatly needed, and others again say they were not needed in the least. So it goes.

ESTATE DOCKET.

In the M. Wallick estate, the administrator, Lewis Pepper made his final report and was discharged.

Court has adjourned to meet on Monday. The grand jury remained in session till noon when they too, adjourned to meet next Wednesday, probably at one p. m. They seem to be getting their work nearly all done, but it is not safe to predict as to just how long they will have to work.

The indictment of Ex-trustee James Blake, of Smithfield, yesterday and his arrest, was something of a surprise, though such talk had been going about a little. We presume the charge of embezzlement means that he had used the funds of the township improperly.

PROBATE DOCKET.

Orrin Clark, guardian of Mary A. Conner was granted permission to sell certain notes belonging to her.

Wm. Wilson continued two years as guardian of Frank Deardorff.

Margaret Feagler was made guardian of the Silas Feagler heirs.

E. D. Hartman, guardian of Geeting heirs made report and was discharged as to P. I. Geeting but continued as to R. C. Geeting.

J. D. Leighty was continued two years as guardian of Jay M. Shutt.

Cross-Examining.

We are afraid that C. M. Phillips, is unduly excited over the very slight criticism we made about the "lengthened sweetness, long drawn out" of his cross-examination of a witness in the Jenk Lunchford case. Had that case been one of any importance, especially if a human life depended on the conduct of the trial, there would have been no criticism for there would have been no cause for any. But in a trifling case like that, where only a dish of oysters had been taken, and taken too past alldoubt by another man, and where everyone could see that all young Lunchford needed to gain his liberty, was to have the trial come to an end, it was plain that all this circumlocution of questions and answers for half an hour or so, only consumed the time that should have been given to some more important cases. Not a single point was gained in all that examination, unless it might to impress on the audience the idea that ample justice was being done to a big case. But this would be of little benefit to those who had important cases waiting. As to the learned gentleman's farfetched story of ancient Greece, we apprehend the taxpayers are not interested in it. Neither is it likely that anyone cases for so small a matter as what the editor and the attorney know about law. He further says he knew of the case long before we did. Well, we knew of it from the time the lad was arrested. If the attorney knew of it before that and failed to tell what he knew, he is liable to get into the case in a shape other than as an attorney.

SHE GOT THE TATERS.

A funny little occurence enlivened the dull times on West Seventh street Wednesday. One of the good housewives of that popular thoroughfare found a basket of sweet potatoes setting on her front porch, and supposing her husband had ordered them by telephone, considerately "took them in". They were just what she wanted for dinner, and proceeded to cook a tempting dish of them. At dinner the husband remarked his joy at the nice mess of sweet potatoes, when explanations followed, showing he had not heard of them before. Then came the question, Whose were they, and how came they there? All was made plain when Carey Boyer called that evening and not finding his basket on porch made inquiries. He had left them there while he was at school and expected to take them home when school closed. He did take what was left of them.

CLEMENS WOLF.

COURT.

In our reports of yesterday there was an error. We had been informed that the "conspiracy" indictment included eight names, and as we could think of but seven, we consulted a person who was in a situation to know. He gave us the names, and Mr. Moody was the eighth one. We could not understand how Moody could be in the list, but supposing the list correct, published it so. Since then we have learned that there were only seven names, and that Moody was not one of them. His case had nothing to do with the forgery busness. We regret the mistake very much for we publish only what we have reason to believe is correct.

John Krontz obtained a divorce from this wife Ida Krontz, but the latter retains the two children. Gen Blair was plaintiff's attorney.

Wm Lieberenz obtained a judgment for $94 against J. W. Stout and others on note.

John Yarde jr. administrator of the estate of H. N. Coffinberry has been made one of the defendents, in place of Coffinberry, in the suit brought by the state against the bondsmen of Coffinberry.

The case of A. D. Moore vs Lasher came up Wednesday, to-day and a jury was impanneled to try it

T. J. Knisely vs the Butler Mfg. Co. A. G. Jones receiver, was tried before Hon. E. D. Hartman acting as special judge. The receiver was directed to sell for cash to the best bidder the notes and similar assets of said company, not already assigned for payment of claims.

Cal. Chambers was fined $10, and Frank Lahnum and Joe Pfefferl each $20 for violations of liquor laws.

Sherman Edge has voluntarily come into court and plead not guilty to the charge of taking those oysters for which Jenk Lunchford was tried. His mother, Sarah Edge, goes on his bond for $500.

The case of A. D. Moore vs Lasher, was to recover damages for overflowing Moore's land. A tile drain from Lasher's land carried water onto Moore's land so as to flood it and prevent Moore from raising crops, and even from pasturing it. Moore thought this land would have been worth a rental of $10 an acre but for the overflow of water. He had paid $1000 for the forty acres but if it is to be flooded he would take $800. If not flooded it would be worth $1,600. A potato crop had been ruined and Moore thought it should have been 200 bushels worth 35c, per bushel. He was a little mixed in figuring up the profits on his farm making it at times 62 per cent. Rose and Hartman are Moore's attorneys, and McClellan & Garwood are for Lasher It is quite a hot contest and the attorneys make it very interesting.

The case between Krontz and VanAuken came up to-day, and that between Fair and Coffinberry, but too late to do much. The jury are out in the Moore—Lisher case. Fuller reports to-morrow.

In listening to the talk about the water from the big swamp mentioned so often in the Moore-Lisher case. Ex-surveyor J. J. VanAuken was reminded of an old surveyor's record, the earliest in the county, perhaps. It was of about 1844 and the work of the then surveyor Joseph Nodine. One page has the notes of a survey made of a section of land in the big swamp, and a scrawling note on the margin, reads something like this: "This section of land is all tamarac except a small piece, and that is tamarac, too." No. doubt it was literally true in those days. Even in recent years, and with many ditches, it is still somewhat "tamarac." The dry seasons of a few years past, and the great amount of ditching had so far reclaimed it, that quite a number of families had put up tamarac log houses, and were living in them. But when the heavy rains of last June and July came on them, they could hardly get out and in at their farms. And this spring many of them must have suffered some inconvenience.

The attorneys in this case, are all members of church or something or other, and it was a little laughable when one of them after hearing a score or two of times, about the water being dammed up, remarked to some one "This is a sort of a dammed case or a case of dammed water, I don't know which." And another replied. "It seems to be a case of a d——d ditch."

James Provines, one of the original viewers on this particular ditch was asked on the witnesses stand if he was one of the ciphers who went along to see the surveyor do the real work of laying the ditch and assessing damages and benefits. But he insisted that the viewers on this ditch did their own work on their own judgment, and let the surveyor do only his. In fact there were many lively tilts between attorneys, and witnesses all through the case.

$2,000 A MONTH.

Is Sent Away From Auburn To Foreign Life Insurance Companies.

There are a score or more of reasons why money is scarce. But among them one of our citizens advances the idea that too much money goes to the life insurance companies, and therefore necessarily makes the town suffer. A rough estimate has been made, and the large sum of over $2,000 leaves Auburn, monthly. This amount can readily be figured up when we take into consideration that there are near ly a dozen Fraternal Beneficiary Life Insurance Co's. doing business here besides the old line companies. We might also include several accident insurance companies. This is rather a large sum of money to leave our town, and it has been suggested, that a local organization be formed here and keep this money at home and at the same time. those who pay it in would receive, protection for their families in case of death. This subject is one of some importance and should be considered thoroughly by those who are contributing monthly to the large sums which leave our town. The COURIER will be glad to receive further communications concerning the matter.

JOE PFEFFERL FOOLED.

Joe Pfefferl was the victim of a good April fool joke this morning. A telephone message summoned him to the Lake Shore depot stating that a car load of Milwaukee beer was there, and should be unloaded immediately. So Joe flew around and hitched up the big team and with the big driver, Al Umber, flew for the depot. When he was informed that no beer was there, he came to the conclusion that someone had put up a joke on him, and glancing up at the calendar, he noticed that to-day was April 1st.

Mrs Boullion, 222 Crane St. Writes:

Dayton, O., March 12, '96.—'My baby is two months old and from her birth has had severe attacks of wind colic. I tried almost everything, but nothing gave her any relief until I got Dr. Hand's Colic Cure. I have used two bottles and would not do without it. It surely is the best colic medicine ever made." Commissioners.

The Board of Commissioners has been in session the latter part of the week, and will also, be in session the first of the week. Among the things considered this week, was to look after the case of the county against the Coffinberry bondsmen. They also made a very important decision. It was to the effect, that as the law of 1895 took the matter of county printing out of their hands, and put it into the hands of the various officers, they would not this year let any contract for the county printing. This leaves the responsibility with the different officers, and if they choose to run up those enormous bills with Burford, or other foreign houses, and give the cold shoulder to the home printers, the people will know exactly who is doing it. We believe that every penny of this work should be ordered through the home printers, and we also believe that money may be saved to the county after giving the home printer a fair profit. It appears there was a vacancy of one land appraisers in the southeast district, and Mr. Gunsenhouser appointed H. B. Maxwell, of Stafford, for the place. We believe this appointment a good one. Three of these officers are kept in service in each commissioner district, Their duty is to appraise the land of anyone in that district, who wishes to borrow school money. We believe they hold during good behavior, or for life. Free Kelley, in the north district was appointed by the late George Duncan, when he was on the Board about twenty years ago. Monday they expect to either go out to the poor farm, or attend court on the county cases. Tuesday, they meet with the township trustees to inspect their financial condition as required by a new law.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, and Commerce, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

DARING ROBBERY.

Chris Schultz the Victim of a Dastard's Deed.

A daring robbery was committed in the business district of Chicago the other day. A messenger employed by the wholesale woolen firm of Kuh, Nathan & Fisher, was robbed of $3,500 after being beaten into insensibility by two men, one of whom had been sent with the boy to protect him and the firm's money.

The messenger is in the hospital at the point of death. He is Chris Schultz, a 17-year-old lad, who was the trusted messenger of the firm. One of the robbers was Edward Wilson, employed by the firm as a teamster. The other assailant is not known.

Both Schultz and Wilson have been in the employ of Kuh, Nathan & Fisher for several years, and were always sent to the banks together, sometimes with thousands of dollars at a time.

TWENTY-THREE.

Lives Known to Have Been Lost in the Cyclone.

Guthrie (O. T.) special: The list of deaths caused by the cyclone at Chandler, O. T. so far as identifications have been made, now numbers twenty-three.

The details of the cyclone continue to come in and every fresh bit of news furnishes further evidence of the awful fury of the storm. A messenger who arrived from the country southwest of Chandler, reports that many farm houses were demolished there; that two persons were killed and a number of others badly injured. It is reported that the little settlement known as Parkland was completely destroyed and that several persons were injured there.

An Atrocious Crime.

Harry P. Wilson was sentenced to five years in Jackson prison and his wife to seven years' imprisonment at the Detroit House of Correction in the Superior Court at Grand Rapids, Mich. The crime for which the couple were sentenced was one of the most atrocious ever committed in the State. They were convicted of cruelly ill-treating their little 5-year-old adopted daughter, Ada. At the trial it was developed that they had repeatedly resorted to extraordinary means to vent their spite and anger upon the child, even to the use of red hot irons. When the child was taken away from them it was thought she would become a cripple for life on account of the treatment she had received.

Terrific Hail Storm.

A special from Mount Vernon, Mo., says: This vicinity was visited by the most terrific and destructive hail storm ever witnessed here. Hail stones weighing ten and twelve ounces fell in great profusion and with such force and rapidity that not a house in the community escaped more or less injury. The churches, mills, etc., sustained heavy losses. Not only were shingle roofs damaged but the heavy iron roofs of the flouring and planing mills were rendered useless. Stock of all kinds suffered. Fruit and ornamental trees were badly damaged. Immediately following the hail came the heaviest rain storm witnessed here for fifty years or more.

Blown to Pieces.

C. N. Brown, aged 40 years, of Butler, Pa., engaged as an oil well shooter, was blown to pieces by the explosion of a twenty-quart can of nitro-glycerine, which he was putting into an oil well belonging to Griesbach, Marshall & Co. The rig was demolished and a house near by was shattered. Brown leaves a widow and four children.

Explosion in a Colliery.

A dispatch from Zaborze, Prussian Silesia, reports the occurrence of an explosion of fire-damp in a colliery at Borsig, near Zaborze, killing six persons, including the owner of the mine and a chemical expert, who was making some experiments. The fire in the mine is still burning.

Four Men Were Hung Together.

Francisco Gonzales, Y. Borrego, Antonio Gonzales Y. Berrego, Suriano Alarid and Patrico Malencia, condemned to death for the murder of ex-Sheriff Frank Chavez, who was killed from ambush on the night of May 29, 1892, were hanged together on one scaffold at Santa Fe, N. M.

Coffee Down.

The Woolson Spice Company of Toledo, Ohio, have reduced the price of their brand of roasted coffee to 11 cents a pound net. It is expected that the Arbuckles will make a corresponding reduction in order to keep on the same footing in the trade.

Blew Out the Gas.

Jacob Leid of Reading, Pa., telephone lineman, was found dead in his room at the Fetter House Bethlehem, Pa., asphixiated by illuminating gas. Charles Groh, who slept in the same room, was revived, and will recover. It is thought they blew out the gas.

Jealous Husband's Deed.

At Hyden, Ky., Tom Oglethorpe, a farmer, shot and killed Henry Schneider, a farmhand, and committed suicide. He had quarreled with his wife about Schneider.

Death of Wm. T. Adams.

William T. Adams, the well-known writer, who, under the pen name of Oliver Optic, has entertained boy readers for more than a generation, died at his home in Boston, Saturday. He was 75 years of age. He had been ill for some time with heart trouble.

United Press Assigns.

The United Press, having its principal office in New York City, filed in the County Clerk's office an assignment for the benefit of its creditors to Frederick C. Mason. Mr. Mason is the auditor of the corporation. The assignment papers are filed by Charles A. Dana.

PEARY'S LATEST PLAN.

Hopes to Reach the North Pole with Dog Sledges.

Lieut. Peary recently laid a plan for arctic research before the council of the American Geographical Society. The plan includes the reaching of the north pole. It was heartily indorsed by the council and a subscription toward its accomplishment promised. Should either plan succeed the United States will reap the glory. Lieut. Peary's plan, as now matured, is considered by arctic explorers one of the most feasible yet advocated. First of all, it is not to be an expedition in the usual sense of the term. It will, besides Lieut. Peary himself, include only one or two white men. If one, he will be a surgeon, and if two, the other will be a scientist. The party will be conveyed by a chartered whaler to the point on the western coast of Greenland which Peary has so often made his basis of exploration. At this point live a tribe of Eskimos. They form the most northerly settlement of human beings, so far as is known, upon the globe. They know the explorer and have every confidence in him. From them he will select five or six young married couples, and will with them push along the northwest coast of Greenland as far as possible, and perhaps into the archipelago which, it is believed, surrounds the north pole. All their goods, including dogs and sledges, will be taken with them, and when no further progress can be made north they and Lieut. Peary and his companions will be landed at some propitious spot and a new colony formed. The ship will leave a supply of provisions for three or more years and make its way back to civilization before the ice closes in. From this basic point the two or three white men will make their explorations. Lieut. Peary figures that this colony will not be over 360 miles from the pole. The Eskimos will be able to withstand the climate, and he believes they will be contented as long as they have enough food. The women will be taken along to do the cooking and attend to the clothing and footgear. As soon as the ice conditions are propitious an attempt will be made to reach the pole. The Eskimos and their dog sledges will be used if possible, but in any case the white explorers will push on until the Stars and Stripes have been planted near, if not on, the pole itself.

JAP COOLIES RIOT IN HAWAII.

Interpreter Beaten to Death by Sugar Plantation Laborers.

The schooner Transit, arrived from Honolulu, brings the news of a riot among the Japanese coolies employed on the sugar plantation on the island of Maui. Three hundred Japanese beat one of their number to death and afterward beat his body to a pulp with clubs. The murdered man was an interpreter named Kawata. He was accused of wrong-doing in regard to money intrusted to him and for overcharging them for services rendered as interpreter. A number of white men tried to preserve order and save Kawata's life, but they were too few to cope with the crowd and were obliged to flee. As soon as the news of the murder reached Wailulu Sheriffs Scott and Dow, with a number of deputies, visited the plantation, and though many threats were made by the Japanese, four of the ringleaders were arrested and taken to the jail at Wailulu. The coolies planned an assault on the jail, but before the mob reached it the sheriffs were notified and they called upon the Citizens' Guard for assistance. The guard, with a number of armed volunteers, turned out to protect the jail. The Japanese were ordered to return to their plantation immediately, with the alternative of being fired upon within five minutes. They slowly dispersed and went back to their houses, but it is believed had not the strong stand been made the band of coolies would have destroyed the jail and overrun the northern part of Maui.

CYCLONE IN TEXAS.

Austin and Several Villages Suffer Great Damage.

Sunday afternoon Austin, Texas, and the surrounding country was visited by a terrible cyclone. Several large electric light towers were blown down, entailing a loss of several thousand dollars. Quite a number of houses in the residence portion of the city were blown down and in several cases narrow escapes from death are reported. The small town of Clarksville was swept by the wind and many horses were killed by flying debris, while a number of small houses were blown down, though fortunately the inmates were not killed, though several were badly maimed. Reports from the surrounding country are to the effect that the storm was general in this section. The small town of Buda near Austin was badly handled by the storm, quite a number of houses being blown down and one or two persons killed, though their names are not obtainable, owing to the fact that most of the telegraph wires are down and the news is very meager. This is the worst storm that has ever visited that section and it has laid waste everything in its track, though fortunately so far the reports of deaths are few. The storm was over in an hour and the sun came out as bright as if nothing had happened.

Meet Death Instantly.

By an explosion in the east end of the northwest land tunnel at Chicago Tuesday morning two men were instantly killed, four were seriously injured and five others received slight wounds. The scene of the explosion was in the face of the workings 2,400 feet east of the shaft. The dead men were working immediately over the spot where the explosion occurred and they were torn to pieces. The other men, with but one or two exceptions, were working within a few feet of the scene of the explosion. The accident came without warning, and none had a chance to avoid the danger. The men were suddenly lifted from their feet and hurled against the walls of the tunnel. They were blinded by smoke and crushed by falling rock and earth. With the aid of men from the surface the dead and wounded were carried to the shaft and hoisted to the surface. Assistant Engineer H. J. Jackman, who superintends the work for the city, went into the workings after the accident. In the mass of debris he found a stick of giant powder which had failed to explode. This fact leads him to believe unexploded sticks of dynamite caused the explosion, having been ignited by the explosion of one of the electric lights which illuminate the tunnel. Superintendent William Ennis also holds the same theory. Others believe the men exploded the giant powder by striking it with their pickaxes or shovels while at work. Contractor Connell of the firm of Fitz-Simons & Connell, who is in charge of the work, advances the theory that the explosion was due to natural gas. The shock of the explosion was felt for blocks along the lake front, and caused hundreds to hurry to the tunnel. As soon as the fatal result of the accident became known to the workmen in the west tunnel they refused to work longer, and operations on the entire tunnel were at a standstill.

Reception to the Press.

Apropos of President McKinley's inviting the newspaper correspondents to call on him the other day, is a report that next winter he will give six instead of but five state receptions, as has been done heretofore. There will be the receptions to the diplomatic corps, the judiciary, the army and navy, the Congress, the public, and then, by President McKinley's direction, a sixth reception to the press.

Trains in the Snow Drifts.

The Wyoming blizzard continued all Tuesday night. The streets of Cheyenne were all piled full of snow. A dispatch says: All Union Pacific freight trains were abandoned and passenger trains were in a bad plight. The train which left Denver at 4 o'clock became stranded in a big drift half a mile east of the Cheyenne depot. The Overland Flyer stuck in the snow at Hillsdale, twenty miles east of the city, and the east-bound flyer was tied up at Red Buttes, near Laramie, unable to climb Sherman Mountain. The west-bound flyer from Cheyenne was also abandoned. The big rotary plows worked all day and up to midnight, but even these became snowed up and unable to keep the road open. All Colorado is buried under about a foot of snow. The temperature dropped below freezing point and stock on the range will suffer severely.

WATERS RUN WILD.

Great Delta Lands Imperiled by Bad Breaks in the Levee.

The three breaks in the levee on the Mississippi side, all serious ones, have caused consternation in Vicksburg, as the water going through the breaks will inundate a large portion of the great delta, the most valuable of the planting lands in the State. They will, no doubt, cause the overflow of a great part of Bolivar, much of Washington, Issaquena and Sharkey Counties and a portion of Sunflower. The water from the upper break, or Perthshire crevasse, ate through the railroad and covered the plantations to the south. At the middle crevasse the floods from the north joined forces with these waters, and, together, they inundated the country southward, and the united waters from three floodgates, with increasing force and volume, rushed over the country and finally were thrown back into the main river at the mouth of the Yazoo, a few miles north of Vicksburg. If the levee in front of Greenville should break no man can conceive what the loss to life and property would be. Probably 10,000 people worked with a desperation born of despair to save their homes and property. The whole machinery of the State and the Illinois Central Railroad was brought into play.

REFUSES A SAILOR'S RELEASE.

Peru Refuses to Comply with Uncle Sam's Demand.

The issue raised between Peru and the United States with respect to the imprisonment of Ramsay, the American sailor, is becoming a serious matter. The Peruvian Government refuses to accede to the demand of the United States minister, Mr. McKenzie, to set Ramsay immediately at liberty. Ramsay was a member of the crew of the Cambrian Monarch. He was arrested by the Peruvian authorities for alleged disorderly conduct. He was thrown into jail and now has been condemned to a year's imprisonment, though without the slightest formality of legal trial. This action by Peru is in direct conflict with the provisions of article fifteen of the treaty between Peru and the United States.

SHELLS FOR CRETANS.

European Gunboats Open Fire Upon the Christian Forces.

The powers of Europe have again agreed to enforce their demand that the Cretans abandon possession of the disputed ports, and Wednesday H. M. S. Camperdown, with an Austrian and Russian ship, opened a withering fire upon the Christians at Suda Bay, Crete, under cover of which the Turkish forces occupied the disputed position.

Bill Made Retroactive.

Thursday morning the duties imposed by the Dingley tariff bill were in force. The Wilson law is a thing of the past, if the last amendment attached to the Dingley bill before its passage in the House, fixing Thursday as the day on which its provisions should go into effect, should be held to be legal by the courts. The bill has not yet been finally considered in the Senate; but the House made the measure retroactive by adopting the Grosvenor amendment. It is seriously questioned if this will prove constitutional.

Steamfitters Strike.

A strike of the New York steam fitters, in which between 30,000 and 60,000 men may be involved, was declared Monday, when over 1,100 steam fitters refused to go to work in their shops. The strike is the result of a practical lockout on the part of the bosses. The latter announced Saturday that the agreement hitherto existing between themselves and their employes would no longer be considered, and those who wished to report for work must sign new rules. The men refused to sign and so the strike is on.

American Reported Killed.

C. E. Crosby, the Cuba representative of the Chicago Record, is reported killed while watching with field glasses a combat between the Spanish and insurgent forces near Arroya Blanco, close to the boundary of Puerto Principe and Santa Clara.

Major White Dead.

George Q. White, who was a member of the first battery of artillery raised in Illinois, who enlisted in Chicago as early as July 16, 1861, died Monday at his home in St. Paul.

Grover Takes Life Easy.

Grover Cleveland is enjoying private life in his new home in Princeton. He has as yet made no definite plans for the future.
